Dear Mr. Kritzeck:

Many thanks for your letter addressed to Miss Kate Smith which has been referred to the writer for reply.

It was very thoughtful of you to send the plaque for presentation to President Roosevelt but as it was an impersonator who played this part, it was quite impossible to do as you suggest.

I am returning it to you and believe that if you were to forward it to our President at Washington, D.C., he will receive it.

With every good wish to you and your fellow stamp collectors,

It is my duty to inform you that you have been voted as the man who has done the most with stamp collections in times of national emergency.

I have consulted many prominent leaders in all parts of the Western Hemisphere and they all think that it is only fitting and proper to present you with it on your birthday. I have been trying to get your autograph, but, after many weeks of study, I declare it to be ANIMALLY, VEGETABLY, AND MINERALLY IMPOSSIBLE.

Again I take the privilege of sending a little gift which I made up especially for you, on this, your 60th birthday.

If you will plug it, the lamp is ready to light, and as light is a symbol of life, so do I sincerely wish that yours may shine gloriously for a great many more years to come.

Hoping you will enjoy it as much as I did in designing and making it up for you, I am,

Yours very truly,

Thank you for your letter of April twenty-second, with the enclosed statement from the Railway Express Company, referring further to the lamp which you say was forwarded to the President as a birthday gift. However, it will be helpful to us in straightening the matter out if you will be good enough to send us a detailed description of the lamp so that we can identify it, if in fact it has been received here.

Miss Grace Tully

My dear Miss Tully:

Enclosed herewith is a rough sketch of the gift I made up for the President on his sixtieth birthday, which might help you locate same.

The reason I am so anxious for Mr. Roosevelt to have this gift is that I feel that he will get some measure of enjoyment out of it, as well as the knowledge that there are many persons like myself who are grateful for the job that he is doing in these trying times and who wish to show their appreciation in some small way.

Therefore I will feel doubly happy if you advise me of the receipt of the humble gift which I made specially for the President. It is made of solid Walnut, with two bulbs on each side, to symbolize that life should always shine brightly and victoriously for our President long after all our enemies are wiped off the face of the earth. In the center of the stand is a picture of the President, and an inscription.

Please advise if anything that meets this description has been received, and many thanks for all your trouble.

Sincerely yours,

My dear Mr. President and fellow yachtsman :

I take pleasure in sending to you with my compliments one of the etchings I made in 1930 showing the Excalibur slipping down the ways at Camden N. J. It is the identical print on exhibition at the Corcoran Gallery of Art in Washington in 1931.

Mariners have been my specialty and are in most of the Country's museums and galleries. For some time I had intended sending you an example of my work because of your interest in the sea in which I have invested all my personal affections, permitted by my wife!

Since December 7th I have attempted numerous ways to divert my chosen field of endeavor, to the

Out side of the many immediate callings in our Community I am still hopeful that there will be some way in the emergency that our country could use the artistic talent of this Nation in our great Cause. The absence of their immediate need gives us artists pitted for work no little concern.

May God Save your energies, and see all of us enjoy the merits of your, and our cause.

No Pampering for Alsab

Compared to the treatment given Whirlaway by Plain Ben Jones, you'd think Alsab was a common plater. The long-tailed stormy petrel of the track who galloped to the triple crown last spring is pampered like a baby. Strong Dan Barnett, his groom, sees to it that the Derby king gets his balanced daily ration of dry cereals, greens and roughage, gives him his rubdowns, sees that his leg bandages are smooth and comfortable, shields him from visitors and sudden noises, and measures out the prescribed tonics.

Alsab, on the other hand, has a very plain and ordinary diet. No fancy mixtures for the son of Good Goods. He gets twelve quarts of oats and two racks of hay daily, plus carrots, apples, and oranges for vitamins. His one superluxury is orange juice, which he delights in licking off the Sarge's fingers. He greets all visitors with the same friendly nudging nose.

Both Swenke and Al Sabath are calm, solid citizens who have known what losers are and who have not forgotten that you never can tell what lies around the bend of the stretch. Sabath is a substantial corporation counsel, and a veteran race-track official in Chicago. He loves horses and he has always kept a small stable of seven or eight platers of the kind bettors generally lose on in the last race. But he has never known the thrill of standing in the ring at Church-quality in everything, though no sentimentality. The sweep and surge and poetry of the sea is there, the vitality of ships under full sail, the exotic flavor of ports

Kappel Exhibit Of 80 Drypoints Now at Wesleyan

Down at Wesleyan, where they certainly know a good print when they see one, they're giving a show of drypoints by a former Hartford man.

The artist is Philip Kappel, who was born here and went to Hartford Public High and then to Pratt Institute. He now lives in New Milford. Though still in his 30's, he has been around the world eight times, and has made a graphic record of his travels, from the cruise ports of the Caribbean to the temples of the Nile, with special emphasis on water and ships.

There are 80 prints in the exhibition at the Olin Memorial Library in Middletown, lent by the artist and by G. A. Pfeiffer of New York.

Knows His Ropes

Mr. Kappel is well known as an illustrator, and yachtsman and sailors (than whom as critics there are none whicher) say that he has every spar and stay and sheet just right. But he never permits himself to become merely representational. Though the facts are there, they are a means for conveying the spirit of whatever he depicts. There's a romantic quality in everything, though no sentimentality. The sweep and surge and poetry of the sea is there, the vitality of ships under full sail, the exotic flavor of ports drowsing under the hot sun, the charm of little genre scenes, be they in Mexico, Haiti or Gloucester, Mass., the lonely immensity of desert trails and towering mountains.

Art of Drypoint

Though a drypoint is called an etching, the technique differs, for the drypoint is drawn directly on the plate, and the needle produces a so-called burr which gives the line a softness that isn't found in the etching.

The method is peculiarly well adapted to Mr. Kappel's interest in striking contrasts. The majority of the plates glow with light. He has a strong feeling for the medium, and an expert understanding of what to eliminate to throw emphasis onto certain elements in the composition. The composition is always well organized, and always original. Sometimes astonishing effects are obtained with just a few deft touches, as in "Crossed Trails," where the isolation of the prospector and the vanishing pack train are enhanced by the mountains in the background which are suggested with scarcely a dozen strokes. There's nothing satirical in the drawing, but it has a quality that reminds one of Daumier.

Dramatic Quality

Other prints that inevitably attract attention are the strikingly dramatic "Spanish Wall, Cartagena," the delicately lovely street scene of "Barranquilla, Columbia, S. A.," and the tiny "Repairs," one of Mr. Kappel's most famous etchings of which prints are now exceedingly rare.

The artist's ability to give the feeling of water, rushing before the wind, surging ominously, or with reflections in a placid surface, is seen in such pictures as "Running Free, "Scuppers Full" and "The Silhouette."

In certain of the drypoints there is a Japanesque quality, reflecting Mr. Kappel's interest in things oriental. This is felt even more strongly in the two or three aquatints included in the show.

The exhibition will remain until May 30, and may be seen weekdays from 9:30 to 12:30 and 2 to 5, and Sunday from 2 to 5.

Dear Mr. President:

If this letter and enclosed sketch should ever find their way into your hands, as I hope they shall, their meaning to you should be an attempted expression of my deep gratitude to this country and to you, coupled with boundless confidence in a glorious victory, achieved under your superb leadership.

Your birthday, Mr. President, is a day worthy of celebration throughout the entire civilized world, but it means even more than that to me, an Austrian refugee, who has found a new home here and a country worthwhile fighting for.

As I am a sign painter now and working hard in my 56th year, I would feel greatly honored, if the humble birthday gift, which I designed especially for this purpose would graciously be accepted.

May you, Mr. President, enjoy good health and full strength in the difficult times to come for the benefit of all humanity.

God bless you!

Most respectfully yours,

/s/ Erwin Kaufmann,
