What is a Gemmo?

An herbal extract made with embryonic tissues, such as buds, young shoots, bark or rootlets, which are freshly harvested from growing plants. Traditionally used in Europe, these extracts capture unique properties of the plant's early growth stage.

How are Gemmos prepared?

World-renowned for quality and reliability, we take particular care in the preparation of our line of Gemmos. Exclusively from France, the fresh, embryonic plant tissues are identified and harvested at the end of winter or early spring by qualified professional pickers. The places and methods of collection are determined by rigorous specifications defined by Boiron, guaranteeing a high level of traceability.

Quality Control Processes

When the fresh plants arrive at Boiron laboratories, they undergo standardized quality controls and pharmaceutical cGMP to ensure the highest quality.

- Optimal harvesting: Plants are harvested at a key period in their development when they are rich with nutrients, enzymes, and other substances.
- Botanical identification: Each plant species is carefully identified to maintain the integrity of the extract.
- Physico-chemical analysis: We perform detailed analysis to confirm presence of the plant's characteristic components and guarantee its purity.
- Manufacturing: Our process is tailored to the specific conditions in which each plant was grown, considering the natural environment and variable weather conditions. This method ensures consistent quality and reproducibility. The harvested plants are macerated in a glycerin-alcohol mixture to extract and preserve their active ingredients before being filtered. No flavorings or flavor correctors are added in the manufacturing process.

Boiron is the maker of popular homeopathic medicine brands Oscillococcinum®, Arnica® and Camilia®. For more information, visit our consumer site at BoironUSA.com.
