Lettie Bass, Executive Director
Betsey Considine, President

get her address from Ann Bartley

Individuals: Alida Rockefeller (you may have a better address than the Family Office which is already on your list).

2. Questions you might get as a "set-up" by press in Copenhagen if primed by some of the NGO's -- the situation is helped immensely by the announcement of the AID grant which is clearly the example of the Administration's commitment to carry-out its agreements.:

SUBJECT: Re: March 3 Reply

Katy,

I am glad you're getting away this weekend, although I thot you said that you were going to be was it Sat or Sun??? Anyway, I got a few more names for the reception..

1. Nokomis Foundation

Grand Rapods, MI-616-451-0267, Mary Alice Williams

She is a trustee but was the name given to me to invite as the person...also the foundation gives to woman's issues so it should be a good one, even though I have never heard of it..

2. Corporate Foundations

These were given to me as ones that the women of the Lawyer's Committee for Civil Rights is approaching for funding their June pre-Beijing conference and to fund them to go to Beijing. They are considered "softer" as funders for women's issues per se but perhaps inviting them to the reception might softening them up, especially with HRC briefing them..she is sooooo good she might turn them into believers...

AT&T Foundation

Milton Little, 212-841-4662

Sara Lee Foundation

Robin Tryloff, executive director, 312-558-8426

Pepsi-Cola Foundation

Maury Cox, 014-767-7205

When you call, you should check on the spellings of the names as these were on my machine...also if you are pressed for room, the Pepsi-Cola one seemed like the longest shot, but Don Kendall was very interested in Russia for a long time, before it was fashionable. AT&T is specifically very interested in business in China as might be the other two so there might be interest.

Ms. Melanne Verveer
Office of the First Lady
White House
Washington, DC 20500

Dear Ms. Verveer:

In April, I received a letter from Mrs. Clinton about the conference and briefing that was held at the White House in preparation for the United Nations 4th World Conference on Women. In the letter, she regretted I was unable to attend. I found that curious, because I had never been invited.

This mystery was cleared up recently by a mutual friend Bobbie Greene. She inquired about my attendance at the meeting, and told me she had suggested that I be included on the list of attendees.

I would have enjoyed participating, and would be pleased to be included in any other similar meeting.

Sincerely,

Lorraine Barnhart

(Footage of Beijing, Conference)

Narrator:

They came from villages and towns in Africa, high rise buildings in Tokyo, and communities around the United States. Representing countries big and small, women and men gathered in Beijing, China to participate in the United Nations Fourth World Conference on Women.

They shared one goal: to improve the health, education, and well-being of girls, women and families worldwide.

HRC:

Hello, I'm Hillary Rodham Clinton. Last September I was one of some 50,000 women and men who attended the Conference in Beijing. As the honorary chair of the United States delegation, I saw firsthand the commitment and energy delegates from around the world brought to the task of finding ways to improve women's lives.

By gathering in Beijing, we focused world attention on issues that matter most in the lives of girls, women and their families: Access to education, health care, jobs, and credit, the chance to enjoy basic legal and human rights, to live lives free from violence, and to participate fully in the political life of their countries.

These are things many of us in the United States take for granted. When my daughter Chelsea turned five, she went to school, no ifs ands or buts about it. But for girls in some other parts of the world, school or even learning to read is sometimes just a dream.

Imagine not knowing how to read signs on the road or how to sign your name simply because you're a girl. For millions of women and girls around the world, that is reality.

When girls are taught to read, they are better able to contribute to their society. When they are given the respect and guidance that they deserve, girls can help their families, communities, and countries achieve their full potential.

By addressing issues important to women, delegates at the Beijing conference also addressed issues of crucial importance to every family and every nation in the world.

Now let's take a closer look at some of the issues that were highlighted in Beijing.

[LONG PAUSE]

NARRATOR:

Women are more than half of the world's population. Women in developing countries -- especially Africa -- grow at least half of their nation's food. They raise most of the world's children and nurse the elderly. In short, they are the unrecognized backbone of the world economy.

Yet 70 percent of the world's poor are women. Two thirds of those who are not taught to read and write are women.

While they often grow and prepare the food their families eat, women in some countries must wait to eat the leftovers from their husbands and sons and brothers and fathers' meals.

Sometimes, mothers are forced to watch their children die of malnutrition caused by poverty.

In many countries, women and girls don't have a say in the political life of their countries. They are not allowed to own property, borrow money from a bank, or inherit property equally with men.

Women throughout the world, including in America, are paid less for the work they do. There are still many jobs that are not available to women.

And so long as these conditions exist -- as long as women are prevented from realizing their God-given potential -- neither women nor their families will flourish, committees and nations can't flourish either.

Today, through the United Nations, people from all over the world are working hard to make sure that girls and women are treated with the respect and dignity they deserve.

For fifty years, the United Nations has strived to make the world a more peaceful and better place for all people to live. Founded by 51 nations at the end of World War II, the United Nations has helped countries in many parts of the world end and even avoid bloody wars. And through organizations such as UNICEF and The World Health Organization, the United Nations has tried to help the world's developing nations become stronger and more independent.

The UN has consistently recognized the importance of making women full partners in all its projects. Over the years, the UN has played an active role in promoting women's rights and providing a place where all women can voice their concerns.

The Beijing Conference was not the first UN conference to focus exclusively on the status of women; it was the fourth. In 1975, women for the first time gathered in Mexico City for the International Women's Year World Conference. There, delegates agreed to a resolution calling for the end of all discrimination against women and a commitment to promoting a greater awareness of women's issues around the world.

In subsequent meetings in Copenhagen, Denmark and Nairobi, Kenya delegates gathered to evaluate their progress and develop strategies to address problems facing women.

The most recent meeting in Beijing, which attracted world leaders including the Prime Ministers of Norway and Pakistan; and the President of Peru, took the work of previous conferences even further. For the first time, women's issues were recognized as issues that were important to everyone: men and women, boys and girls, small nations and big nations.

GERTRUDE MONGELLA : "There's no going back"

NARRATOR:

At the end of two weeks of debate, delegations from 189 nations approved the Platform for Action. It is a document which outlines strategies for implementing social and policy changes to improve the conditions of women and children.

Too often, women throughout the world are battered by their husbands, their fathers and other family members. Some armies rape women in enemy countries as a tactic of war. The Platform condemns violence against women everywhere -- in the home, on the streets, and in war -- and calls on governments to play a role in preventing and punishing violence.

The Platform also encourages the establishment of innovative banks that will give small loans to women so they can start businesses in poor neighborhoods.

Our own U.S. delegation which was made up of representatives of several different religious traditions - Muslims, Jews, Catholics and Protestants - worked with other countries to recognize and protect the important role religion and spirituality play in the lives of women and their families.

GRO HARLEM BRUNTLAND: "Women will no longer accept being second class citizens."

NARRATOR:

At a parallel conference at Huairou, an hour outside Beijing, 35,000 community activists from private organizations around the world met to exchange ideas and develop specific recommendations for their governments. They organized workshops, seminars and lectures on a variety of women's issues and developed steps that their governments can take.

Americans of all ages and backgrounds -- high school principals from Maryland, nurses from Tennessee, nuns from Pittsburgh -- met their counterparts from all over the world. The streets of Huairou were filled with the colors of the world: Indian women in bright silk saris, Muslim women with dark veils, and delegations of African women wearing fabrics they made especially for the conference.

The Platform for Action is not legally binding, but the nations who approved it have accepted the moral obligation to implement its recommendations. It is a document that many women can use to pressure their governments into changing laws and practices that discriminate against women. It recognizes that any discrimination against women is a violation of human rights.

HILLARY CLINTON : "IF there is one message that echoes forth from this conference, it is that human rights are women's rights...and women's rights are human rights."

NARRATOR:

The conference and the Platform for Action weren't just the work of adults. One third of the delegations sent youth representatives to Beijing. Young people were represented in unprecedented numbers -- more than at any other UN conference in history.

Youth groups from America, including some from Minnesota, Iowa, California and New York also attended the Non-Governmental Organization Conference at Huairou. [footage of youth tent/youth speeches/International Youth Day Sept. 11, 1995]

More than half of the world's population is under 25. That means that most of the "women and girls" we were talking about at the conference were girls just like you.

The voices of young people were heard loud and clear at this conference. Their energy in advocating for better access to education for girls, decent health care and the preservation of the environment impressed and inspired the older delegates.

HRC:

The fourth women's conference was an important milestone for women. Here in the United States, we have made a strong commitment to achieving the goals we set at the conference. The President has established a council at the White House to follow through on the promises made in Beijing.

We are dedicated to ending violence against women, to expanding our political participation, to assuring equal access to education and health care, to strengthening families, and to building strong communities.

What we saw in Beijing was not just another conference and not just a lot of talk. The Beijing Conference was the beginning of a better, brighter future for girls and women. If we follow up as individuals, as schools, as businesses and as governments then we will see those goals come to life. That progress will make the world safer, more prosperous, and more democratic for all people.

I hope you have a sense of the excitement and hope that many of us felt in Beijing. The possibilities for girls and women are truly limitless. You can do your part to make sure these become reality. No matter what your age or position in life, you can learn more about the world around you, share your learning with others and work with each other to make the world a better place.

Together we can create a world in which every woman is treated with respect and dignity, every boy and girl is loved and cared for equally, and every family has the hope of a strong and stable future.
