lockhart got the same question from the press this morning. said he didn't have an estimate (i don't either at this point) but that the cost would be small relative to the benefits of middle east peace. certainly holding the summit at camp david avoids the expense of holding the summit at a commercial conference center, but there are expenses for food, staff etc. a serious accounting will take some time, and of course can't be done until it over. i am very reluctant to push people who are working to support the summit to give me any kind of answer now.

you can avoid making that commitment, particularly if this is just a constituent inquiry, you will make a lot of people happy. it would take some time to pull together all the costs, navy (which runs camp david), white house miloffice, state, etc. plus, i imagine podesta would want to know we were making a commitment to provide this kind of a figure. mara: what do you think?

^BC-MIDEAST-SUMMIT-BARAK URGENT

^Barak preparing to leave Camp David summit-radio

JERUSALEM, July 19 (Reuters) - Israeli Prime Minister Ehud

Barak is preparing to leave the Middle East summit at Camp David, accusing Palestinians of not being a real partner for peace, Israel Radio said on Wednesday.

Reporting from the talks, the radio quoted sources as saying Barak did not intend to stay at Camp David for the extra day provided by U.S. President Bill Clinton's decision to delay a trip to Japan for a Group of Eight summit.

``Prime Minister Ehud Barak is preparing to return to Israel soon from the Camp David talks. Senior sources tell us that he will not wait the full 24 hours which President Clinton had decided to extend the talks," the radio said.

``Barak decided to return to Israel because it became clear to him the Palestinians are not a real partner to peace," it said, quoting the sources.

Barak has been holding talks for more than a week with Palestinian President Yasser Arafat and Clinton to try to reach a peace agreement to end a 52-year-old conflict. Talks have hit problems, particularly over the status of Jerusalem.

^Jerusalem patriarchates want voice at Camp David

JERUSALEM, July 19 (Reuters) - Christian leaders in Jerusalem have said they want their representatives to attend the Camp David talks and any future peace summits as Israelis and Palestinians discuss the status of the holy city.

They made the request in a letter, dated July 17 and sent to Reuters on Wednesday, addressed to U.S. President Bill Clinton, Israeli

Prime Minister Ehud Barak and Palestinian President Yasser Arafat at the summit near Washington.

"...it might be well advisable to have representatives from our three Patriarchates and the Custody of the Holy Land at the Camp David summit meeting as much as at any future (forum) in order to provide continuity and consultation on our future and on our rights..." the letter said.

It was sent by Latin Patriarch Michel Sabbah, Greek Orthodox Patriarch Diodoros I and Armenian Orthodox Patriarch Torkom II.

The letter said the churches wanted to ensure by their presence at summits that the rights of Christians were "maintained unequivocally and safeguarded fully."

As the location of sites sacred to Christians, Moslems and Jews, Jerusalem has been the most sensitive issue to be resolved at the Camp David talks. Barak was preparing to leave the summit on Wednesday after eight days.

The letter urged the leaders to prevent any divisions of the "inseparable" Christian and Armenian quarters in the Old City.

The Church of the Holy Sepulchre, where Christians believe Jesus Christ was crucified, is located in the Old City, as are Judaism's holiest site the Western Wall and the al-Aqsa mosque, Islam's third most sacred shrine.

Israel's annexation of the eastern half of Jerusalem has not been recognised internationally. The Palestinians want sovereignty over East Jerusalem, which Israel captured from Jordan in 1967.

"As you deliberate over those issues that impact the Holy City of Jerusalem, we trust you will not forget or overlook our age-long presence here," the letter said.
