AGRICULTURE

The Secretary will interview with farm broadcasters from around the country today.

COMMERCE

The Secretary will attend the Gore-Chernomyrdin event today.

EDUCATION

The Secretary will meet today with Gen. McCaffrey on safe and drug free schools.

ENERGY

The Secretary will hold a Tuesday press conference on declassification of documents with respects to plutonium. Later in the week they will release a report on preferred alternatives for processing foreign spent fuel.

EPA

The Administrator will interview with The New York Times tomorrow on budget cuts.

HHS

The Secretary will be doing live radio in Minnesota today.

Tomorrow she will hold an event on breast cancer.

HUD

The Secretary will interview with Engineering News Record and AP on public housing.

INTERIOR

Tomorrow the Secretary will meet with the Evangelicals for the Environment.

JUSTICE

The A.G. will be in Oklahoma City at a hearing to determine the venue of the OK City bombing trial.

LABOR

The Secretary met with Mara Liasson on important issues of '96.

He had breakfast this morning with Mort Kondrake and will interview with USA Today on the minimum wage. He will also meet with AP on jobs going overseas.

TRANSPORTATION

The Secretary will participate in an event with the Coast Guard to unveil new technology on global positioning.

FAA Administrator Hinson interviewed with The Washington Times on FAA reform.

FYI: DOT gave us the following: "Congressman Frank Wolf is expected to hold a news conference criticizing DOT subcabinet officials for excessive travel. The response will call the charge politically motivated, countercharge Wolf's ability to abuse travel, focus on our strict standards and to ensure the DOT's annual $22 billion investment in support of the nation's transportation infrastructure is spent wisely -- our emphasis on senior officials getting out into the field to listen to our customers and reviewing projects."

TREASURY

The Secretary is rescheduling the profile piece with the Economist. The Deputy Secretary is testifying on the debt limit.

FEMA

James Lee Witt met in West VA with the governor and state legislator yesterday on flood damage.

I understand that the House Republicans have scheduled Terrorism for House Floor consideration the 2nd week that they get back from their recess -- which would be sometime around the 2nd week in March. They want to make sure they have a bill complete and to the President before the Oklahoma bombing anniversary.

I also understand that they are going to include some Contract on America crime items so that they can force the President to sign it right before the anniversary.

I imagine that they will take this bill to the Floor on a closed rule -- so this would preclude us from getting a vote on Cop Killer Bullets. Depending how the bill ends up, at some point we might want to try for a Motion to Recommit with instructions to add a Cop Killer Bullets amendment.

Actually, the dynamics of this should be very interesting. Are they going to bring this to the Floor w/o the repeal of Assault Weapons? And if they do (which I imagine they would have to), what deal have they struck w/ the barrel-suckers in the House?

Tom,

As mentioned when we spoke briefly at the APT conference last Saturday, I would like to meet with you to discuss the new Endowment access, training, and Web site projects described below.

I have taken my cues for developing these projects from early Administration position statements and documents, and have had helpful input and encouragement from several individuals, including Larry Brandt, Bill Miller, Joe Hardin, Jock Gill and Michael Strait.

Now that we have taken action steps here at the NEA, I would appreciate feedback and comments on what kinds of next steps you think we should be considering for the future.

I know you are very busy and will appreciate any time you can spare.

Thanks

Arthur

Arts Endowment to foster Net Access & Training, launch new Website

The National Endowment for the Arts is starting up three leadership initiatives in March to extend its public outreach and serve the arts more effectively through telecommunications. The initiatives will:

A.) Establish a nation-wide network including more than 100 points of access to the Internet. These public access sites will be located in arts organizations and culturally-oriented community centers in every state and territory. Local residents without other access to the Internet will receive personal assistance allowing them to learn how to browse the Web and discover the vast universe of cultural resources available through the World Wide Web.

Staff members at each site will also provide useful information about regional and local arts activities both on and off the Net. The access sites will also introduce visitors to other noncommercial community-based telecommunications applications, e.g. in education, health care, and library services.

The project is designed to pilot the notion of a nation-wide cultural public access network. All network sites will share a common Web homepage to emphasize cultural interconnectedness and to facilitate resource-sharing. Beginning with a leader group of about 25 sites to be activated by early summer, the remaining first-year sites should all be online by spring, 1997.

B.) Develop a hub-and-spoke community Web mentoring effort to speed the movement of arts community members onto the Information Superhighway as producers of content and information.

Ten institutions with existing telecommunications resources (e.g. Universities, freenets, community telecommunications centers) across the country will be identified to serve as mentors to ten local cultural organizations and ten local artists, teaching them how to build and maintain their own Websites. The mentor institutions will also provide Web host services for the trainees' sites as a learning venue for one year at no cost.

The trainees will commit to an "each one teach one" responsibility; all of them will share their learning experience with another organization or artist within a year of completing their own training. By the autumn of 1997 this program will generate internet presence for 200 arts organizations and artists with 200 more in training.

C.) Launch the Endowment's new World Wide Web site. Intended to become a major clearinghouse for arts information, it will consist of three primary sections:

The first section, "arts.community," will be a hyperlinked magazine written for the general public and offer a changing variety of articles on the arts. In addition to regular features - e.g. highlighting a thriving cultural infrastructure supporting the arts in a different town each month, and a story about an exemplary artist - each edition will include additional articles about the arts or cultural issues. The inaugural issue, for example, includes the story of community design efforts to guide the rebuilding in Oklahoma City after last year's bombing.

"Guide to the Endowment" will present agency funding guidelines, application instructions, staff directories, descriptions of Endowment partnerships with other federal, state, and regional agencies, and information about the agency's programs and structure. We anticipate that an electronic application process for grants and official correspondence with grantees will be available within the year.

The "Arts Resource Center" will include: links to arts service organizations and other key starting points for arts searches on the Web, an illustrated online Endowment Bookstore and Library (containing vast stores of material unique to the Endowment and not available elsewhere), previous months' "arts.community," and, by summer, moderated interactive forums. Links to international cultural resources will be included in this section.

PARTNERSHIPS

The Internet public access and community Web mentoring projects are being funded through a $500,000 matching funds cooperative agreement with the Benton Foundation. The Endowment Website is being guided by an interdepartmental staff team in conjunction with the agency's Office of Policy, Research and Technology, and being created in-house by the Endowment's Communications Office. Potomac Interactive Corporation has been contracted to provide technical oversight and host services for the Website.

Chuck and Mark,

Someone from the Library of Congress' budget office just called me to ask if he could get a copy of a report entitled something like "Risk Management Plan: Vulnerabilities, Priorities, and Federal Guidelines".

He had heard that it released by the OMB a few months after the Oklahoma City bombing. I don't think that anyone in the OMB knows enough about such issues to issue a report on it. Do you have any idea what he may be thinking of?

(House R

H.R. 2703 -- Effective Death Penalty and Antiterrorism Act
(Hyde (R) IL and three cosponsors)

The Administration welcomes long

-awaited action by the House of Representatives to pass a major counterterrorism bill. Both the Executive and Legislative branches must ensure that adequate legal tools and resources are available to protect our Nation and its people against threats to their safety and well

-being. The tragic bombing of the Murrah Federal Building in Oklahoma City on April 19, 1995, the most egregious in a disturbing trend of recent terrorist attacks in the United States, highlights the need to enhance the Federal Government's ability to investigate, prosecute, and punish terrorist activity.

Several key principles and goals should govern consideration of any such antiterrorism legislation. First, we must protect American lives without sacrificing cherished American rights and freedoms. Second, we must give law enforcement the tools it needs to do the job. Third, we must ensure that terrorists are barred from this country. Fourth, we must take steps to prevent terrorists from obtaining funds and other forms of material support in the United States.

President's Antiterrorism Proposals

To that end, the President has transmitted to the Congress
two comprehensive legislative proposals: The "Omnibus
Counterterrorism Act of 1995" and the "Antiterrorism Amendments Act of 1995." These combined proposals respond forcefully to the challenges of domestic and international terrorism. They include, among others, the following provisions:

-- Federal criminal jurisdiction for any international terrorist attack in the United States as well as for terrorists who use the United States as a base from which to plan activities overseas.

-- A mechanism to deport alien terrorists expeditiously and fairly, but without risking disclosure of national security information and sources.

-- A workable means of preventing fundraising in the United States that supports international terrorism overseas.

-- A means of gaining access to credit reports in antiterrorism cases in the same manner as banking records are available under current legal procedures.

-- Authority to use the national security letter process to obtain records in terrorism investigations from hotels, motels, common carriers, and storage and rental facilities.

-- Implementation of the Plastic Explosives Convention that requires chemicals to be added in plastic explosives to permit their detection and will enable us to avoid future incidents like the tragic destruction of Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie, Scotland.

-- Requirement of inclusion of microscopic taggants in explosives for tracing purposes.

-- Expansion of the authority of law enforcement to use electronic surveillance by: expanding the list of felonies that could be used as the basis for court-ordered surveillance; applying the same standard in national security cases as is currently used in routine criminal cases for open registers and trap and trace devices; and authorizing multiple point wiretaps to enable law enforcement to move with a terrorist suspect as he moves from phone to phone.

-- A new Federal offense for the unauthorized use of chemical weapons in solid and liquid form.

-- A new Federal offense for the knowing possession of stolen explosives; enhanced penalties for transfer of firearms or explosives knowing they will be used in a crime of violence and for terrorist attacks against Federal employees and their families; and extension of the statute of limitations for certain firearms offenses.
The Provisions of H.R. 2703

Many of the provisions proposed by the Administration are included in the last available version of H. R. 2703 in the same or similar form. Several provisions, however, require modification -- in some cases substantially -- in order to ensure their effectiveness in combating terrorism.

These provisions include, but are not limited to, those involving: jurisdiction over international terrorism; terrorist fundraising; judicial review of U.S. Embassy Consular decisions to reject visa applications on the basis of membership in a terrorist fundraising organization; alien terrorist exclusion and removal and other immigration

-related provisions; use of pen registers, trap and trace devices, and business records in counterintelligence investigations; and disclosure of credit reports. The Administration hopes to work with the conference committee to improve these provisions. Moreover, the Administration opposes provisions exempting certain businesses from anti

-discrimination requirements of the Immigration and Nationality Act and, in their current form, advising the President to negotiate bilateral prisoner transfer treaties and requiring interior repatriation of certain illegal entrants. The Administration strongly opposes the bill's provision that would amend the Foreign Sovereign Immunity Act to permit additional civil action against foreign governments.

In addition, the bill regrettably fails to incorporate other important provisions proposed by the Administration, including: enhanced authority for electronic surveillance; requirements that taggants be included in standard explosives; and others. The Administration hopes to work with the conference committee to include many of these provisions in the final bill.

Amendments to H.R. 2703

The Administration urges consideration by the House of two counterterrorism provisions recently transmitted to the Congress regarding biological weapons and authority to provide additional assistance to the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing and their families.

The Administration also notes that a number of amendments filed with the Rules Committee would, if made in order and passed, seriously undermine the ability of law enforcement to investigate and prosecute terrorism and other violent Federal crimes.

Finally, H.R. 2703 contains provisions to reform Federal habeas corpus procedures. The Administration has consistently and strongly supported habeas corpus reform in order to assure that criminal offenders receive swift and certain punishment. Indeed, the Administration believes that the bill could be improved to provide additional guarantees that offenders have only "one bite at the apple" and complete the process even more expeditiously. These further limitations should be accompanied by necessary changes in the scope of review afforded to such petitions: H.R. 2703 would establish a standard of review for Federal courts on constitutional issues that is excessively narrow and subject to potentially meritorious constitutional challenge. To achieve the twin goals of finality and fairness, H.R. 2703 should be amended to shorten the duration and reduce the number of reviews for each criminal conviction while preserving the full scope of habeas review so that it can continue to serve its historic function as the last protection against wrongful conviction. The Administration hopes to work with the House and the conferees to achieve these ends.

This Administration is committed to fashioning a strong and effective response to terrorist activity that also preserves our civil liberties. In combating terrorism, we must not sacrifice the guarantees of the Bill of Rights and we will not do so. The Executive and Legislative branches must work together to ensure that we utilize every available means at our disposal to prevent, investigate, and prosecute terrorist acts that threaten American lives.

-HR 2703 -- The Effective Death Penalty & Public Safety Act

House bill passed 239:191 -- 3/14/96. Senate bill passed 91:8, 6/5/95. (Key votes attached)

Summary of Issues

? HR 2703 -- the "Hyde Bill" -- is the final version of bill responding to the Oklahoma bombing and to the Administration's subsequent antiterrorism proposals. Key facets: Title 8 incorporates Victim Restitution Act, which ensures criminals pay damages to victims; Title 9 places time limit on habeas appeals, restricts federal prisoners to one habeas appeal, and raises the standard to be applied on appeal; Title 1 expands and extends many provisions of federal criminal law to reach acts of terrorism.

? Barr (R)

-GA) amendment deletes, among others: (a) study of ammunition capable of penetrating body armor; (b) disclosure of certain records to FBI; (c) section allowing wiretapping obtained in "good faith"; (d) provision allowing Exec.
Branch to "brand" organizations as terrorist. 48 cosponsors as of 3/8/96.

? Conyers (D)

-MI) and Nadler (D)

-NY) substitute deletes, among others, provisions: (a) expanding authority of federal agents, including expansion of FBI powers; (b) allowing deportation of aliens who are members of "terrorist" organizations and changing immigration laws in other ways;
(c) reforming habeas corpus laws by shortening time limits and limiting number of habeas petitions. The substitute creates the crime of terrorism against children. In other respects the substitute is the same as the Hyde bill.

? Watt (D)

-NC)/Chenoweth (R

-ID) amendment would have deleted habeas provisions, but was defeated.

? Our SAP (released 3/12) agrees with many provisions of 2703 but calls for following modifications, among others: (a) enhanced authority for electronic surveillance, including emergency wiretap authority for the Attorney General in cases involving terrorism; (b) inclusion of taggants in all explosives; (c) shorten number and duration of habeas reviews but retain scope of the review.

? Senate bill (S735) passed 91:8 in June 1995, and was far less expansive, addressing only antiterrorist measures -- except that it included habeas restrictions. The President supported it.

Legislative Analysis

I have a typed draft of the Oklahoma City proc. on my desk, but am unclear on a few things:

-- What should the title be? I spoke with Megan Williams, and she suggested "National Day of Remembrance to Mark the One Year Anniversary of the Oklahoma City Bombing." I had first written "...Remembrance of the Victims..." but she pointed out that the event is more all-encompassing and recognizes survivors, families, rescue people, etc.

-- When the President calls for a moment of silence at the end of the proc., is it for a specific time? I understand that in the videotape he said something like, "I have called, by proclamation, for a moment of silence," and didn't mention any time, but Terry Edmonds told me that the silence was going to be at 9:02 a.m., Central Standard Time. What should be in the proc.?

Thanks.

Ms. Terzano,

My name is Chris Casteel and I'm the Washington correspondent for the Daily Oklahoman, the Oklahoma City paper. I am planning to go back to Oklahoma City for the president's trip on April 5.

I'd very much like to interview the president before the trip to discuss the year since the Oklahoma City bombing, his reasons for wanting to return to the city, the anti-terrorism bill, whether he thinks people have toned down anti-government rhetoric since the tragedy, etc.

Also, could you please do whatever you can, or tell me what I need to do, to ensure I -- and a Daily Oklahoman photographer -- will be part of whatever pool coverage there is?

My number in Washington is 662-7543, fax is 662-7548 and e-mail address is VFTG64A@prodigy.com.

Thank you very much,

DRAFT 4/2/96

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON

STATEMENT AT CEREMONY

FOR YMCA DAY

-CARE CENTER

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLAHOMA

APRIL 5, 1996

Acknowledgments: Mayor Ron Norick; Lt. Governor Mary Fallin.

Any parent can imagine that the most unbearable feeling is the sudden knowledge that a disaster has befallen the place where you hugged your child goodbye that morning.

Almost a year ago, that feeling swept over parents in this city. And despite the passing of time, there is nothing we can do to erase the terror they must have felt. Nothing we can do to bring back the children whose lives were torn from us 100 feet from here. Nothing we can do to sweep away the frightening memory that lingers in the minds of the children who, with God's help, were spared, but who sat in this building and heard the blast and felt the exploding of glass. There is no way -- as parents, as a community, as a country -- to understand the true evil that deliberately set in motion this shattering of lives.

Though we cannot comprehend the incomprehensible, we can show our children that in the wake of evil, goodness will surround them, and lift them up. We can prove to them that genuine compassion and simple generosity will always prevail over hate and division -- like this tree, which withstood the bomb's blast while larger buildings crumbled. Its leaves were blasted off. Its bark was scarred with shrapnel, but it survived. And now it's about to bloom.

In creating this YMCA day

-care center, you are doing the best parents and communities can do anywhere. You are reminding your children of the resilience of the human spirit. You are also showing them that as parents we will stand at the door, always, to build and rebuild safe places to sustain and nurture their new lives.

Sometimes society forgets how important it is for children to have a safe place to finger

-paint or to pester a teacher to read them a story for the fifth time that day. Yet you and I know that these places are some of the most important on Earth. For in them, our children learn the values that have stood us so well for so long: to build, to work together, to treat others with tolerance and respect.

By rebuilding a place for our children to learn these essential lessons, you -- as parents, as citizens, as business people, as public servants -- are engaged in the most honorable task a nation can call for. And I thank you.

Today is Good Friday -- a day that for many people marks the dawning of miracles. In Oklahoma City, a million miracles have already dawned. And this is one of them.

Thank you and God bless you.

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON

MEETING WITH OKLAHOMA CITY SCHOLARSHIP FUND COMMITTEE

OKLAHOMA CENTRAL UNIVERSITY

APRIL 5, 1996

? Thank you, Governor Nigh. I'm pleased to have this opportunity to meet with you.

? Today is a difficult day for all of us, as we remember the 168 Americans who were killed in the terrible bombing one year ago. It is also especially difficult for many of us, because we are also mourning 35 people, including my dear friend Commerce Secretary Ron Brown, who were killed in a tragic plane crash earlier this week.

? Everyone who died was killed while performing their jobs -- doing what they believed in -- and giving something back to their country.

? In mourning our losses, it is important that we look at what Oklahoma City and this country have done to rebuild not only their city but also their faith in humanity.

? This scholarship fund is a very vivid example of the nation coming together to support the people of Oklahoma City. In less than a year, this community has almost reached the goal of raising ten million dollars in scholarship money for the 185 children whose lives were changed forever last April 19.

? But it is the stories behind the money raised, that touch our hearts and give us hope. We hear of young children sending in their $2 allowances. Boy Scouts holding car washes. Communities setting up bake sales. This is the part of America that makes us great.

? I have learned many lessons since I became President. But the most important thing I have learned in the last three years is that our country must worktogether to face our challenges. When we are divided, we defeat ourselves, when we are together, we always win.

? I want to thank each of you for all of your work on this Committee. And I'd like to ask for your continued support of this Committee in the final push to meet our goal.

million people in 46 states. You spoke at NRECA's 47th Annual Meeting in 1987.

The fifth video is for Richard Arnold's 60th Birthday. This video will be played at Richard Arnold's surprise birthday party at Trapnall Hall in Little Rock on March 30. Richard's wife, Kay, asked that you do this message. She has also received congratulatory letters from Justice Sandra Day O'Connor and members of the Supreme Court, a video message from Sen. Bumpers and others.

The sixth video is a Congratulatory message for Jim Blair. Jim Blair will be honored April 13 with the University of Arkansas Chancellor's Medal. The Chancellor's Medal is given to individuals to acknowledgement of their contributions to the community, dedication to U of A and accomplishments in their field. The award will be given at the Annual Chancellor's Society Dinner at the Fayetteville Hilton next month.

OWith AM-Clinton-Oklahoma City, Bjt

President Clinton's proclamation declaring April 19 as a national day of remembrance for the Oklahoma City bombing:

On the morning of April 19, 1995, America was devastated by news of an explosion at the Alfred P. Murrah federal building in Oklahoma City. As rescuers rushed to the scene, citizens across the country waited by their televisions and radios for information, and we prayed for the children, federal workers and many others caught by the bomb's deadly blast. Despite heroic efforts of emergency personnel and countless samaritans, 168 people lost their lives as a result of the brutal attack.

For a year we have mourned the dead, aided the residents of Oklahoma City in their struggle to rebuild and strengthened our resolve to fight terrorism. And though it has been a sad and challenging time, the outpouring of love and support for those affected by the tragedy has helped our nation to come together in common purpose.

As we mark the first anniversary of the bombing, we remember the victims and honor their memory with a moment of silence. In prayer and quiet reflection, let us move forward together to foster peace in our land.

Now, therefore, I, William J. Clinton, president of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim Friday, April 19, 1996, as a National Day of Remembrance of the Oklahoma City Bombing. I ask all the people of the United States to observe a moment of silence on that day at 9:02 a.m., Central Daylight Time, gathering with family, friends, neighbors, and colleagues at home, at work, and in place of worship to commemorate this solemn occasion.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this fifth day of April, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety-six, and of the independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twentieth.

Signed: William J. Clinton

Russ-

I've just sat down at my desk on this foggy Monday morning to find your message on the anti-terrorism bill. I agree that the Republican who made that statement about the Hamas was out of line, but you can't you use that one pig-headed statement as proof that the Republicans are beholden to extremists. No offense to Hyde, but the anti-terrorism legislation, which I had the opportunity to look at closely during the summer and fall, was a serious infringement on our civil liberties. This legislation is the result of a knee-jerk reaction from the Oklahoma City bombing so that politicians on both sides can look tough on crime. In fact, the FBI already has more than enough power to do their job effectively--one only needs to look at how quickly they apprehended Timothy McVeigh.

If you are interested in controlling the militia movement perhaps you should address their primary problems with the government, instead of trying to further suppress them. You only fan the flames of their discontent by giving the federal government MORE power to intrude into their lives. Greater access to wire-tapping will do little to prevent terrorism, but it will sure be effective in stripping my constitutional liberties. History has shown time and again that as governments are given more power they become more capable of abusing that power. Lets be careful we don't repeat this mistake.

"The moment someone is willing to forego just a little bit of liberty for security, he deserves neither liberty nor security." F.A. Hayek

Please approve/edit this draft to the members of the OK City Scholarship Advisory Board. We will add a "good to see you" line for any boardmembers who saw POTUS and FLOTUS last week. (NOTE: all the boardmembers got a "thanks for agreeing to serve" letter last year.)

I want to thank you again for your service on the President's Oklahoma City Scholarship Fund Advisory Board.

The money raised will be an invaluable help to the families whose lives were tragically changed by the bombing, and I am grateful for your commitment to achieving the Board's goals. During our recent visit, Hillary and I were deeply moved by the courage that has united the Oklahoma City community over the past year. We send our heartfelt thanks and best wishes.

Message Creation Date was at 16-APR-1996 19:27:00

This afternoon, we heard from our OK City Lead Advance and City Councilman Mark Schwartz (our contact in OK) that there was a small, but growing sentiment amongst several (@ 25) people who were upset that the Gores would be participating in the processional walk. These people contacted Lee Ann Jenkins, Director of the FEB (Federal Executive Board) which is the association that serves as the umbrella group for all of the OK federal agencies. The people concerned about the Gores attendance were federal emp loyees who were in the Murrah building at the time of the bombing.

After talking to several people, we were able to ascertain that there were people who were uncomfortable with the Gores walking. Mark Schwartz felt that while he vetted and floated the ideas with many of the families, maybe it wasn't as large a group as it should have been when making this decision. The recommendation from OK was that we not do the walk.

Needless to say, we have made the decision to cut the walk from our schedule.

I think you would all agree that the last thing we want to do is appear to be opportunistic, or intrusive in a grieving process and day that is so painful to so many people. I also think that if we did do this, and ended up with several angry or upset people, it could reflect extremely poorly on the Gores.

Regarding the schedule, we will go back to observing a moment of silence on the plane, doing a meeting with federal workers, doing the memorial service, stopping by the Murrah site, and departing.

Thanks

TEXT:

So, I've just set up Pointcast, and meandered into the entertainment section, to find one of the "quotes of the day:"

"Isn't it a concern that anybody, anywhere in the world, can pull down off the Internet the information about how to build a bomb like the bomb that blew up the Federal Building in Oklahoma City?"

- President Bill Clinton

I presume he said this in context of the antiterrorism bill, and in light of tomorrow being the first anniversary of the OKC bombing. Guys, could you please talk to the speechwriters? I was appalled to hear Feinstein's take on free speech and the dangers of the Internet at the Specter "bomb making info on the Internet" hearing of last year, but to have Clinton making casual comments that gloss over a far deeper core issue--if you want to have free speech, you've got to tolerate free speech--and to suck the Internet in as aider and abettor of fear, uncertainty and dread, well...

To say what he says (unless it's a rhetorical question looking for "not really" as the answer) is to assert both an interest in a more heavy-handed approach of prior restraint on speech in general, and a deep fear of this new communications medium. But I suspect if I give it a few days and a different venue, say next Monday's session at Commerce on the GII, I'll hear, "Isn't it a miracle that anybody, anywhere in the world, can pull down off the Internet the information about how to build a democracy like the democracy that has made America the greatest nation on Earth?"

Arkansas

Followers of Ross Perot have amended a federal lawsuit seeking to force the Secretary of State Sharon Priest to certify his Reform Party in Arkansas on civil rights grounds. The amended complaint asks a judge to order Priest to certify the Reform Party, to declare state election laws on forming a new political party unconstitutional and to allow the party to hold primaries or a convention to nominate candidates for local, state and federal offices. Alternatively, it asks that Priest be ordered to give organizers 30 days to gather enough signatures to be certified to field candidates in Arkansas. The initial suit came after Priest refused to certify the party after determining that supporters failed to turn in the required 21,505 signatures of registered voters last January.

State by State

Arkansas

Attorney General Winston Bryant (D) forgot the name of one of his opponents for the Democratic nomination for the U.S. Senate during a forum. Jonesboro lawyer Bill Bristow attacked Bryant verbally and Bryant responded: "First of all, let me respond to the allegations by Bill Bridgforth." William Bridgforth is a Pine Bluff attorney. Bristow quickly said, "I'm sorry. It's Bill Bristow, it's not Bill Bridgforth. I hope by the time the campaign is over, you know who I am..."

Florida

State leaders are scrambling to figure out how to deal with the ruling yesterday by three federal judges that threw out Rep. Corrine Brown's district as unconstitutional. The Court said it was not turning back the clock on the gains made by African American voters. Yet it decided by a 2

-1 margin that

Brown's district, which is shaped like a horseshoe running from Orlando to Jacksonville, stretched the limits of Constitutional tolerance. The court left open how much of the map can be redrawn. The ruling throws the legislative session, which is supposed to end May 3, into disarray. The Republican leadership declared today that the ruling means that the governor loses his role in the process -- meaning he doesn't have veto power over any new legislative plans. The governor is developing his position on redistricting, although it's unlikely he will cede his veto power. A new plan is due May 22. The leadership of both houses want to deal with reapportionment after the legislative session, but it will be very hard to stop discussion of it. In the meantime the legislature will need to extend the qualifying period for candidates, which ends May 10. The primary is in September.

Georgia

The three

-judge panel handling the redistricting issue in Georgia formally said yesterday that qualifying for General Assembly seats will be postponed until early May. The judges will plan to redraw 10

-25 state House and Senate districts and will reveal the illegal districts in a formal ruling next Tuesday. Qualifying for other races, such as Congress and U.S. Senate, will be held next week as scheduled. State election officials have said each additional primary election would cost the state $1.5 million and they hope that this issue will be resolved in time for the July 9 primary.

The annual "Freaknik" party is scheduled to be in Atlanta this weekend. What started as an annual party born in the mid

-1980's as a low

-key picnic in a city park, attended by a few hundred students from Atlanta's six historically black colleges, has now turned into a party that attracts hundreds of thousands of black college students from around the country. Atlanta residents are not especially happy to play host to thousands of these rowdy students which has caused some racial tensions. Atlanta is not welcoming Freaknik. Organizers have filed lawsuits over the city's insistence on insurance at various public parks. Mayor Campbell did not so much attempt to curtail Freaknik, as to distance himself and the city government from it. He has repeatedly said the city was "not in the party business." This has met some criticism from other members of the black community who are disappointed that Atlanta will open its arms to the world for the Olympics, but not for 200,000 black students. Campbell has been accused of using language that would never be used to welcome a Shriners convention. Originally six concerts were planned for this weekend, and now there are only two. The most controversial of venues was the attempt by promoter Steven Muhammad, an organizer for the Million Man March and a member of the Nation of Islam, to stage a concert at Grant Park. It was rumored that Louis Farrakhan would address students at the concert, but the city has revoked an initial permit since Muhammad did not get insurance coverage for the event. In addition, Black Entertainment Television and the DNC plans for a voter registration drive during Freaknik have been canceled.

Kentucky

According to a report released Monday, Governor Larry Forgy (R) overspent on the state's $1.8 million spending limit during his gubernatorial campaign. His campaign attorney said Forgy exceeded the limit by less than $10,000 but the report from the Registry of Election Finance does not reflect a $9,000 refund on media buys the campaign received. An unresolved issue is whether the county GOP committees and third parties, who spent more than $16,000 on GOTV efforts, should be charged to the Forgy campaign. The Kentucky Democratic party is considering filing a suit against the Republicans over this issue.

Louisiana

This Saturday's race for state party chair continues to get ugly. Jim Nickel's opponent, Linda Day, an employee of Attorney General Ieyoub, has the support of Congressmen Jefferson and Fields, who are actively working the phones to gather support for her. Insiders have said that it will be a very close race. Nickel has said if he loses he will go to work for Senator Breaux, and the two of them would become "National Democrats" and not stay involved in state politics. Regardless of the outcome, many believe this race will have affect on the fall elections.

Oklahoma

Democratic State Party CEO Pat Hall, whose wife is a surviving victim of the Oklahoma City bombing, issued a press

criticizing Governor Frank Keating and the state's Congressional delegation of not championing the President's Anti ashamed that the governor and some of our Congressional delegation have been so callous as to put partisan politics over the needs of all Americans, especially those Oklahomans who have suffered so greatly from this criminal act." He told them it's time to stop foot dragging and pass the President's legislation.

North Carolina

Senator Jesse Helms has pulled one of his negative television ads and fired the top aide who produced it. The ad tried to link Harvey Gantt and Charlie Sanders to racial quotas and health benefits for homosexuals. The Sanders campaign was quick to take credit for the yanking of the Helms ad. Sanders has been airing a reply that says Helms' has used "mean mudslinging tactics to win his past four elections."

Charlie Sanders also made public his 1995 tax returns and challenged both Helms and Gantt to do the same.

We have heard from Governor Hunt's office about how pleased they were over the Vice President's recent visit to Raleigh and Chapel Hill.
Texas

Victor Morales, who has missed three FEC filing deadlines, says he has raised $30,000 in the last three weeks or so. Sen. Phil Gramm reported having $3.08 million on hand as of March 31.

As we discussed earlier, I am sending info on Malcolm Hoenlein, who spoke with the POTUS last year and encouraged him to support anti-terrorism legislation during the Oklahoma City bombing aftermath. Hoenlein did attend the bill signing here last month. You suggested sending him a redline version of the bill, with a thank you note from the POTUS, since all of the ceremonial pens have been distributed already.

Please let me know what will be possible, and whether you need more information in order to have someone draft a note. Thanks, Jen Miller (6-9056)

Presidential

Alabama

President Clinton's re

-election campaign opened its Alabama headquarters on Wednesday. Party Chairman Joe Turnham expects Alabamians to respond favorably, noting that "Bill Clinton's values reflect Alabama's values."

State By State

Alabama

A recent poll conducted by the Birmingham Post

-Herald reports that 23% of Alabamians view crime and gang violence as the biggest problem facing the state and the nation today. The second most pressing issue was the decline of religious values and public morality.

Arkansas

Lt. Governor Mike Huckabee has stated that he will decide today whether or not to fill the remaining 2 1/2 years of Governor Tucker's term, in order to concentrate on his Senate bid. House Speaker Bobby Hogue (D) has stated that this might be the catalyst the Democratic Party needed to reestablish its grass roots and build from the bottom up.

Lt. Governor Mike Huckabee has scheduled a 6 p.m. (CST) press conference today and is expected to pull out of the Senate race. It is likely he will fill the unexpired term of Governor Tucker. When Huckabee takes office as Governor, which will happen on or before July 15, he has 90 days to call for a special election to fill the unexpired term of Lt. Governor. This means that a special election will take place prior to the November general election. Arkansas state law does not allow a sitting member of the state legislature to run for another state office -- and they can not resign to run for another office. The favorite of the GOP, state Senator Jim Keet, will not be able to run for Lt. Governor, because of the state law. People have speculated that Jonesboro lawyer Bill Bristow (D) (who ran in the Democratic primary for the Senate), Little Rock attorney Nate Coulter (D), Little Rock attorney Mark Pryor (D) son of the retiring Senator, and Little Rock Mayor Jim Daley (D) will run in the special election for Lt. Governor. On the Republican side, Winthrop Paul Rockefeller (son of the former Governor), former state Senator Steve Luelf, and former U.S. Attorney Chuck Banks have all been mentioned as possible candidates. Former Congressman Tommy Robinson (R), who lost in the 1990 GOP Gubernatorial primary, is apparently interested in running for Lt. Governor as an independent.

Congressman Tim Hutchinson is expected to receive the Republican nomination, at a special convention, for the U.S. Senate race. His brother Asa Hutchinson, is likely to receive the nomination for the Congressional seat and run in the 3rd District.

If Attorney General Winston Bryant wins the Senate race in November, Huckabee will get to appoint a successor to fill the unexpired term of Attorney General.
Florida

In his travels across Florida, Senator Bob Graham (D) is raising money as if he is running for governor. Eighty percent of Graham's Florida fundraisers ask for only $500, rather than the $1,000 FEC limit for Senate candidates; in Florida $500 is the maximum for which a gubernatorial candidate can ask.

In 1998 Graham must choose between a Senate re

☐ -election bid
(which seems safe at this point) or a gubernatorial comeback in an increasingly Republican state. Some believe he may be the Democrats only hope for victory. Graham said he will decide by the end of the year.

Georgia

Democrats are down playing the Christian Coalition's legislative scorecard even though they fared slightly better this year in a rating of state legislators' votes on so

☐ -called
"pro
☐ -family" issues. The Christian Coalition announced Wednesday that it is distributing 250,000 legislative scorecards showing that Republican legislators fared far better than Democrats in the 1995

☐ -96 term. On issues such as same ☐ -sex marriage, home schooling, creationism, and abortion. Eighty

☐ -three of eighty
☐ -seven Republicans received a score above 50%, meaning they supported the Christian Coalition position more than half the time during the 1995

☐ -96 session.
By contrast, only 15 of 144 Democrats scored higher than 50%. Eight Democrats scored zero. State Representative Jim Martin was among the Democrats who received a score of zero. He commented, "It bothers you when somebody rates you zero [but] I'm very glad to be associated with those folks."

Jerry Keen, state chairman of the coalition, insisted at a news conference that the scorecard issues reflect a very middle

-of

-the

-road, mainstream position (adhered to) by most families in Georgia. "We are trying very hard to make this a very balanced, a very nonpartisan publication," Keen said.

Speaker Newt Gingrich may be underestimating the potential of his challenger Michael Coles. According to the Atlanta Constitution, "[Coles] is for real. The odds on his winning are long, but money talks. And Coles should have the dough to match the most powerful congressman in America." This may be the first race in years in which Gingrich won't have a huge financial advantage.

Kentucky

Garrard County Attorney Mark Metcalf requested a recanvass (which is not the same as a recount) in the 6th District Republican congressional primary that he lost by only four votes to state Rep. Ernest Fletcher. In a recanvass, the Secretary of State's office asks the county clerks to check the totals on voting machines, review absentee ballots and make sure their numbers are correct. Secretary of State John Brown said that it would likely take seven to ten days for the results, and that past experience shows that a change in the outcome is unlikely.

As soon as the winners were declared in the Kentucky primaries, Congressman Ed Whitfield (R) and Senator Mitch McConnell (R) both came out firing. They both vowed not to let Democrats "scare" the citizens of Kentucky into believing that the Republicans want to cut Medicare. Medicare will be one of the most potent issues in the fall.

Louisiana

In conjunction with the President's visit to New Orleans, the Justice Department released a report stating that the best youth curfews are those which provide exception for those who are married, accompanied by an adult, traveling to or from work, responding to an emergency, or participating in a supervised school, church or recreational event. Strict "dusk to dawn" curfews are credited with reducing juvenile crime by 27% and lowering auto theft by 42%.

Mississippi

U.S. Senator Thad Cochran said he is behind in the Senate majority leader race, but he is not ready to concede to junior Mississippi Senator Trent Lott. According to a recent editorial this has become, for Mississippians, one of the most interesting political dramas in years.

Oklahoma

A federal judge Wednesday threw out a challenge by Oklahoma City bombing suspect Terry Nichols to the federal death penalty, ruling that Attorney General Janet Reno was doing her job when she said she would seek the death penalty for those responsible. The judge also rejected a request from the news media to buy tapes of court proceedings.

South Carolina

The Citadel is ready to allow women in its cadet corps if the U.S. Supreme Court orders it to. The court is expected to decide by the end of June whether Virginia Military Institute can remain all

-male. The ruling will likely effect the Citadel as well. James Jones, chairman of the governing board, stated that if the schools were to go co

-educational, that they want women to wait until 1997 to apply. This will allow the schools time to recruit women and accept the best candidates.

Virginia

State Democrats believe the spirited primary battle between Senator John Warner and Jim Miller for the Republican Senate nomination has left Virginia and national Democratic leaders anticipating a victory this fall. State Democratic Chairwoman, Sue Wrenn, said yesterday regardless of who wins the June 11 primary, the GOP will emerge splintered and unable to unify for the fall campaign against Mark Warner (D). Wrenn said the Republicans are too conservative for most Virginia voters. She also said voters shouldn't be misled by the incumbent's attempt to cast himself as a non

-ideological moderate with supporters in both parties. Many Democrats believe Miller would be the easier of the two candidates to defeat on November 5, but if John Warner is the nominee, the GOP is going to be torn and he is going to have a hard time bringing the activists back.

When Miller's Senate campaign said Miller had won the endorsement of former Governor Mills Godwin, Godwin offered a different view. "I don't think I've formally endorsed him, but I did tell a friend they could say I was sorry I was not there," Godwin was referring to a $100

-plate event for Miller for which he purchased a ticket but did not attend. Pressed on his views about the candidates, Godwin replied, "I'd rather people draw their own conclusions." Godwin said he plans to make the endorsement before the June 11 primary. Kate Obenshain Griffin, a Miller supporter, had announced the Godwin endorsement to about 230 Miller supporters. Miller told reporters he was pleased to have Godwin's endorsement.

Oliver North is preparing for his address to the GOP convention in Salem this weekend. He is wrestling with whether he should drop his formal neutrality in the U.S. Senate race and rally his zealous followers against Senator John Warner. North believes Warner helped orchestrate his defeat in 1994.

I don't know what kind of mental block has plagued me, but I realized today that I did not send you a draft POTUS letter to go with Malcolm Hoenlein's redline copy of the Anti-Terrorism Act. I hope the copy is still available. Following is a draft letter -- I tried to use language from the POTUS statement at the bill signing. Mr. Malcolm Hoenlein
Council of Presidents of Major Jewish Organizations
110 E. 59th St.
New York, New York 10022

Dear Malcolm:

I'm glad that you were able to join me at the White House last month for the signing of the Anti-Terrorism Act.

The last few years have brought our nation and the world too many devastating reminders of the senselessness of politically motivated terrorist actions. I believe it was soon after last year's tragedy in Oklahoma City that you and I discussed our common goal of achieving legislation to help stop terrorists before they strike, and to bring them to justice when they do. Since then, many individuals, from all parts of the political spectrum, have worked together to pass this crucial law.

I am honored to present you this copy of the Anti-Terrorism Act in appreciation of your commitment to resisting violence and division. Thank you, too, for your continuing friendship.

Sincerely,

Bill Clinton

As we discussed in our phone conversation, Mayor Norick of Oklahoma City has sent three letters to the President requesting "supplemental appropriations" to help rebuild from the last year's bombing. Last week, I received one of the Norick's letters to the President, and I called Chris Walker in Leg. Affairs for advice. He said that similar letters that Potus received from Congressman Frank Lucas are going go be answered by Sec. Reich. I then called Lawton Jordan in Intergovernmental Affairs, who said we should send the letter to Labor for response.

Today, I received another one of the three letters from Jeannie Houseman in OMB, whose office drafted a response to Norick's April 5 letter per Kitty Higgins request. In an April 29 memo to Jack Lew which I'm going to fax over to you, Ms. Higgins says that "Leon tells me that Oklahoma City's request for additional funds will be considered" during the FY 1997 budget process.

I've been told that the Administration is unlikely to give any more money to Oklahoma City, and, obviously, this conflicts with Ms. Higgins memo. My question is: should Reich respond to all three of these letters on behalf of the President or do we use the OMB draft for a Potus response? These letters are very similar and I'm going to fax them right now.

Thanks for your help and call me at 6-5517 if you have any questions.

MAVIA

Good Afternoon. I am pleased to have this opportunity to be in Seattle again and to join with you in supporting the work of Mothers Against Violence in America.

Back in 1994, I met with my friend, Pam Eakes, several of your founding members, and mothers whose children were victims of crime. I came away from that meeting not only with a mother's perspective on violence, but encouraged by the fact that despite their heavy hearts, these survivors were determined in a very positive way to create a world in which others would not suffer at the hand of these senseless and often random acts.

Unselfishly, courageously and intelligently they looked beyond their personal suffering for the greater good of us all. Today, in just three years, MAVIA is a grassroots leader creating partnerships of peace with families, communities, businesses, schools and local government agencies around the nation.

Innovative partnerships can yield some of the most effective strategies for reducing crime and violence. Many of you are aware of Seattle's Partners against Youth Gun Violence. This program, fondly known as "Cops and Docs," teaches middle school children about the trauma of gunshot wounds and their dangers. I cannot help but think that programs such as this have contributed to the 41 percent drop in the number of incidents involving firearms in Washington public schools.

These encouraging statistics are not surprising. Washington has a history of leading the rest of the nation in innovative ideas to reduce crime and violence. Perhaps there is something in the coffee you love so much. Or perhaps it is because you are blessed with outstanding leaders like Norm Stamper, Alene Moris, and Pam Eakes and the student and youth leaders we recognize today.

If we are to create a more peaceful environment in which our children can thrive and learn, we must act on many fronts.

I have just returned from Nashville where I addressed a family conference annually convened and hosted by the Vice President and Mrs. Gore. This year's topic was the problems of work and family.

Although we remember today the lives that have been lost and damaged by crime, we must recognize how far we've come -- and how much we have accomplished in reducing crime and assisting crime victims. First and foremost, the crime rate has been down for the past three years. Second, crime victims rights are no longer a novel idea. Victim Assistance programs, which were few in number in the late 1960's and generally served rape victims and battered women, no number in the thousands and serve all types of crime victims. Twenty years ago there were few victim compensation programs. Today, every state has a program to help reimburse victims for mental health, medical, funeral and other expenses. Today we have a Crime Victims Fund -- money from federal criminal offenders -- which has provided over $1 billion to crime victims program in the past decade and $5.4 million to Washington in this fiscal year. But the statistic that encourages me the most is this one: since the passage of the Brady Bill, 60,000 felons, fugitives and stalkers have not been able to buy handguns. It proves that we can do something about the unacceptable level of crime and violence in our communities.

Through a series of initiatives and legislative actions, the President has sought to empower law enforcement and protect the innocent. The Brady Bill, the Assault Weapons Ban, the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act, the Violence Against Women Act, the Safe and Drug

☐ -Free School Act, the Domestic Violence Hotline, the Anti

☐ -Terrorism Bill, and the one

☐ -strike crime initiative, to return the rule of law to public housing.

In addition, the President most recently has proposed the National Gang Tracking Network and Anti ☐ -Gang and Youth Violence Control Act to make the juvenile justice system tougher and smarter and to help our young people stay drug

☐ -free and away from guns and gangs. Just weeks ago, the President signed Megan's Law. There is no greater right than a parent's right to raise a child in safety and love. With the signing of Megan's Law, every state in the country will be required to tell a community when a dangerous sexual predator enters its midst. (add registry)

So many of these laws and initiatives were stimulated and or supported by our nation's most effective anti ☐ -crime advocates -- survivors of violent crime who were able to turn their pain and anger into power and action like Mothers Against Violence in America.

You are not alone. We will continue to work together with you to remember the lives that have been lost and damaged by crime and to dedicate ourselves to a future free from violence

Last month, I had the pleasure of speaking at the dedication of Covenant House in California. As many of you may be aware, Covenant House provides emergency shelter for homeless children and an array of services to keep them off the street and out of harm's way. I was impressed with their mission statement as follows: "We who recognize God's providence and fidelity to His people are dedicated to living out His covenant among ourselves and those children we serve, with absolute respect and unconditional love. That commitment calls us to serve suffering children in the street, and to protect and safeguard all children."e.

Perhaps more than any other crime, the Oklahoma City bombing forced us as a nation to face, and feel, the nightmare of crime victimization. Following it, a multitude of dedicated professionals, elected officials and private citizens formed a community of caring to help the grieving victims on the difficult road to survivorship. MAVIA represents one such community of caring seeking solutions to the problems of violence that affect too many of our citizens, communities and especially our youth. The Clinton Administration joins you in your efforts to support prevention programs and an effective criminal justice system.

REMARKS OF THE FIRST LADY

BENEFIT LUNCHEON OF MOTHERS AGAINST VIOLENCE IN AMERICA

SEATTLE, WASHINGTON

JUNE 24, 1996

Good Afternoon. I am pleased to have this opportunity to be in Seattle again and to join with you in supporting the work of Mothers Against Violence in America.

Back in 1994, I met with my friend, Pam Eakes and several of MAVIA's (maa

I came away from that meeting encouraged by the fact that despite their heavy hearts, these survivors were determined in a very positive way to create a world in which others would not suffer at the hand of these senseless and often random acts. Unselfishly, courageously and intelligently they looked beyond their personal suffering for the greater good of us all. Today, in just three years, MAVIA is a grassroots leader creating partnerships of peace with families, communities, law enforcement, businesses, schools and local government agencies around the nation.

Innovative partnerships can yield some of the most effective strategies for reducing crime and violence. Many of you are aware of Seattle's Partners against Youth Gun Violence. This program, fondly known as "Cops and Docs," teaches middle school children about the trauma of gunshot wounds and their dangers. I cannot help but think that these kinds of programs have contributed to the 41 percent drop in the number of incidents involving firearms in Washington public schools.

These encouraging statistics are not surprising because Washington has a history of leading the rest of the nation with innovative efforts to reduce crime and violence. Perhaps there is something in the coffee you love so much. Or perhaps it is because you are blessed with outstanding leaders like Patty Murray, Alene Moris, Pam Eakes, Police Chief Norm Stamper, and the young people we recognize here today.

When I was growing up in suburban Chicago, the kids in my town rode their bikes everywhere -- to the library, to the movie theatre, to the shops, to restaurants. My brothers and their buddies went off on exploits for hours. When the neighborhood mothers couldn't find their boys, they'd call the local police. My brother Hugh, a born adventurer, found himself in this predicament. But remembering my mother's firm instructions, refused to get into the patrol car with a stranger, even if he was a policeman. So the police car followed him slowly all the way home.

One warm spring afternoon when Chelsea was about nine, she and a friend were riding their bikes around the governor's mansion and came inside to ask if they could bike to the public library ten blocks away. I had made many trips to my local library at their age, unaccompanied and unafraid. Tears welled up in my eyes as I told her no. I put aside what I was doing and drove the girls to the library instead.

There were real dangers when we were kids. Perils existed. But with fewer guns around, a stranger's desperation or a family member's sudden burst of anger was less likely to have lethal consequences than today. Friends of my generation who grew up in inner cities or isolated rural areas recall moments of fear or danger, but nothing like the pervasive anxiety about safety that has seeped into every corner of our country's psyche.

Of course, we cannot recreate the past, but if we are to create a more peaceful environment in which our children can thrive and learn, we must act on many fronts and pool our efforts as MAVIA has done so well.

I have just returned from Nashville where I addressed a family conference annually hosted by the Vice President and Mrs. Gore. The Gore Family Conference has been the forum for a number of family policy issues including the effect of media violence and sexual content on our children, a subject upon which Tipper Gore has had a tremendous impact.

Since the 1950's, a steady stream of articles, books, and studies have documented the harm television does to children. The American Psychological Association's Commission on Violence and Youth concluded that: "Viewing violence increases violence" and "prolonged viewing of media violence can lead to emotional desensitization toward violence."

Earlier this year, the President met with executives from the media and entertainment industry and announced a breakthrough agreement to develop a voluntary ratings system that will help parents protect their children from violence and adult content on TV. The ratings system will be compatible with the V

-Chip which will help parents take responsibility for their children's viewing by letting them block shows with certain ratings. Most recently, the President announced that he is inviting the leaders of the television networks and the nation's pre

-eminent children's programming developers to come to the White House to discuss ways to improve the quality and quantity of children's programming. And, we are hopeful that the FCC will soon agree to a proposed rule which would require every television station to air three hours of children's programming per week as a condition for license renewal.

Legislative remedies, of course, will not be enough. As parents, we must be willing to reassert our authority over what enters our households. As consumers of the media we must be willing to join with one another to press for improvements in what our children see and hear. That is why I commend MAVIA's efforts to discourage violent programming and messages through its "Speak

-Up" resource handbook for parents and last year's conference on media violence.

Although we remember today the lives that have been lost and damaged by crime, we must recognize how far we've come -- and how much we have accomplished in reducing crime and assisting crime victims. First and foremost, the crime rate has been down for the past three years.

Second, crime victims' rights are no longer a novel idea. Victim Assistance programs, which were few in number in the late 1960's and generally served rape victims and battered women, now number in the thousands and serve all types of crime victims. Today we have a Crime Victims Fund -- money from federal criminal offenders -- which has provided over $1 billion to crime victims programs in the past decade and $5.4 million to Washington in this fiscal year.

But in a sea of statistics the one that encourages me the most is this one: since the passage of the Brady Bill, 60,000 felons, fugitives and stalkers have not been able to buy handguns. It proves that we can do something about the unacceptable level of crime and violence in our communities.

Through a series of initiatives and legislative actions, the President has sought to make our streets safer, to strengthen our families and communities, and to stem the tide of violence. The Brady Bill, the Assault Weapons Ban, the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act, the Violence Against Women Act, the Safe and Drug

Last month, the President signed Megan's Law. There is no greater right than a parent's right to raise a child in safety and love. With the signing of Megan's Law, every state in the country will be required to tell a community when a dangerous sexual predator enters its midst. Building on that, the President has asked the Attorney General to come up with a plan that will guarantee police officers in every state the ability to share information and track sex offenders nationwide.

So many of these laws and initiatives were stimulated and or supported by our nation's most effective anti

-crime advocates -- survivors of violent crime who were able to turn their pain and anger into power and action much like Mothers Against Violence in America.

Perhaps more than any other crime, the Oklahoma City bombing forced us as a nation to face, and feel, the nightmare of crime victimization. As you may know, Covenant House provides emergency shelter for homeless children and an array of services to keep them off the street and out of harm's way. It was a very moving event filled with hope and the prospect of better lives for L.A.'s most vulnerable youth. I will leave you with the Covenant House mission statement which says volumes about the purpose of organizations like MAVIA and our collective mission if we are to build peace together. It reads: "We who recognize God's providence and fidelity to His people are dedicated to living out His covenant among ourselves and those children we serve, with absolute respect and unconditional love. That commitment calls us to serve suffering children in the street, and to protect and safeguard all children."

Thank you all very much and godspeed in your efforts to bring peace to our families, communities and to our nation.

The mayor's April 5 letter deals specifically with his request for extra funding to help restore Oklahoma City after the bombing. His two most recent letters, however, are requesting the supplemental funding and asking the President to suspend the Davis-Bacon Act "as it relates to the CDBG funding for bombing relief."

Maybe Reich respond to the Davis-Bacon portion of Norick's letter and send a Presidential response for the funding part? I'm not sure, but I think I need some further guidance from Kitty. If she has an extra minute, will you please have her call me at 6-5517?

ay message, and last year's "common ground" address at Georgetown for help.

From the earliest days of our Republic, Americans have cherished a commitment to both individual rights and shared ideals. We are a country that celebrates personal achievement and team effort, a land built by the twin forces of entrepreneurial drive and community spirit. Our national voice has long been a chorus of unity -- varied by differing intonations, but carried and lifted by a rich harmony.

Today, our dedication to finding common ground is challenged in ways that our founders could never have anticipated. The United States is now the most multi-ethnic, multi-religious democracy in human history, and we must find new ways to make the most of this great diversity. But too often our progress is threatened by forces that tear at the very fabric of our society by encouraging hatred and alienation. Burned and defaced houses of worship, the bombed Federal building in Oklahoma City, and daily images of violence in war-torn regions across the world are stark reminders of the choices our citizens face every day.

And so we must look into our hearts as we approach the new century, pledging to devote our energies and reinvigorate the shared values that will enable us to embrace the future together. We must never go back to the dark days of racial and ethnic division, nor can we afford to dismiss our problems by ascribing them to isolated groups or areas of the country. Instead, let us join hands to lighten our burdens and build bridges between people and communities so that we can be one America again -- a Nation of extraordinary possibility with opportunities, freedom, and respect for all.

NOW THEREFORE, I, WILLIAM J. CLINTON, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim July, 1996, as A National Month of Unity. I ask all the people of the United States to observe this occasion by working together to heal divisions and to promote understanding; by reaching out to one another in a spirit of fellowship; and by seeking to strengthen the fundamental ideals of equality and community that have helped generations of Americans to move this country forward.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this day of , in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety-six, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twentieth.

Dear <2>:

Thank you for your letter regarding the timber salvage rider passed by this Congress last summer.

I have consistently expressed his deep concerns over this provision. As you may know, he vetoed the first bill that contained this provision and signed it only after it was attached to a bill that carried funding for the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing. Even then, we did not anticipate the court rulings that broadened the scope of the requirements to release old growth timber sales that had been previously withdrawn for environmental reasons.

I stated earlier this year that, "The timber rider has . . . undermined our balanced approach to a growing economy, having responsible logging, and preserving the environment." He also called for repeal of the old growth provisions. Unfortunately, to date, legislative efforts to repeal or amend the rider have been unsuccessful.

Meanwhile, the Administration has been working hard to try to confine the effects of the rider sales as much as possible. Recently, our interpretation of provisions relating to the nesting of endangered and threatened bird species and other sales previously enjoined by courts for environmental reasons was upheld by the Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. This will allow us to refrain from harvesting timber in about 140 sale units on about 4,000 acres in the Pacific Northwest that is valuable habitat for wildlife and watershed protection.

I understand and appreciate your concern about this important issue. I am committed to getting forest management back on track and to restore the balanced and reasonable approach typified by the Forest Plan which restored peace to the forests of the Pacific Northwest.

Once again, thank you for writing.

Sincerely,

BC

April,

As you know, the NYT interview with VPOTUS focused on questions about the President's commitment as well as questions about our agenda and our approach to environmental issues in general. Tomorrow's NYT magazine and next week's NEWSWEEK could both bring the first question to light -- and not necessarily in the most complementary way.

I've included answers to each type of question, plus one on timber at Katie's suggestion.

I've attached a fact sheet on accomplishments and a set of environmental agenda items.

Brian

ENVIRONMENTAL QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Q: COMMITMENT. Many people have suggested that some of your high

-profile campaign issues are derived more from polling than from personal commitment. They often cite the environment as an example -- after two years of rarely mentioning it and after signing the timber rider, all of a sudden it's a politically

-winning issue for you. How do you respond?

A: The reason I've been more visible on the environment recently is not because it reflects a changing commitment -- that commitment has always been there. I've been more visible because the Republican leaders broke with 25 years of bipartisan cooperation on the environment and tried to roll back a generation of public health and environmental standards. So I spoke out and am proud to say that we've succeeded in stopping virtually all of the Republican anti

-environment agenda.

But let me be clear: I'm very proud of my record on the environment -- and not just the recent victories. In my first year I insisted that global trade agreements such as NAFTA and GATT included environmental measures, rescinded the Reagan Mexico City policy on population planning, expanded budgets for energy efficiency and renewable energy, committed to strong reductions in greenhouse gas emissions, signed the biodiversity treaty, and signed executive orders on recycling and community right to know.

Q: APPROACH AND ACCOMPLISHMENTS. On the environment, what have you tried to do, and of what are you most proud?

A: When I ran for President, I said we must recreate a nation where every person willing to work for it would have a chance at the American dream. A large part of that was rejecting the Republican fiction that a strong economy requires us to sacrifice the environment. From the beginning, I said that we can grow the economy in a way that protects our families health and safeguards America's natural heritage. I think the record shows that we have. On the environment, as in other matters, we need government programs that increase flexibility and provide more opportunity for people to find the best answer for their particular situation -- and we need to demand more accountability for meeting environmental goals. For example, I launched Project XL, where businesses or communities are given the flexibility to develop their own solution to environmental problems but they are held accountable for exceeding current requirements. They get a cheaper solution and their neighbors get a cleaner, healthier world.

We've toughened enforcement, cleaned up more toxic dumps than the previous two Administrations combined, and expanded community right

-to

-know programs to nearly double their previous size.

Q: AGENDA. You've spent much of the past two years fighting with Congress. If you're reelected, what will you do?

A: Despite all of our progress on the environment during the past quarter

-century, there is much more to do. I don't believe that any child should have to live near a toxic waste dump, or that any parent should have to wonder about their tap water. But 10 million children under 12 still live within four miles of a toxic waste dump. Forty percent of our rivers, lakes and streams are still too polluted to fish or swim in.

I'll continue to replace the old, bureaucratic environmental system with one that expands flexibility, increases accountability, involves communities and rewards results, not red tape. Many of our efforts, such as Project XL, are still being tested in small more than a couple years for our vision to take hold throughout the environmental system that was built up over several decades.

-scale efforts -- it will take

We'll continue to fight for expanded community right to know so that communities can use this information to work with business to cut pollution. We'll continue to demand that the polluter pay to clean up toxic pollution and we'll fight again for Superfund reform to make cleanups faster, fairer and more efficient. We'll continue to work for better enforcement, rewarding those who act in good faith and play by the rules, getting tough on environmental criminals and those who put the safety of our families at risk; fighting Republican efforts to cut enforcement to take the environmental cop off the beat; and fighting Republican efforts to carve out special loopholes for well

-connected polluters.

Q: TIMBER. Why did you sign the rider, and what are you doing about its impact?

A: As I've said in the past, I regret the rider. We made a judgment that its negative impacts could be minimized and signed it in order to get the other things in the bill -- deficit reduction and aid to the victims of the Oklahoma City bombing. As you know, the courts expanded the scope of the old

-growth logging beyond what any of us expected. I've called for repeal of the rider and directed Secretaries Glickman and Babbitt to do everything in their power to minimize its environmental impact where they have such flexibility.

? Meat Safety: Issued new policy to protect consumers from E. coli contamination in meat. Vetoed legislation that would have weakened meat inspection efforts.

? Everglades Restoration: Committed $1.5 billion over seven years to help restore the unique Florida Everglades and ensure safe, clean water.

? National Parks: Withdrew land from new mining claims to protect Yellowstone National Park. Fought attempts to close national parks and developed a "Parks for Tomorrow" program to restore our national parks.

? California Water: Broke through decades of conflict and negotiated a consensus plan to protect and allocate California Bay

-Delta water.

? Arctic Refuge: Vetoed a Republican Congressional bill that would have opened the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge to oil and gas drilling.

? Recycling: Issued an Executive Order to jump start the market for recycled goods, the market for which is stronger than ever.

? Global Phaseout of Persistent Pollutants: Led the way to an agreement to phase out the use of 12 dangerous, persistent organic pollutants worldwide, such as PCBs and DDT.

? Pesticides and Food Safety: Canceled 75 hazardous pesticides while moving safer substitutes into the market more quickly.

? Reinventing Environmental Regulation: Changed EPA rules and procedures to reduce paperwork requirements for businesses by 10 million hours and allowing businesses to find their own way to meet environmental standards if they can do it cleaner and cheaper. Issued an Executive Order to make health, safety and environmental programs more fair, efficient and effective.

? Environmental Technology: Implemented technology programs to help American businesses compete more effectively in the fast growing global market while creating jobs for American workers.

? Building Sustainable Communities: Reinventing the federal government to support partnerships with communities to improve public health, enhance quality of life and create economic opportunity where Americans live and work.

? President's Council on Sustainable Development: Brought national business, environmental, and government leaders together to forge a new consensus on policies to produce economic prosperity, environmental quality, and social equity.

□ ATTACHMENT 2 -- AGENDA [prepared by CEQ]

? Continue to replace the old, bureaucratic environmental system with one that expands flexibility, increases accountability, involves communities and rewards results, not red tape.

- Programs such as Project XL in which companies have the flexibility to find their own ways to meet tough environmental standards -- with the understanding that they will be held accountable for doing better than the law requires.

- Programs such as Habitat Conservation Plans for wildlife conservation where a landowner who agrees to tough environmental practices gets the certainty that the government will not come back with additional endangered species requirements -- for up to 100 years.

? Expanded community right to know so that communities can use this information to work with business to cut pollution. (This is also an important precondition to flexibility -- for example, in Chicago a Project XL pilot will ensure accountability by making available daily emissions reports to the internet.)

? The polluter should pay to clean up toxic pollution. We will fight Republican efforts to let polluters off the hook and shift the burden to taxpayers.

? Cleaning up toxic waste - we will fight for Superfund reform to make cleanups faster, fairer and more efficient.

? Ensure better enforcement, rewarding those who act in good faith and play by the rules, getting tough on environmental criminals and those who put the safety of our families at risk; fighting Republican efforts to cut enforcement to take the environmental cop off the beat; and fighting Republican efforts to carve out special loopholes for well □ -connected polluters.

? Cleaner water - clean water is the first line of defense for public health, and beaches, rivers and lakes are Americans' number one vacation choice. But 40 percent of our rivers, lakes and streams are still too dirty to fish or swim.

? Restoring national parks - national parks are one of America's greatest treasures -- places of wonder, recreation and enjoyment for 300 million people each year. But years of heavy use are wearing them down.

? Redeveloping brownfields - we must revitalize our communities by redeveloping abandoned, contaminated properties known as brownfields -- with President Clinton's proposed tax incentive.

? Reform mining law of 1872 - because it is wrong for Republicans to support raising taxes on working families, increasing the cost of college loans and cutting Medicare but insist on maintaining the law that gives, for example, one mining corporation $1 billion worth of minerals on government land for $275.

? Permanently protect Arctic National Wildlife Refuge - we will fight Republican attempts to turn this rare and invaluable part of our national heritage over for oil drilling -- and fight instead to protect it permanently.

? Global treaty to phase out persistent organic pollutants such as DDT and PCBs - work with the international community to follow through on framework agreements and complete the treaty.

Chief of Staff
Social Security Administration

SUBJECT: State Social Security Issues of Topical Interest

DATE: July 10, 1996

Attached is a state-by-state assessment of Social Security issues that have been of interest recently. If you have any questions regarding this material, or would like additional information, please call me at (202) 482-7128.

Social Security Administration
State-by-State Issues

ALABAMA-- 1. An international child custody dispute, involving a grandmother seeking custody of her deceased son's two children who now reside with their stepmother in England, is ongoing. The issue also involves the question of who is entitled to receive Social Security survivors benefits on behalf of the children. (See Wyoming.)

2. Assertions by Congressman Sonny Callahan that the Mobile, Alabama, Hearing Office has performed at a substandard level have resulted in both media coverage and a Congressional hearing.

ALASKA--Nothing to report

ARIZONA-- 1. In a "border fraud" scheme, some Mexican residents are using "maildrop" addresses to pick up SSI benefits, which violates residency requirements of the SSI program.

2. Concerns continue about new immigrants qualifying for SSI benefits without due regard to legal responsibilities of sponsors.

ARKANSAS--Continuing public concerns about payment of SSI disability benefits to children who feign mental or emotional disabilities.

CALIFORNIA-- 1. Legislation removing drug addicts and alcoholics from Social Security/SSI disability insurance rolls affects significant number of state residents.

2. Concerns continue about new immigrants qualifying for SSI benefits without due regard to legal responsibilities of sponsors.

3. Continuing concern about SSI program fraud in which interpreters who aid non-English speaking residents applying for benefits coach their clients to falsely claim mental or emotional disabilities.

COLORADO--Nothing to report

CONNECTICUT--Nothing to report

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA--Recent media attention has focused on the alleged fraudulent activities of a private contracting firm which, acting as a payee for a number of SSI beneficiaries, misused beneficiary funds.

DELAWARE--Nothing to report

FLORIDA--Concerns continue about new immigrants qualifying for SSI benefits without due regard to legal responsibilities of sponsors.

GEORGIA--Nothing to report

HAWAII--Congressional inquiries are beginning concerning the impact on Social Security benefits if a state law is passed providing for same-sex marriages.

IDAHO--Nothing to report

ILLINOIS-- 1. Legislation removing drug addicts and alcoholics from Social Security/SSI disability insurance rolls affects significant number of state residents.

2. Concerns continue about new immigrants qualifying for SSI benefits without due regard to legal responsibilities of sponsors.

INDIANA--Nothing to report

IOWA--Nothing to report

KANSAS--Nothing to report

KENTUCKY--Continuing concern about payment of SSI disability benefits to children who feign mental or emotional disabilities.

LOUISIANA-- 1. Continuing concern about payment of SSI disability benefits to children who feign mental or emotional disabilities.

2. There is still occasional media comment on a court decision allowing payment of Social Security dependent benefits to a child born through artificial insemination after the father's death.

MAINE--Nothing to report

MARYLAND--Nothing to report

MASSACHUSETTS--Nothing to report

MICHIGAN--Legislation removing drug addicts and alcoholics from Social Security/SSI disability insurance rolls affects significant number of state residents.

NEW MEXICO--1. In a "border fraud" scheme, some Mexican residents are using "maildrop" addresses to pick up SSI benefits, which violates residency requirements of the SSI program.

2. Concerns continue about new immigrants qualifying for SSI benefits without due regard to legal responsibilities of sponsors.

NEW YORK-- 1. Legislation removing drug addicts and alcoholics from Social Security/SSI disability insurance rolls affects significant number of state residents.

2. The agency's Office of Inspector General is actively investigating a case in which fraudulently obtained Social Security numbers were among documents used to obtain credit cards.

NORTH CAROLINA--Nothing to report

NORTH DAKOTA--Nothing to report

OHIO--Legislation removing drug addicts and alcoholics from Social Security/SSI disability insurance rolls affects significant number of state residents.

OKLAHOMA--Security for Federal buildings is still an issue after Oklahoma City bombing.

OREGON--Nothing to report

PENNSYLVANIA--Nothing to report

RHODE ISLAND--Nothing to report

SOUTH CAROLINA--Nothing to report

SOUTH DAKOTA--As of this date, state has not supplied SSA with list of prisoners for match against agency's beneficiary records.

TENNESSEE--Nothing to report

TEXAS-- 1. In a border fraud scheme, some Mexican residents are using "maildrop" addresses to pick up SSI benefits, which violates the residency requirement of the SSI program.

2. Concerns continue about new immigrants qualifying for SSI benefits without due regard to legal responsibilities of sponsors.
