Subject: executive order.....

(b)(6)

[004]

I have a favor to ask - would it be possible to get 2 nice autopenned copies of an executive order (or actually I guess his sign. is already on it?) Are they called 'red-line' copies?

Executive Order on Computer Software Piracy (Executive Order 13103)
signed by the President on September 30, 1998

Thanks, I totally understand if this is impossible or inappropriate.....

VIRGINIA APUZZO NAMED INTERIM NGLTF POLITICAL DIRECTOR; WILL OVERSEE ORGANIZING, LOBBYING AND COMMUNICATIONS EFFORTS

March 2, 2000 - Virginia M. Apuzzo, formerly the highest-ranking gay or lesbian official to work in the White House and a former executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, will serve as interim NGLTF Political Director.

Apuzzo will work with current Political Director Rebecca Isaacs, who is departing NGLTF in late March to become policy director of the L.A. Gay and Lesbian Center. Isaacs will be in charge of directing public policy at all levels, formulating legislative priorities and developing national, state and local civil rights strategies for the nation's largest gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered community center.

Apuzzo is the current holder of the Virginia Apuzzo Chair for Leadership in Public Policy at the NGLTF Policy Institute. Following Isaacs' departure, Apuzzo will be in charge of NGLTF's program efforts, which include state and federal advocacy, communications operations and local organizing and training, including NGLTF's annual "Creating Change" conference, the largest annual national conference in the GLBT movement. Apuzzo formerly served as Assistant to the President for Administration and Management from 1997 to 1999.

Apuzzo is a former Executive Director of the Task Force and former co-chair of NGLTF's Board of Directors. She held several positions in the administration of former New York Gov. Mario Cuomo, including Commissioner of the New York State Civil Service Commission, and was the first openly gay or lesbian ever confirmed by the Republican-dominated

New York State Senate.

"Because of Rebecca's leadership, NGLTF's organizing, training and state and federal advocacy functions have never been stronger," said NGLTF Executive Director Kerry Lobel. "Our objective in moving Ginny Apuzzo into the interim Political Director position is to ensure that this important work continues without missing a beat after Rebecca's departure. Because of Ginny's depth of experience - from being NGLTF's executive director to being in charge of administration at the White House - she is well-suited to making NGLTF even more effective and visible."

A search for a permanent replacement for Isaacs is underway.

Founded in 1973, the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force has worked to eliminate prejudice, violence and injustice against gay, lesbian, bisexual and transgendered people at the local, state and national level. As part of a broader social justice movement for freedom, justice and equality, NGLTF is creating a world that respects and celebrates the diversity of human expression and identity where all people may fully participate in society.

This message was issued by the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force Communications Department. If you have a question regarding this post, please direct it to the contact at the top of this message.

To reach the NGLTF Communications Department at NGLTF, please call David Elliot, Communications Director, at 202-332-6483 x3303 or pager 800-757-6476 or email delliot@ngltf.org.

Just a heads up, I'll be getting around a POTUS letter on the minimum wage in the early afternoon. We are trying to get this out on Sunday for the Monday papers, assuming that makes sense for leg and others.

can't do it until potus gets back (unless you think it can't wait the weekend and we can find someone going to selma)

In his suicide note read at the memorial, Matis said he has been anguished about his homosexuality since he first realized he was different at age 7. He prayed that he would be changed, but eventually gave up hope.

"I am now free," Matis wrote. "I am no longer in pain and I no longer hate myself. As it turns out, God never intended for me to be straight. Perhaps my death might become the catalyst for some good."

Matis also urged his parents Marilyn and Fred Matis to use him as an example to teach other church members "the true nature of homosexuality."

Although his note didn't mention it, Matis' suicide prompted some Mormons who oppose Prop. 22 to blame their church's deep involvement in the issue.

The tragedy came in the last days of an increasingly heated campaign over Prop. 22, also called the Knight initiative, on next Tuesday's ballot. It would strengthen state laws against gay marriage. The Mormon Church has been a zealous campaigner for the measure, pressing its members from the pulpit and in private for almost a year to contribute their money and time to its passage.

Police found Matis dead, a gunshot wound to the head, at 7:36 a.m. Friday, outside a Mormon church on Grant Avenue that serves as the LDS center for the Los Altos area, according to the Santa Clara coroner.

Authorities had been alerted by his parents, who had found a suicide note on his bed.

Matis' family disagreed that the death had any connection to the Mormon Church and Prop. 22. And a counselor who knew Matis well cautioned that any decision to commit suicide comes from a place so deep in the soul that there can be no single, simple reason.

"Our son's death had no relationship to Prop. 22 whatsoever," said a woman who answered the phone at Matis' home Wednesday but would not identify herself and refused further comment other than to add: "We feel invaded at a very private time of our life."

After Wednesday night's memorial, a family friend read a statement from the Matis family asking that their son's death not be used for political gain.

"Adding to the tragedy of the event, there are those who would create political ramifications from this," the statement said. "The family sincerely requests that the exemplar life of this good and well-respected young man not become fodder for anyone's campaign or forum."

But Jeanie Mortensen-Bessamo, a Simi Valley Mormon who disagrees with her church's advocacy of Prop. 22 and had been corresponding with Matis by e-mail, said in an e-mail Wednesday, "Stuart Matis was indeed a casualty of Prop. 22."

Mortensen-Bessamo said she had spoken with Matis' mother Tuesday night, and learned that "his suicide note spoke clearly of his struggle, particularly the last few months while watching the battle regarding Prop. 22."

"He hoped that his death would become a catalyst for fruitful education of the members and leaders of the LDS church regarding the homosexuality and the homophobia that exists in the church and society," wrote Mortensen-Bessamo. "His death was his final statement on the need for change."

In the months before his death, Matis wrote in a long, passionate letter to his cousin about the agony suffered by gay and lesbian Mormons, because of church teachings against homosexuality. And he wrote about the added burden of his church's advocacy of Prop. 22.

"The church has no idea that as I type this letter, there are surely boys and girls on their calloused knees imploring God to free them from this pain," he wrote to his cousin in the letter. It was posted on the Internet by Mortensen-Bessamo, who was thrown out of the church for living with the man who became her husband and is now on her way to rejoining.

'They hate themselves'

"They hate themselves. They retire to bed with their finger pointed to their head in the form of a gun," Matis wrote. "The church's involvement in the Knight initiative will only add to the great pain suffered by these young gay Mormons."

Robert Rees, a Mormon Church leader in the Santa Cruz area who had counseled Matis and spoke at Wednesday night's memorial, called him "one of the most outstanding men that I've met in my life. He was a person of unusual personal integrity and strength of character."

"I have been very despondent because it's such a loss," said Rees, who is also a professor of literature at UC-Santa Cruz.

He said Matis, until recently an employee of the Arthur Anderson accounting firm, first spoke with him in November. Gay and lesbian Mormons often seek Rees out because of his experience leading a congregation of single Mormons in Los Angeles for five years.

"I think there's no question that he was deeply conflicted, as many people are, between his identity and his faith," Rees said. He said Matis remained faithful both to his identity and to his church's requirement that he not act on his sexual orientation.

"I think the conflict for Stuart became too exquisite," Rees said.

He said Matis knew early on he was gay, but lived through the typical cycle of denial and repression before facing up to it in the last few years. He told his parents about a year ago, and they grew to support him, and he was becoming more comfortable with himself, Rees said. But still, his anguish over the conflict with his church grew.

"Any time somebody is in that much pain, there's always the possibility that they will choose the ultimate act," Rees said. He cautioned against simplistic explanations, saying, "Anyone's suicide is so complex and so personal that no one can attach any responsibility to any one person or event. To attach blame to the church or Prop. 22 is fruitless. No one can know the private deep inner workings of anyone's soul."

Yes on 22 campaign manager Rob Stutzman said the campaign had no comment on Matis' problems with his church's support of Prop. 22.

Of Mortensen-Bessamo's description of Matis as a "casualty of Prop. 22," he said, "We would hope opponents would not manipulate this obvious private family tragedy for political purposes."

No on Knight spokesperson Tracey Conaty said, "We didn't know Stuart, so it doesn't seem appropriate for us to comment on this tragedy."

A second service for Matis was to be held Thursday in Orem, Utah, where he was to be buried.

Subject: 2000-3/3 Remarks by the President at DNC Dinner

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary
(Palo Alto, California)

For Immediate Release
March 3, 2000

REMARKS BY THE PRESIDENT
AT DNC DINNER

Mark Hopkins InterContinental
San Francisco, California

7:50 P.M. PST

THE PRESIDENT: Thank you very much. The first thing I would like to say to you, after thank you for the warm welcome, is that this is not the first time I have come here to campaign for Senator Feinstein's re-election. In fact, I'm an old hand at this. I came here in '94 to campaign for Senator Feinstein's re-election and she stayed in Washington, I had to do it all by myself. (Laughter.) So it's nice to be here with the evidence of my argument. I thank you very much. (Applause.)

I also want to thank Senator Barbara Boxer and Stu for being here; and Representative Barbara Lee, who is also off to a very fast start. The women from California in the Senate and the House have defied all of the preconceptions about how long it takes to become effective in the Congress. (Applause.) It could have something to do with that practical instinct of worrying more about what you're doing than where you're sitting. And they have really, really done a good job.

I thank the McCarthy's for chairing this event. And as you said, I can't remember anybody who ever got more done in her first term in the Senate than Diane Feinstein. (Applause.) And I want you to know, I'm here for many reasons -- and I'm not running for anything -- (laughter) -- and on most days I'm okay with it. (Laughter.) But I care a great deal about not whether we're going to change, but how we're going to change and where we're going from here.

And one of the things that I always admired about Diane Feinstein and her husband, Dick -- who's been giving me training in how to be a Senate spouse -- (laughter and applause.) Stu Boxer and Dick and I decided that we would start right now planning for next year, we're looking for a fourth -- (laughter) -- for golf, for tea, for whatever, we're open. (Laughter.) Life's funny, isn't it? I mean, really, it's great. (Laughter.)

Let me say, one of the things that I really admire, maybe the thing I admire most about Diane Feinstein is, first of all, she cares about a lot of things. How many conversations have we had about China, about Tibet, about different parts of the world; about saving the California Redwoods, which meant a lot to me, too; about setting aside the desert, now we have two national parks -- it's meant a lot to me, too; about taking on this gun issue, which I started to try to do with the Brady Bill concept as governor more than 16 years ago, and I backed off, to my everlasting regret. When I became president, I promised myself as long as I was standing I would do it. And she's been a great ally. And I thank her for that. (Applause.)

But one thing that Diane does that sometimes politicians in both parties, especially when you get in Washington, and you get all caught up in this atmosphere, you know, and you spend all your time watching talk shows -- (laughter.) Do you realize that if you've got a halfway good cable selection, you don't ever have to watch anything but talk shows anymore? (Laughter.) And do you realize to get on one, all you have to do is take a firm position and never change your mind, and it's better if you don't know anything. (Laughter.) Actually, if you have any evidence, any background, any real policy knowledge, it's a terrific encumbrance because you're supposed to be shouting to great effect on these programs. (Laughter.) Now, we're all laughing, but you know it's pretty close to the truth. (Laughter.)

And Diane, you know, she's like me. We're still under the illusion that when you elect us to these things, they're actually jobs and we're supposed to get up and go to work every day, and like your job, it yields to effort. I mean, it really makes a difference if you pass a few days in the headlines to figure out what actually ought to be in the bill. And then if you actually pass a law, it can really change people's lives.

Now, you're laughing, but I'm telling you, you have no idea how hard it is to concentrate on your job if you live in Washington today. Barbara is nodding her head. Representative Lee is nodding her head. We live in this sort of constant culture of critiquing and carping and talking and who's up and who's down and who's in and who's out. And I wanted to be here tonight -- I'm proud to show up for somebody who still believes being a United States Senator is one of the most important jobs in the world, and with effort you can get results which change people's lives for the better. And that is the measure of public service and she fulfills it and -- (applause.)

Now, the second reason I'm here is to tell you I want you to go vote on Tuesday. I can't vote in this primary, but I hope you'll vote. You've got a big ballot. You'll have an opportunity to vote for things that will affect your future and to send a signal where California is. I hope you'll vote, as Diane said, for Proposition 26. (Applause.) Why? Because it'll build people up. Because we're going to have 2 million teachers retire in the next few years as our student bodies get larger. Because we've got already untold numbers of kids in schools that are either overcrowded or tumbling down. And because California has shown a commitment to turn around failing schools, to adopt charter schools, to try things that will work. And you need to get all the roadblocks out of your way to building your children's future.

And for me, I hope you'll vote against Proposition 22. (Applause.) I want to say -- I'll say more about this in a minute. Because however you stand on the question of gay marriage -- and I realize that San Francisco is different from the rest of California, is different from the rest of America. But that's not what is at stake here. This initiative will have no practical effect whatever. This is a solution in search of a problem that isn't there.

So people are being asked to vote on this to get everybody in a white heat and to divide people at a time when -- you know, look around, folks, we just had this little six year old girl killed in Michigan by a six year old boy who got a gun that was stolen, that he shouldn't have been able to get his hands on. That's a problem we ought to be working on.

You had a guy flip out in Western Pennsylvania and start shooting people at random, apparently out of his imagined grievance that had some racial basis. You had a guy in Los Angeles shoot at Jewish kids -- kids -- who were going to school, just because they were Jewish. And then he killed a Filipino postal worker just because he was a Filipino and he worked for the federal government, he had double satisfaction.

You had Matthew Shepard stretched out on a rack in Wyoming, you had James Byrd dragged to death in Texas. You had this guy who said he belonged to a church that didn't believe in God, but did believe in white supremacy, kill a Korean Christian walking out of his church; and the former basketball coach of Northwestern, an African American, last year. And I could go on and on.

We've had all the turmoil in New York City over this Diallo case. And I don't want -- as I said before, I don't pretend for a moment to second-guess the jury, I didn't sit there and listen to the evidence. But I know most people in America of all races believe that if it had been a young white man in a young, all-white neighborhood, it probably wouldn't have happened. That doesn't mean they were guilty under criminal law. And the Justice Department is looking into that, and the civil rights division, and that's the way to handle that.

But what it does mean is, there's this huge gulf out there, still, in too many places where people wonder if they can be treated fairly. So what I'm trying to do -- the reason I ran for president was that the country was in trouble, California was in real trouble back in '92, and Washington was dominated by sort of a talk show mentality. And the Congress, too, and in the White House. Did you get your 10 seconds on the news tonight? And the only way you could get it is if you were bombing the other side. And there was the liberal position and there was the conservative position, there was the Democrat position and there was a Republican position, and we were supposed to get in here and basically fight. And it didn't matter if anything ever got done.

And I thought to myself: you know, I've been a governor for 10 years. I thought: if I ran my state that way, we'd be in the ditch, if you ran your business that way you would be broke, and if we ran our homes that way, the divorce rate would be 100 percent. I mean, this is -- it was crazy. And what I want you to think about tonight is this. I thank Diane and others who have been so generous. So many of you said to me tonight kind things about my service for which I am grateful. But I want you to think about that tonight.

Elections are about the future. America has stayed young by thinking about tomorrow. And the point I want to make to you, if you like the fact that America is doing well, the only way we can continue to do well is to keep striving to do better, because the world is changing very rapidly, and because there are still unsolved problems and un-seized opportunities in this country. And that's what this election is about.

Diane mentioned a few of them. How are we going to keep the economy going? How are we going to bring economic opportunity to people in places that have been left behind -- the Mississippi Delta, where I come from; the Rio Grande Valley, where I was last week; the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation and other reservations where unemployment runs as high as 70 percent. The inner-city neighborhoods in California and elsewhere where there is still an unemployment rate two, three, four times the national average. What are we going to do to reach them? The rest of us need that. If you want to keep doing well, you've got to try to do better.

Why? Because if you invest there, you get inflation-free growth that benefits everyone else. We're living in a time where, economically, doing the morally right thing happens to be good for you, too. Equal pay for equal work for women is morally right. It's good for the economy.

(Applause.) Raising the minimum wage is good for the economy.
(Applause.) Closing the digital divide is good for the economy.
(Applause.)

I was out in Northern California a couple of months ago, and I was with some eBay executives who informed me that 20,000 Americans now make a living on eBay -- not working for eBay, trading on eBay. And they've done a profile of these people and, lo and behold, they found that a lot of them used to be on welfare.

So what happened? That little computer, when the digital divide was bridged, I believe intelligence is equally distributed across racial and income lines. And I grew up in one of the poorest places in America, and some of the smartest people I ever met, I had known by the time I was 10 years old. I've always felt that luck had something to do with the fact that I was standing here, even though all politicians want you to believe they were born in log cabins they built themselves. (Laughter.)

But, anyway, consider this. What does it mean that 20,000 people are making a living on eBay and some of them used to be on welfare? It means if you bridge the digital divide, you collapse the distance not only between people who are physically isolated from markets and opportunities, but may be isolated from bank loans, isolated from education, isolated from other things. So it's a big question.

How are you going to educate all these kids? I mentioned Proposition 26. California is doing better, with the most diverse student body in the country. But I can tell you, we've got a lot to do. But we know what to do. I was laughing with some of my old governor friends the other day. We didn't always know what to do. Now we know how to turn failing schools around, it's just a question of whether we're prepared to invest the money and the time and the effort and the discipline and the accountability and give the support to the kids in trouble with after-school and summer school and mentoring and other programs to do what needs to be done. But we know what to do now.

How are you going to help people to balance work and family? Are we going to do more about child care or not? I could go on and on. How are we going to make efforts to continue to grow the economy and improve the environment? It is now no longer necessary to degrade the environment to grow the economy. This is a digital economy, we don't have to do that anymore. (Applause.)

And for those of you that are younger than me, I'll make you a prediction: within 20 years it will become clear, and probably within a decade, that the only way to improve the economy is to continue to improve the environment. There is a trillion dollar market out there for people who are committed to new technologies to combat global warming.

Now, how are we going to make the most of the scientific technical revolution? What does it mean that we're going to sequence the human genome? What will it be like when we can cure all kinds of cancers when there are just a few cells forming, so there's no possibility of metastasis? What will it mean when we can block the defective genes that cause Alzheimer's or diabetes or Parkinson's? What will it mean. If you live to be 65 in America, your average life expectancy is already 82. Diane told me tonight that there were three people that she knew of that were 90 years old in this audience. Can you imagine, just 10 years ago you'd never go to a group like this, at this hour of the night, and find three people who were 90 years old. True. (Laughter.) Ten years from now -- 10 years from now you will come to a meeting like this and there will be 25 people that are 90 years old. (Applause.)

Now, what does all this mean to us? What does it mean to say we're in a global economy, in a global society? What are our responsibilities for those poor people that are clinging for life on those trees in Mozambique tonight? Was I right or wrong to send the NATO planes, the American planes in so that the people could go home in Kosovo? (Applause.) These are big questions.

What are our obligations to the peace process in the Middle East, in Northern Ireland, in the tribal wars in Africa? What is it that binds us together as a people? That's what this election is about. You've got to think about these big things. Don't get into this sort of old, broken record kind of cheap slug mentality in this election. This is a big election. And it's not about what will get you 15 seconds on the evening news or what makes for a hard punch on a talk show.

This country is doing well because we have been animated by good ideas, new ideas rooted in basic values: opportunities for all, responsibility from all, a community of all Americans. It's working because we have -- our crowd does, in Washington -- some basic ideas. We think everybody is important, everyone matters. We think everybody ought to get a chance. We think everybody's got a role to play. We think we all do better when we help each other. That's what we believe.

Now, the results are pretty encouraging. But I am imploring you: do not be lulled into a false sense of confidence or think for a moment it does not matter whether you keep looking to tomorrow or whether you exert particular efforts to vote in the elections this year.

I want to close with a little story, which will betray my age. (Laughter.) Over Thanksgiving I had the kids of friends of ours over -- Hillary and I had a couple friends and their kids come stay with us. And this one beautiful little girl looked up at me -- she was six years old -- and she said, how old are you, anyway? (Laughter.) And I said, well, Mary, I'm 53. And she said, that's a lot. (Laughter.)

And to those of you who are younger I will say -- and to those of you who are older, you know what I'm saying -- it is a lot, but it doesn't take long to live a life, no matter how long it is.

When we passed this milestone this month and we had the longest economic expansion in history, I went back and studied the last economic expansion in history. Do you know when the record was that we broke? Nineteen sixty-one to 1969. Now, let me tell you a little something from my 53 years of life.

In 1964, I finished high school. Our country had been heartbroken by President Kennedy's assassination; but then we had rallied behind President Johnson and he was wildly popular. Because we had an economy we thought would go on forever, high growth, low inflation, low unemployment. We were passing civil rights bills right and left in the United States Congress. And most people believed we would actually solve the problems of race through the laws, through Congress and the courts.

The Vietnam war had not yet manifested itself in the way it later did. And most people believed that we would prevail in the Cold War, which we subsequently did, but most people thought we would do it without torment, turmoil and division.

So we were feeling pretty cool in the summer of 1964. We thought we'd have social justice, economic progress, and freedom and national security in the world -- and it would just happen. That's what we thought when I graduated from high school.

Not long after that, we had the Watts riots. Not long after that, the streets of every major city were filled with anti-war demonstrations. Within four years, when I graduated from college at Georgetown, it was two days after Robert Kennedy had been killed, two months after Martin Luther King had been killed, nine weeks after Lyndon Johnson said he wouldn't run for re-election.

Our country was split right down the middle over the Vietnam war, and in just a couple of months President Nixon would be elected President on the first of our campaigns of division. You may remember, he said he was representing the silent majority -- which meant the rest of us, I guess, were in the loud minority. But the message was clear: America is divided into two camps, us and them. And anybody who's not with us is them. And we've been us-ing and them-ing ever since in some way or another.

And ever since I ran in 1992, I have done my best to heal those breaches and to bring us together and to get us to let go of some of that stuff, that poison, that venom, that need we always seem to have to be divided one from another.

But I tell you this because when I was 18 in 1964, times were just about like they are now, and I thought it would all be fine. And in next to no time, all the wheels ran off, and by 1967 everything was divided. And within a few more months in 1968, within a few more months our expansion came to an end.

I say this to you not as your President, but as a citizen. I have waited for 35 years for my country to be in a position to build the future of our dreams for our children that all of us could be a part of, not just those of us that are wealthy enough to come here, but the people that were good enough to serve us tonight -- (applause) -- not just those of us that are doing great and have lived most of our lives, but those of us that are just beginning.

But I remember. Don't you be overconfident. Don't you be overcasual. You know, in life we're always lucky when we get a second chance, and most of us are lucky to have had more than one. But a country is indeed graced by God to get a second chance. I'm glad I helped to build America's second chance these last seven years. We've got it now. I've waited 35 years to see it.

That's why I'm for Diane Feinstein. (Applause.) That's why I'm traipsing all over the country trying to get people to think about this. And when this political debate goes on, don't you get caught in all this little stuff. You lift this country up, lift the people in your community up. Tell the people why they ought to vote, remind them of how we lost our last expansion. Think about all the possibilities for the future. Be big. Be big and remember: we all do better when we help each other, and the only way to keep doing well is to be committed to doing better.

Thank you, and God bless you. (Applause.)

Subject: Gold Medal

Very creative. Nancy Sinatra would be proud.

O'Connor was NEW YORK (AP) -- An ailing Cardinal John presented with a proclamation today awarding him
the Congressional Gold Medal, the nation's highest civilian honor.

President The framed proclamation was signed Sunday by recuperating Clinton and presented to O'Connor, who has been at his from brain tumor surgery, in a private ceremony Cathedral. Manhattan residence adjoining St. Patrick's cardinal in The actual medal will be presented to the a few months once it has been minted.

"For more than 50 years, Cardinal O'Connor has served

the Catholic Church and our nation with constancy and commitment," Clinton said in a statement issued

Sunday in Selma, Ala., where he took part in a re-enactment of a 1965 civil rights march.

"Whether it was the soldier on the battlefield or the patient

dying of AIDS, Cardinal O'Connor has ministered with a gentle spirit and a loving heart," Clinton said.

"Through it all, he has stood strong as an advocate for the poor, a champion for workers and an inspiration for millions."

Joseph Zwilling, the cardinal's spokesman, said this morning

that the award meant a great deal to O'Connor.

"He was very,

very happy, very pleased about the whole thing,"

Zwilling said.

The medal is the highest civilian honor awarded by Congress,

and both houses rushed earlier to approve it for

O'Connor,

mindful of his precarious health. The medal has been awarded to 250 people, including George Washington, the

Wright

Brothers and Mother Teresa.

"When I told him that the first Congressional

Gold Medal was given to the patriots at Bunker Hill, the militia, he said, 'That's great because I'm a military man, too,'" said

Sen.

Charles Fossella, served as a Navy chaplain in Vietnam and Korea.
O'Connor drew applause from worshippers at St.
Patrick's on Sunday. In brief remarks at the start of the service, he called it
"a great privilege" to be present as Auxiliary Bishop William
McCormack filled in as celebrant.
During the Mass, O'Connor, wearing his red cardinal's cassock, sat behind the altar, periodically helped to his feet by an assistant for prayers and hymns Zwilling said the 80-year-old archbishop was "feeling better the last few days, but still weak and not able to resume a regular schedule."
O'Connor fell twice after his return to duty last October but celebrated Mass regularly until two weeks ago. He suffers from partial hearing loss and has difficulty reading as a result of his illness.
The spokesman said it was unlikely that O'Connor would celebrate Mass on Ash Wednesday.

Looks like this bill signing is now happening friday. If no objection, I'd like to do this one and maybe a few others -- would like to get a little more experience on the signing front. Also, on a related note, I'd like to get in the loop on the "Nancy's out box" stuff, again to get a little more familiar with that process. OK w/you?

White House liaison to lesbians and gays is on the road for Gore
by Chris Bull
for The Advocate

When Vice President Al Gore learned last fall that the White House position of liaison to gays and lesbians was open, he wasted little time suggesting Julian Potter, his trusted aide, for the high profile post.

"The vice president said, 'I want Potter in this job,' " recalls Potter.

When

the vice president also happens to be the leading Democratic presidential contender, he tends to get his way, and so in November Potter was ensconced in the office that had been vacated by Richard Socarides. "By that time I'd worked with Gore for several years, and he trusted me and felt I could do
job," she says. "So here I am."

Now, Potter is returning the favor. In her official capacity, she has made stops in several primary states promoting the White House's record at a time

when Gore is fighting off a challenge for gay votes from Bill Bradley.
(Potter stresses that her separate work for Gore's campaign is done on her own time, not in her official capacity.)

Potter's long experience in the maelstrom of national politics has prepared her for the rigors of her new post. In 1988, she worked first on Richard Gephardt's short-lived presidential drive and then on Michael Dukakis' ill-fated campaign. Her first foray into Washington, D.C., came in 1993 when she served as field organizer for the Campaign for Military Service, a coalition of groups that led the failed effort to repeal the ban on gay and lesbian service members.

In retrospect, Potter says the gay rights movement was unprepared for the battle. "What dawned on all of us was that there essentially was no visible grass roots from which to build support for a national initiative," she says.

"There were lots of gay bars but few statewide gay organizations or local community centers to draw upon. We had little experience in playing partisan politics. We were thrown into the limelight in not a very flattering way." In April 1993, in the heat of the battle over the ban, Potter was named special assistant to Andrew Cuomo, then assistant secretary (now secretary) of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. She was later promoted to deputy assistant for community empowerment at HUD, where she reported to the vice president.

It was at HUD that Potter met Mirian Saez, who has been her partner for the past five years. "It was a bastion of liberal lesbians led by Roberta," laughs Potter, referring to Roberta Achtenberg, the lesbian former San Francisco supervisor who won her appointment as an assistant secretary at HUD after a bruising Senate battle. "We didn't plan it that way, but it was just great fun for all of us working together." Today, Saez runs her own company advising public housing agencies.

By last summer Potter, 38, and Saez had decided to have a child. But when the liaison job became available, they decided to delay their plans. "I decided that articulating what this administration was doing was so important that I couldn't turn the job down," she says. "There will be time for Mirian and me to start our family." The delay could extend past the election: If Gore wins the presidency, Potter would be in line to receive a high level post in the new administration.

Despite her interest in family, Potter views same-sex marriage as an unproductive issue. Marriage "is a religious institution with 2,000 years of tradition behind it," she says. "I think Americans really see marriage as between a man and a woman, and they are not likely to change anytime soon. I'm much more interested in pursuing equal legal rights and protections for same-sex couples." (That position also has the advantage of dovetailing neatly with Gore's.)

For the perpetually cheerful Potter, complex, troubling battles are a small price to pay for serving the Administration. In Iowa in January, Potter helped organize one of the largest political gatherings of gays and lesbians in the state. "People from all over the state brought their friends, their children, their relatives to meet the vice president," she says. "The next day I got calls back from people who were just so happy to have been included in the political process, to have an administration that really cared about them. It was a great celebration."

Subject: Takings Bill & Speech at NLC

Sean:

The homebuilders have resurrected their takings "procedural reform" bill from last term, with a floor vote scheduled in the House next Thursday. In a happy coincidence, your boss is scheduled to speak at the annual meeting of the National League of Cities this weekend (or early next week). Two years ago, at the same meeting, the VP blasted the bill and promised a veto. A similar message from your boss at this year's meeting would be delightful, and seemingly a no-brainer: you are already completely on record and it will certainly be a receptive audience. I know the takings guy at DOJ and the lobbyist at NLC are pushing for inclusion of a line about the bill. I don't know if this will come across your desk but, if so, I wanted to give you the heads up. I have attached a recent CRC op-ed about the bill in case you wanted any more background. Thanks. Doug

DON'T MAKE A FEDERAL CASE OUT OF LOCAL LAND USE DISPUTES

By Timothy Dowling

What could the U.S. Congress possibly be thinking? In recent weeks, the House of Representatives awoke from its winter slumbers to push through the Judiciary Committee a bill entitled the Private Property Rights Implementation Act of 1999. In fact, Committee Chair Henry Hyde has promised to bring the bill to the floor for an immediate vote. The proposed legislation is so blatantly special interest, so contrary to principles of federalism and local authority, and so out-of-step with the public's demand for smarter growth and less sprawl that one wonders how this bill could possibly have legs.

Under current law, a developer who believes that a local law unfairly restricts land use must first negotiate with local officials. If negotiations fail, the developer may seek compensation in state court. The developer can sue for compensation in federal court only after local and state procedures have been employed. This process makes sense because local officials and state courts are best positioned to decide local land use matters and most responsive to the needs of developer, neighboring landowners, and the community at large. Deference to local control is not only sensible, but required by the Constitution, for Supreme Court rulings make clear that a developer cannot seek compensation for a "taking" of property under the Fifth Amendment in federal court until after local officials reach a final decision and a state court has denied compensation. The proposed legislation, drafted and pushed by the National Association of Home Builders, tries to change this commonsense approach. The bill would allow developers and others to short-circuit local land use procedures, forego efforts to seek compensation in state court, and sue local governments in federal court far earlier in the negotiation process. It's easy to see why the developers' national lobby is so energized. The legislation would give big developers a huge new club to wield over local officials in land use disputes: the threat of early, expensive federal court litigation.

What is less clear is why this bill has found friends on Capitol Hill.

After all, the legislation has attracted an impressive array of opponents, including the National League of Cities, the National Association of Counties, our nation's towns and townships, forty state attorneys general, and many others who believe in local authority over land use issues.

Environmental groups object because the bill would undermine smart growth planning and harm our natural resources. The federal and state judiciaries oppose the bill because it would prematurely entangle federal courts in traditionally local matters.

The irony is that the bill is moving in a Congress that prides itself on federalism and respect for local control, whose professed mission is to shift authority away from the federal government to local communities. But by overriding local procedures and imposing a one-size-fits-all process through this bill, the Congress would effectively federalize land use disputes, perhaps the quintessential domain of state and local governments. The bill also flies in the face of the one clear message sent in the 1998 elections: grow smarter. Voters weighed in on more than 240 ballot initiatives designed to control urban sprawl, approving more than 70 percent of the measures. Recent polls show that in many areas smart growth is replacing crime reduction, education, and other traditional issues as the citizenry's top priority. In the states, the smart-growth charge has been led by a remarkably bipartisan group of political leaders, with Republican governors like Christine Todd Whitman in New Jersey, John Rowland in Connecticut, Tom Ridge in Pennsylvania, and John Engler in Michigan all supporting strong government protections for open space and farmland.

The developers' lobby argues that it takes too long to litigate land use issues, but there is no evidence that state courts are unwilling or unable to resolve these claims fairly and efficiently. If local land use procedures need reform, the answer is to improve those processes at the local level, not to shift the balance toward developers in every community in the country. In fact, local officials are streamlining land use procedures where needed to make them fairer and faster.

Local land use planning is a cornerstone of our quality of life. Local officials keep noisy industrial plants, hog farms, adult bookstores, and the like a suitable distance from our homes, schools, and churches. They ensure that our neighborhoods have adequate roads, schools, and sewers. They preserve prime farmland, open space, and natural resources for future generations. Congress should respect the local control over land use that has served us well and reject this misguided, all-wisdom-resides-in-Washington proposal.

Subject: Radio Address March 17th

I have you and your guests tentatively down for the President's Radio Address on March 17th. As of right now we cannot confirm your attendance to the address. We do think the address will indeed be taped on Friday but the time is still to be determined.

Helen Robinson will be filling in for me while I am out of town next week. Please email her early in the week for details and with any questions or you can call our office directly x66610. She will email you next week with any updates and the final details.

Thank you!

Subject: Rewrite of congressional letters asking that constituents accompany POTUS to South Asia

I have just received your note of earlier today, requesting that we redo a number of Congressional letters on constituent travel to South Asia to include the line "if Mr. Chatterjee [and a dozen others in different letters] should be in India during the time I am there, we hope to include members of the Indian-American community in several public events".

I would like to reclama that language. At this stage, the Members of Congress will inevitably receive these letters after the President is already in India. They and their constituents will wonder why we are making such an offer after the opportunity to take advantage of it will have passed. I think we're much better off, now, simply stating that there will not be a public delegation.

Guidance??

Sean,

Some friends of mine, Marty & Rebecca Eisenberg, are coming to DC on April 15th with their Mom and 3 kids -- 6 people in all -- to show the kids Washington for the first time.

Is there any chance you or one of your many assistants could give them a private tour on that Sunday or Monday, April 16 or 17?

They would naturally schedule the rest around this.

I tried to get Rob Lowe to do it, but he's busy taping. (I'm at 305-751-7085 if you want to berate me for this in person.)

Sean-

First of all, I want to introduce myself. I am Lynn's new assistant. I believe we have met previously, I was Mark Spengler's deputy at the DNC....

In response to your note, Lynn says good catch. The facts in the memo are correct- the facilities are ready to go but given the current situation at Pine Ridge there can be no plans made to break ground. Lynn has asked all the agencies to hold off on deliverables for now. Gover is planning an unannounced trip to Pine Ridge to discuss the situation with them. Lynn will write a memo for the President and Podesta this afternoon regarding the status. Thanks Sean.

If you have any questions I am at 65019.

at the risk of sounding obvious - - i just wanted to stress how important it is to me that staff sec. is on the south asia trip; i wouldn't mention it, since it's long been the policy that we travel on trips of this duration, but last time we didn't go for some random reasons and it was a big hassle for nancy/kris and us. (just so you know no one opposed our going to turkey, it was just a bureaucratic screw up; sosnik tried to correct it at the last minute, but issues with visas, etc. made it problematic and we figured we'd have to go over at some point with the continuing resolution anyway). Being on the road and on AF1 is how we keep the daily paper blob moving while he's gone, and we're the ones who harass the nsc into getting the president what he needs as the trip moves along. Being on the road is especially important when there's the possibility of presidential signings, since we work with the embassy folks on site to get things in order and handle the event. thanks.
