After further researching Edgewood Terrace, we have determined that DC Link and Learn is the better location due to vetting problems. The advance lead will survey Link and Learn tomorrow and assuming it works, we will wait until Monday morning to confirm. If you need more info please contact me at x62823. Thanks.

HEADLINE: Four Killed in 3 Shootings in D.C.; Officer Allegedly Wounds Man

BYLINE: Avis Thomas-Lester, Washington Post Staff Writer

BODY:

Four people were killed in as many hours in three shootings last night in the District, including a 17-year-old youth who was killed in an argument over a schoolyard basketball game. A man allegedly was shot in the back by a plainclothes police officer, and three others were injured in other violence.

The violence included seven shootings and a stabbing.

Last night's homicides brought the number of dead in the city so far this year to 159, police said, compared with 138 this time last year.

The violence started at 6:30 p.m. when the teenager was shot after arguing with a group of youths during a pickup basketball game near Fort Totten Drive and Hamilton Street NE, police said.

"This flowed out of wolfing over a basketball game," said D.C. police homicide Lt. William Corboy, last night's watch commander. "The players talk on the court, and this time it took on a life of its own."

The dead youth was identified as Wayne Devon Walker, of the 100 block of Varnum Street NE. He died at Washington Hospital Center of complications from multiple gunshot wounds to the upper body, authorities said.

Ninety minutes later, two men were shot multiple times in a robbery in an alley in the 900 block of 21st Street NE. Both men were taken to D.C. General Hospital, where they were pronounced dead. They were identified as Cermontin Hickman, 25, of the 5000 block of Ayres Place SE, and Rodney Wilson, 19, of the 2100 block of Maryland Avenue NE.

About 9:50 p.m., a man was shot in the head in the 5800 block of Southern Avenue SE. The victim, identified as John Henderson, 19, of the same address, was pronounced dead a short time later, police said.

As police were investigating that shooting, a man allegedly was shot by a 5th District plainclothes tactical unit officer in the Edgewood Terrace complex in Northeast Washington.

Details of the police shooting were sketchy last night. A 5th District watch commander referred calls to the public information office, which was closed. A police supervisor said the man was in guarded condition.

A police source who did not want to be identified said the man was shot in the back by the officer. The source said the officer, whose name was not released, told investigators the man pulled a gun on him. The plainclothes officer was in the area conducting an undercover operation with several other officers. The investigation into the shooting will be handled by the 5th District, where the officer works, police said.

After the shooting, an area in a clearing between buildings in the complex was roped off by yellow police tape while officers interviewed witnesses. A police helicopter flew overhead, and a canine unit was on the scene. Plainclothes officers blocked off part of Edgewood Avenue.

In other violence, a man was stabbed in the back at 11:20 p.m. on First Street NW, authorities said. Then, just before midnight, police responded to a call reporting shootings in the Savannah Terrace complex in Southeast Washington. A man and a woman who were together were shot by an unknown assailant, police said. The woman was found in the 2200 block of Savannah Terrace SE and the man around the corner in the 3200 block of 23rd Street SE. Neither was seriously injured, and their names were not released because they are witnesses.

The violence left even seasoned police officers reeling at the thought that with summer may come a bevy of killings.

"When the weather gets warm, there are a lot more people on the street and a lot more opportunities for violence," said Lt. John Davis, last night's 7th District midnight watch commander. "People are outside hanging out. There are more people looking for drugs. You get a lot of things going on in warm weather that can cause us some problems."

HEADLINE: D.C. Girl Slain; Mother Later Is Found Dead; Teen Suspect Accused Of Killing 14-Year-Old

BYLINE: Marcia Davis, Washington Post Staff Writer

BODY:

Just hours after 14-year-old Brittni Maghee's body was found in an alley in a gritty industrial area of Northeast Washington, her mother was found dead, sprawled on the kitchen floor of the apartment the two had shared for the last two years.

D.C. police said last night that Brittni, a student at McKinley High School, was the victim of a homicide and that they had charged another teenage girl with the killing. The death of her mother, Barbara Maghee, 34, did not appear to have been caused by foul play, they said.

Mother and daughter had a troubled relationship, according to neighbors and employees at the Edgewood Terrace Apartments, in the 600 block of Edgewood Street NE.

"It's just strangely coincidental" that they both were found dead yesterday, said Capt. Alan Dreher, head of the D.C. police homicide squad.

Brittni was found dead about noon in an alley in the 400 block of W Street NE. Police said that there was a puncture wound about the size of a dime in her abdomen but that it was not clear whether it was a gunshot or stab wound.

Police would not say whether they knew of a motive for her killing. The juvenile charged in the crime, whom police would not identify because of her age, was arrested at homicide headquarters last night after voluntarily submitting to questioning by detectives. She was charged with second-degree murder, and Dreher said the investigation was continuing.

After Brittni was found, investigators were unable to find her mother. An aunt identified the teenager's body.

It wasn't until shortly after 7:30 p.m., when a neighbor went to check on Barbara Maghee, that the mother was found.

The cause of Barbara Maghee's death was uncertain. But police said the death was being investigated by a squad of detectives who normally handle cases of suicide or natural or accidental death.

Neighbors said Maghee had told them that Brittni was staying away from home and hanging out with a bad crowd. Residents of the apartments and building employees said the mother and daughter were going through a difficult time in their relationship.

Barbara Maghee "was having a lot of problems with her daughter," said a neighbor, who described herself as a friend of the family and spoke on the condition that she not be identified. "Just last night she called and asked my husband to help her find her daughter, who she hadn't seen" that day.

Demetrius McCollum, who has been working on building renovations for the last year, said Barbara Maghee also had a pre-teenage son who lived with her.

It could not be learned last night where the son was staying or whether he was in the apartment when his mother died.

Staff writer Avis Thomas-Lester contributed to this report.

HEADLINE: D.C. Victims Identified

BODY:

District police identified three people yesterday who had been slain in recent days in unrelated shootings.

About 1:40 a.m. Wednesday, police went to the 600 block of Edgewood Terrace NE for a reported shooting. They did not find a victim, but a short time later learned that a victim had been driven in a private car from that location to Children's Hospital.

The victim, Floyd R. Bush Jr., 25, of the 4300 block of F Street SE, was pronounced dead about 6 p.m.

About 8 p.m. Tuesday, police went to the 200 block of Division Avenue NE to investigate a report of gunfire. They found Linwood Donnell Lewis, 23, suffering from gunshot wounds. Lewis, of the 200 block of 51st Street NE, was taken to D.C. General Hospital, where he was pronounced dead.

Saturday, police went to the unit block of Seaton Place NW for a reported shooting.

They found Keith Lanier Anderson, 23, suffering from multiple gunshot wounds. Anderson, who lived on that block, was dead at the scene and was taken to the medical examiner's office.

Police said they had no suspects and knew of no motives in the slayings.

HEADLINE: Six injured in hail of gunfire at apartment

BYLINE: FROM WIRE DISPATCHES AND STAFF REPORTS

BODY:

Five men and a toddler were injured yesterday after a gunman opened fire outside a Northeast apartment building.

Four men were shot in front of the building in the 400 block of Edgewood Terrace NE about 6 p.m. when a gunman approached them and opened fire, a Metropolitan Police spokesman said.

Several bullets went into the building, where another man was hit.

A child about 2 years old who was also inside the building received minor injuries to the hand, police said, but it was not clear whether the child was shot or his hand got stuck in a door.

The five men were taken to Washington Hospital Center's MedSTAR unit. One man was shot in the chest and two others in the back. The other two men were shot in the arm. They were expected to be released last night.

HEADLINE: Edgewood residents question renewal;
Some say they see no change

BYLINE: Stephen Dinan; THE WASHINGTON TIMES

BODY:

If it was a notorious urban problem, it could probably be found at the Edgewood Terrace housing complex in Northeast during the 1980s and into this decade.

From chunks of crack-cocaine lying the hallways to gunfights in the neighborhood surrounding the complex, Edgewood had it all.

It also had various good Samaritans, residents and federal and D.C. government helpers doing what they could to preserve a little patch of community in the urban jungle. But the battle was more often lost than won.

When the Community Preservation and Development Corporation, a nonprofit Bethesda organization, in 1995 finally bought the property located south of Catholic University and two blocks off Rhode Island Avenue NE, more than half the apartments were vacant. The field outside was, in one resident's words, "a killing ground."

Many of the units were declared unfit for human habitation and shut down.

Yesterday Edgewood officially opened a new chapter in its history - this one not a piecemeal effort of tutors, Neighborhood Watch and government grants, but a community built from the inside out.

But longtime and new residents alike want to know whether this time will be any different.

Officials at yesterday's open-house ceremony were certainly optimistic.

Ira Peppercorn, an official from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, compared the change at Edgewood to the Israeli-Palestinian agreement signed the day before.

"When you read about what happened here, this was no less of a miracle," he said.

"What has been done here is nothing short of miraculous, and it shows it can be done with hard work when people care," said Marc A. Weiss from the D.C. Department of Housing and Community Development.

What has been done is millions of dollars of remodeling, new security arrangements and an army of social workers to provide counseling, job training and placement and to help with almost any other need residents have.

The complex mixes subsidized public housing with middle-in-come tenants, and most of the services are aimed at "stabilizing" the lower-income residents.

Catholic University teachers come to the complex to offer classes and scholarships available for further study at the university.

But the mix isn't always so happy, as management is finding out.

"Security here is a joke," said Toni Gorhan, 50, who moved into the complex in May. She knew the history of the complex, but family members told her they had heard it had been cleaned up.

After five months she said she can't wait for her lease to be up so she can move her family out.

That's about three months after her friends Kim and Derek Brown plan to leave - also when their lease is up. They even asked about getting out early, but management refused.

The Browns, who both work as payroll specialists, said they were impressed with the advertising package the complex showed them when they were looking to move from North Carolina. Now they just wish management would deliver on their promises to keep people off the grass, to provide the cable television service promised and to have security patrol the complex every hour.

The problem for Edgewood is that the Browns are exactly the type of residents the complex needs, and Leslie A. Steen, president of the development corporation, realizes this.

She said new folks from the neighboring suburbs have different expectations than longtime residents, who know how far the complex has already come.

Ms. Steen said the longtime lower-income residents - the ones who stayed through the bad times because they had nowhere else to go - will join the community with time and help.

But the Browns say something had better change soon.

"In the next five years it's going to revert back unless you do something about it now," Mr. Brown said.

Let me tell you about Victor Shen. Victor is a 16 year old Junior who is one of more than 30 million American children who are now online because of the e-rate. Victor lives in Whittier Alaska-an island off of the coast of Alaska that is cut off from the rest of the world for 6 months out of the year because of its remote location and severe weather. Victor was cut off from commerce, cut off from transportation, cut off from society, and cut off from pursuing his dream to become a famous mathematician - but, thanks to the erate, Victor's school is now connected to the Internet and Victor is now connected to learning and connected to his dream. Victor wanted to grow up to be a mathematician. But his teachers didn't have the best resources to teach him nor could they afford an Internet connection to connect Victor to his dream. But thanks to the E-rate, Victor can realize his dream. The Whittier Community School is now online because of the 90% discount they received from the E-rate. Now the E-Rate and the Internet are helping send Victor to Australia. He found and applied to the People to People Student Ambassador Program online and now he will be able to travel far beyond his small village of Whittier and now he has become part of the global village. The E-Rate has enabled Victor and all the students of the Whittier Community School to expand the walls of the classroom and see all the wonderful opportunities that lie beyond Whittier.

The event will likely be in DC and as you know, is scheduled for Wednesday.

If the sites vet out, the location of Wednesday event will likely be a Community Technology Center rather then a school. A sub group of Tom Kalil, Kris and Partick will vet a list of possible sites submitted by DOEd.

We would like the site to have racial diversity and a range of ages.

Once the list is reduced to 5 sites, by cob today, Advance will send people out tomorrow to view the sites.

The goal is to do a Community Tech center that is sponsored by a coalition of companies and organizations. Keeping the speaking program to a minimum may be a problem since we expect Congressional and Cabinet interest in this issue.

Loretta will call another meeting on Monday.

The Vieques (sp?) video today will be in the Map Room.

2) Robb Photo Op - (Tues) I spoke with Chuck this morning. He was going to try and talk w/JDP today to determine whether we should do the meeting and if so, how best to arrange. He suggested possibly having JDP host the meeting w/an optional BC drop by. I will await your word.

3) Digital Divide (Wed)- The computer tech centers do not work logistically; lack of visual and/or vetting problems. We are looking at Ballou High School and Hine Junior High School (Both in DC). Both are good tech stories. If you need more info, let me know and I can send you up the background info on both. Loretta is going to call a meeting today to finalize the site/format of event. I think it is at 4:00 pm in her office.

Thanks.

As the President mentioned in his State of the Union Address, one of the year's major priorities for the Clinton-Gore Administration concerns access to our breathtaking technological advances. Computers and the internet are transforming our society, but not everyone is sharing equally in the opportunities they promise. "We must close the digital divide between those who've got the tools and those who don't," the President said. I'm writing to identify people interested in working more closely on this issue, and helping me to understand how we can most effectively ensure that people with disabilities have equal access to digital technology.

If you are interested in joining in this endeavor, please reply to this email with your name, organizational affiliation (if you don't have one, that's fine too), home town, and a phone number where I can reach you. If you'd like, I invite you to write a brief description of who you are and your interests in technology. Thanks.

TEXT:
Dear Mr. Young,

I'm very interested in closing the digital divide. I have an adopted child with Fetal Alcohol Spectrum, Central Auditory Processing Disorder and Sensory Integration Disorder, and much of what I know about what to do for her has come through my use of the internet.

I live in a rural area, and my doctors couldn't even tell me of one other family dealing with disabilities like my child's. Neither could our school district. The ARC knew of no other such families in our county (b)(6). I felt completely alone in figuring out what to do.

What about all of the parents out there who feel as isolated with their child's disabilities as I did before I discovered the internet, who can't afford the metro phone line, the computer equipment, and the internet service, not to mention the training to learn how to use it all?

Since going online, I was able to link up with a group called 'FASlink', a listserve for about 300 families raising children like mine. There are also professionals on this list. I can't tell you how much that has done to both educate me on her disabilities and resources and to reduce the isolation I felt in trying to deal with these daily problems.

Also, my daughter, being almost functionally deaf, depends on the computer and the internet for much of her learning. Because she is not mentally retarded, our rural school had no idea about how to teach her, and was essentially punishing her for her disabilities (not being able to understand verbal instructions), so I now homeschool her. I can't imagine how we could do this without the internet.

Also, through the internet, I was able to connect with a federal program which lends captioned videos to people with hearing impairments. Through this, she is now able to watch the same educational videos that her peers at public school watch, but hers are captioned on her reading level. I order these over the internet. They are completely free of charge, but I would not have had access to them had I not had the internet.

In addition to all these things, I discovered, through the internet, a State of Texas Committee that deals with the Prevention of FAS, and have been able to attend their meetings in Austin. (Texas Office for the Prevention of FAS Consortium). Through this means, I feel like I am able to make a difference in preventing other children and families from having to live with these devastating disabilities.

The cost of all this technology is not cheap. Thank God and a cousin at IBM, I've been able to 'get connected'. I would love to help ensure that other children like my daughter have this same life-changing opportunity.

Sincerely,

(b)(6)

Thanks to all of you for responding quickly. You will probably receive this message again in a couple of days as more people request to be involved in this issue, but I wanted to get all of you working right away!

This issue is going to move very fast this spring. Exactly what the President will be doing has yet to take shape, but I want to be prepared to put agenda items on the table. Soon I'd like to set up some meetings/conference calls. In the meantime, I need the following:

I am looking for examples of programs/policies all across the country that are doing innovative things in promoting digital access for people with disabilities. This could be technological innovations in non-visual access, or programs to get computers to people who are unable to forward them, for example donation projects.

What will be most helpful are concise descriptions, no more than a paragraph. If you want to provide more detailed background information, that's fine. But if I and/or someone else can't get a good grasp of the program or project in a paragraph, pages and pages of description, however well done, will not really help.

This programs could be ones you're directly affiliated or ones that you know about. Feel free to forward this email on to someone who you feel may be better able to write a summary description if it's something you're aware of, but not directly involved with.

USDA wants to be included in this and they should as we talked about prior. They have a natural connect as rural America is often underrepresented and needs to be wired to the rest of America. I think it is a natural component to our message. Below is USDA info for background:

DIGITAL DIVIDE

As advances in computers and telecommunication drive the growth of e-commerce, USDA is leading the effort to close the growing rural digital divide.

However, there is a glaring lack of publicity about current USDA initiatives that are underway, which is why USDA needs POTUS to amplify what we are doing.

USDA agencies already have significant initiatives underway: for example, RUS is the sole provider of telecommunications access to several Native American Reservations and has both loan and grant funds available to assist rural communities in addressing the "access" issue; CSREES has initiatives underway to educate youth about computers; OSDBU is working with small business owners to involve them in e-commerce. At the same time, The Service Center Agencies are working to enable farmers to do business with the agency electronically.

Although RUS financed facilities are some of the most advanced telecommunications infrastructure in rural America, many rural areas are not served by RUS borrowers. There is also a new type of rural digital divide regarding local televison service, which is the subject of current Congressional legislation.

HEADLINE: Teen Killed on Bus Was 'Random' Target; Police Say Attacker Was on Street

BYLINE: David Montgomery; Valerie Strauss, Washington Post Staff Writers

BODY:

Teddy Garvin, a 17-year-old Ballou High School senior shot to death as he sat on a Metro bus Friday evening, was the victim of an unprovoked, random act of violence, police said yesterday.

Appealing to the public for help in identifying suspects in the shooting, police yesterday sketched this account of what they believe happened:

Garvin was on his way to his girlfriend's house on an evening so fresh the windows were open on the A2 bus he often rode. The bus had paused to pick up passengers when a hand holding a gun suddenly reached in the window. There was loud bang.

It was not clear to occupants of the bus what had happened, police said. Hearing the noise, the driver asked whether everyone was all right. After being reassured that the roughly 40 passengers were fine, the driver pulled away in the 4200 block of Wheeler Road SE and drove another nine or 10 minutes before someone reported that the young man sitting nearby had slumped over.

Garvin was pronounced dead a short time later at D.C. General Hospital.

"Yes, it was a random shooting," Lt. Willie Dandridge, of the D.C. police department, said at a news conference yesterday. Dandridge declined to say what evidence supported that view but emphasized that police believe Garvin was not a specific target.

The violence shocked operators of the Metro system, who could not recall a similar incident.

Automated Records Management System
Hex-Dump Conversion

"We provide one of the safest transportation environments in the world," said Polly Hanson, deputy chief of the Metro Transit Police. "We don't have people running up to bus windows shooting in."

Garvin--an athlete who, according to his family, planned to enter Howard University next year on a tennis scholarship--was struck by a bullet in the right armpit as he sat next to the window near the rear of the bus on the right side.

Dandridge offered no motive for the shooting in the Barnaby Terrace neighborhood. When a reporter at the news conference asked whether a member of a gang active in that section of the city could have fired the gun, Dandridge called it a "possibility" but said police are considering almost any scenario.

"Right now, everything is a possibility," he said.

Talk of gangs does not apply to Garvin, Dandridge emphasized. "To our knowledge, he was not involved in any kind of criminal activity," he said.

Just before boarding the bus about 7:15 p.m., Garvin called his girlfriend, Shauna Lowery, 20, from a pay phone at Greater Southeast Community Hospital near the bus stop. He told her he was on his way, and he asked whether their son, Teddy Jr., was ready for a planned visit to Garvin's father's home in Northeast.

The young man didn't know it, but Lowery planned to surprise him by showing that "T.J.," 8 months old, could take his first few steps on his own.

"Boo, I hear the bus," Garvin told Lowery. "I love you."

Family and friends gathered to mourn and remember yesterday in the yellow house with brown shutters on Ninth Street SE where Levelle Garvin, the young man's grandmother, raised him and his three brothers.

"It's still unbelievable," said Angela Garvin, one of Garvin's aunts. "He was the last person you would think something like this would happen to."

The family's anguish was deepened when investigators initially misidentified the victim as Samuel Garvin--Teddy's younger brother. Believing the police, the family thought Samuel was dead Friday night--until he called home. When Teddy was unaccounted for, the family stayed up much of the night praying for him, unable to get answers from the hospital, police or the morgue. Police continued to identify the victim as Samuel in public statements until yesterday afternoon.

Teddy Garvin was described by those who knew him as talented and energetic. Darrell Watson, director of the Ballou marching band, in which Garvin played trumpet, said: "Teddy was an exceptional young man. . . . He was well known around the school, friendly and outgoing. He was a true motivator, a good friend and an excellent student."

Garvin played in the local Arthur Ashe tennis program, and when he wasn't playing, he liked to teach the sport to his young cousins or watch it on television.

Lowery said Garvin played an active role in raising their son. He said he used to joke that once T.J. could walk, he would teach the boy how to play tennis.

"He never got to see him walk," Lowery said.

Ballou High School senior Teddy Garvin, 17, shown in a two-year-old photograph, was shot Friday night on a Metro bus in Southeast Washington.

Jen and Dori,

As you can imagine, I've already received enormous interest regarding this trip. Many on-line press orgs would like to go on the trip. Others, including on-line print and online networks, have also requested POTUS interviews. I would like to go on this and help coordinate some our "on the road" on-line efforts if possible.

let's discuss when the time comes closer.

thanks.

TEXT:
Hi Jonathan,

My name is (b)(6) and I am the president of an information and advocacy group for those with the silent disabilities CFIDS, Fibromyalgia, Myologic Encephalitis, Chemical Sensitivities and other Chronic Immune Dysfunction illnesses. I also help out when I am able at the online information group Co-Cure.

One of the enormous problems we face in our patient community is both the isolation and lack of information that our illnesses cause due to many of us being forced to be homebound AND the lack of instruction and information updates to our primary care physicians - many of us cannot afford to go to immunologists or other specialists.

Online access allows the patient population to share resources, act as support, and even provides us ways to live on our limited disability (if we are lucky enough to have one) income. Everything from "freebies" to small jobs that can be done are shared.

I am VERY interested in this project, as some of us have been trying to get refurbished computers sent to people in local support groups. Our very large goal is to have at least one "wired" person per county ...to connect us to the world. Right now most of the research about these illnesses, of which CFIDS alone has by CPC's conservative estimate represents over 800,000 men, women and children, is being done in other countries as the NIH has not even decided WHERE to place this "class one emerging illness" since the congressional funds misappropriation fiasco Dr William Reeves brought to light at the CDC.

A little more about me - I am a former medical technologist, medical researcher, then medical marketing person whose final job was with HPGenentech when I became so ill I could not function. It took me two years after that, until 1988, to be diagnosed. I am becoming more homebound, in more nerve pain (from demylinazation) and less functional as time goes on and rely on my computer as a lifeline.

Thank you for reading this far, please look at the websites below. I look forward to working on this project.

(b)(6)

President, Wecan

I would also invite the following: Leahy, Biden (apparently they're introducing their own digital divide bill), Feinstein, Boxer, McCain, Frist, and Breux.

And if Novelle (sp?) is coming, I'd invite Senators Hatch and Bennett (Novelle is a big Utah company and it can't really hurt us to have them there.

If this is too many, let me know.

*The President will be doing a digital divide event at a local high school on Wednesday. Please review the draft list of Members of Congress to invite (we have 20 slots for this event). Although no Members on the speaking program right now, we can certainly address this at the next meeting--but, the Communications office would like to keep the speaking program to a minimum because of the large student crowd at the event (500 of the 700 people in the audience will be students). Please send me your suggestions ASAP so that Chuck can approve this evening and calls can go out shortly after.

The current list includes select Senate Members, Delegate Norton, CHC & CBC.

On Wednesday, the President will announce funding in the budget to address the digital divide. This announcement will take place in at a local highschool. Information will be forthcoming on the specifics for the invite. We have 140 seats for business, civil rights and education groups. Please coordinate with Jay on the number of seats you will need. Once you have confirmed your attendees, you will have to send the list to Jay - name and organization is all that is required.

HEADLINE: Teen Killed on Bus Was 'Random' Target; Police Say Attacker Was on Street

BYLINE: David Montgomery; Valerie Strauss, Washington Post Staff Writers

BODY:

Teddy Garvin, a 17-year-old Ballou High School senior shot to death as he sat on a Metro bus Friday evening, was the victim of an unprovoked, random act of violence, police said yesterday.

Appealing to the public for help in identifying suspects in the shooting, police yesterday sketched this account of what they believe happened:

Garvin was on his way to his girlfriend's house on an evening so fresh the windows were open on the A2 bus he often rode. The bus had paused to pick up passengers when a hand holding a gun suddenly reached in the window. There was loud bang.

It was not clear to occupants of the bus what had happened, police said. Hearing the noise, the driver asked whether everyone was all right. After being reassured that the roughly 40 passengers were fine, the driver pulled away in the 4200 block of Wheeler Road SE and drove another nine or 10 minutes before someone reported that the young man sitting nearby had slumped over.

Garvin was pronounced dead a short time later at D.C. General Hospital.

"Yes, it was a random shooting," Lt. Willie Dandridge, of the D.C. police department, said at a news conference yesterday. Dandridge declined to say what evidence supported that view but emphasized that police believe Garvin was not a specific target.

The violence shocked operators of the Metro system, who could not recall a similar incident.

"We provide one of the safest transportation environments in the world," said Polly Hanson, deputy chief of the Metro Transit Police. "We don't have people running up to bus windows shooting in."

Garvin--an athlete who, according to his family, planned to enter Howard University next year on a tennis scholarship--was struck by a bullet in the right armpit as he sat next to the window near the rear of the bus on the right side.

Dandridge offered no motive for the shooting in the Barnaby Terrace neighborhood. When a reporter at the news conference asked whether a member of a gang active in that section of the city could have fired the gun, Dandridge called it a "possibility" but said police are considering almost any scenario.

"Right now, everything is a possibility," he said.

Talk of gangs does not apply to Garvin, Dandridge emphasized. "To our knowledge, he was not involved in any kind of criminal activity," he said.

Just before boarding the bus about 7:15 p.m., Garvin called his girlfriend, Shauna Lowery, 20, from a pay phone at Greater Southeast Community Hospital near the bus stop. He told her he was on his way, and he asked whether their son, Teddy Jr., was ready for a planned visit to Garvin's father's home in Northeast.

The young man didn't know it, but Lowery planned to surprise him by showing that "T.J.," 8 months old, could take his first few steps on his own.

"Boo, I hear the bus," Garvin told Lowery. "I love you."

Family and friends gathered to mourn and remember yesterday in the yellow house with brown shutters on Ninth Street SE where Levelle Garvin, the young man's grandmother, raised him and his three brothers.

"It's still unbelievable," said Angela Garvin, one of Garvin's aunts. "He was the last person you would think something like this would happen to."

The family's anguish was deepened when investigators initially misidentified the victim as Samuel Garvin--Teddy's younger brother. Believing the police, the family thought Samuel was dead Friday night--until he called home. When Teddy was unaccounted for, the family stayed up much of the night praying for him, unable to get answers from the hospital, police or the morgue. Police continued to identify the victim as Samuel in public statements until yesterday afternoon.

Teddy Garvin was described by those who knew him as talented and energetic. Darrell Watson, director of the Ballou marching band, in which Garvin played trumpet, said: "Teddy was an exceptional young man. . . . He was well known around the school, friendly and outgoing. He was a true motivator, a good friend and an excellent student."

Garvin played in the local Arthur Ashe tennis program, and when he wasn't playing, he liked to teach the sport to his young cousins or watch it on television.

Lowery said Garvin played an active role in raising their son. He said he used to joke that once T.J. could walk, he would teach the boy how to play tennis.

"He never got to see him walk," Lowery said.

Ballou High School senior Teddy Garvin, 17, shown in a two-year-old photograph, was shot Friday night on a Metro bus in Southeast Washington.

FYI - all VA sites were taken off b/c of desire to stay in DC. The tech centers in DC either had vetting problems, were part of public housing sites or did not work logistically. Also, please keep Karen T. and Michele Ballantyne in the loop as John has a vested interest in this event. You should add Michele to your meeting distribution lists if she is not already on. Thomas Kalil is the main poc for this event and he has been helpful.

CNN Moneyline Interview - they would like to do this interview on site after event, so that hopefully they focus on digital divide. I told Caleb to look for a room.

One other note: Stephanie Cutter is inviting the Illinois woman who emailed the President after SOTU. Potus read her comment and wanted her included in a tech event. She could not make it to the Quincy event, so they are going to bring her here and have her meet him quickly in the Oval before departure and have her ride over in the motorcade to the event site.

Thanks.

Potential sites for POTU Digital Divide Event

1) America's Promise PowerUp Sites:
Contact: Alicia Keck, 703-535-3808 or 831-431-1390, www.powerup.org.

PowerUP is a major national initiative launched by more than a dozen nonprofit organizations, major corporations and federal agencies to help ensure that America's underserved young people acquire the skills, experiences and resources they need to succeed in the digital age. The goal of PowerUP is to use innovative approaches to bridge the digital divide that separates the "haves" and "have-nots" in their access to computers, technology and online resources. Established as a nonprofit organization, PowerUP grew from an initial $10 million grant from the Case Foundation. PowerUP has created partnerships with AOL and the AOL Foundation, the Waitt Family Foundation, the Corporation for National Service, PowerBar Inc., Sun Microsystems, Family Education Network and many youth serving organizations including the YMCA of the USA, Boys and Girls Clubs of America, National Urban League, Communities in Schools, U.S. Department of Education, and Save the Children. Based in schools, community centers and other locations across the country, PowerUP will not only provide young people with access to the wide range of content and information on the Internet; it will also help foster positive youth development through the use of technology. PowerUP is committed to delivering both in real time and virtual time the Five Promises identified by America's Promise that, if consistently fulfilled, will significantly increase the chances of youth becoming successful adults. The Five Promises are:

- An ongoing relationship with a caring adult;
- Safe places and structured activities;
- A healthy start;
- A marketable skill through effective education; and
- An opportunity to give back through community service.

Currently, PowerUP has four pilot affiliates located in San Jose, CA, Seattle, WA, Alexandria, VA and Washington, DC. During the year 2000, PowerUP plans to expand to 250 affiliates with the eventual target of reaching thousands of centers in years to come.

- Alexandria, VA site: The Gum Springs Community Center PowerUP site will serve children in the Route One corridor of Alexandria and will help alleviate the "digital divide" that currently exists between children who have access to computers at home and those who do not. The Center will enable children to complete their homework utilizing the resources of the computer, engage in academic research and explore the larger world of the Internet in an adult-supervised environment. Gum Springs is a very diverse and densely populated area of Fairfax County. Approximately 3,863 residents make up the Gum Springs community, of which 993 are youth under the age of 18. The community center is equipped with arts and crafts room, gymnasium, child care and senior centers, and a museum focusing on the history of the Gum Springs community.

- Washington, D.C. site: This PowerUP site is located in the offices of a 155-unit subsidized housing complex called Southern Ridge in Anacostia, an extremely underserved inner-city Washington, D.C. neighborhood. PowerUP staff are focused on complementing and expanding computer programs at the surrounding schools and introducing and enhancing computer skills for children at the afterschool program located in the housing development. The site is staffed by four AmeriCorps*VISTA members: a trained clown and balloon sculptor; a musician; an anthropologist, and a retired lawyer looking to change careers. The AmeriCorps*VISTA members are supervised by the YMCA of Metropolitan Washington. The property is owned by Community Preservation and Development Corporation (CPDC), a non-profit 501c3 developer of affordable housing. CPDC provides and supports community technology programs at many of its sites in the Washington, DC metro area. The Case Foundation is the local partner for the Washington, D.C. site, in addition to the Foundation's role as the primary National Benefactor to PowerUP.

2) Foundation for Educational Innovation -- DC Link & Learn
401 M Street, SW, Suite 1, 2nd. Floor (Waterside Mall)
Contact: Archie Prileaw, 554-7400, X236

DC Link and Learn is the nation's first Family Technology One Stop, created to move communities from dependency to self-sufficiency through the use of technologies and the Internet. They operate a 40,000 square feet, state-of-the-art center from 9am to 8pm, 6 days a week. The Department of Commerce, GSA and the Department of Labor have been key funders and supporter and Xerox, Sprint, Nortel Networks, and Earth Data (GIS) have provided products and staff. Established in November 1998, DC Link & Learn mission was to create public/private partnerships that could train young people in high to low tech applications. During their first year, more than 1,000 people received training within the center.

3) Community Technology Centers Network

The National Science Foundation supported CTCNet contains a network of more than 250 community technology centers where people get access to computers and computer-related technology, such as the Internet. CTCNet was the federal government's first investment in developing and building capacity among CTCs, mainly through technical assistance and research.

- Calvary Bilingual Multicultural Learning Center (CBMLC)
  1420 Columbia Rd. NW
  Washington DC 20009
  202-332-4200
  Beatriz (BB) Otero, Executive Director

This grassroots nonprofit in the Columbia Heights neighborhood was given a very large building (70,000 square feet) by Bell Atlantic, a few years ago. They are refurbishing the building to provide "arts-centered" daycare and services to school-age children.

In 1997 they received a grant of Power Mac computers from the CTCNet/Apple partnership. They also have a Windows computer lab set up. BB (pronounced "bee-bee") Otero is one of the respected leaders of the Latino community here in DC. She is accustomed to giving tours of the center to dignitaries. Last year the Duchess of York and Secretary Shalala stopped by for a tour.

The big excitement at CBMLC is that the new Columbia Heights subway station will be opening up just a block away from CBMLC, creating all kinds of new economic opportunities for the neighborhood. While focussed on children, CBMLC does plan to put a culinary school into the basement of the building, to serve the vocational needs of the adult population of the neighborhood. They're also building a playground on the large roof of the building.

Located close to the Rhode Island Avenue subway stop, in northeast DC, Edgewood Terrace was not long ago a haven for heroin dealers. CPDC has been able to achieve great gains at this facility. One interesting facet of their technology trainings is that adults who complete the technology trainings offered by CPDC get to keep the computer they were trained on. CPDC focusses their trainings on the Microsoft Office suite of programs, with a particular emphasis on Access, the database program.

One World Media Center is a new nonprofit video and multimedia training center in Adams Morgan, the most culturally diverse neighborhood of the city. One World's mission is to train city residents to become their own video producers. The organization rents out high quality video cameras for $25/day and provides access to three video editing suites at a very nominal cost.

Interestingly enough, in the summer of 1998, One World found itself in a position to assist Chancellor Schroeder, from Germany, with a video project he needed help with. Wanting to capture on video his visit to the White House, during his campaign for office, Chancellor Schroeder's staff hired One World staff member Endale Getahun, a talented young video producer from Ethiopia, to do the filming. Endale Getahun uses the One World facility to produce a weekly television show, Ethiopian Cultural Television, which is much adored by the 40,000 Ethiopians in the DC metro area.

One World has also been very fortunate to have formed strong partnerships with two for-profit companies: Interactive Applications Group, and HomeQuest. Interactive Applications Group company provides One World, at no charge, a web site that would otherwise cost over $10,000. HomeQuest, a new startup providing video tours of real estate over the web, has donated several hundred megabytes of web space to One World to house QuickTime and RealVideo clips from One World producers. Thanks to the generosity of both of these companies, One World has been able to develop an exemplary web site. Currently talks are underway with Bell Atlantic to bring high speed Internet access into One World. http://www.iapps.com http://www.homequest.net

They are a 501(c)3 non-profit organization which collaborates with other DC organizations to provide services to inner city residents. The main service they provide is computer training for unemployed and under-employed DC area adults and youth in order to increase their skill sets and marketability. They take responsibility for equipment setup and maintenance, software procurement and installation, and curriculum development, as well as volunteer teacher recruitment, training, and supervision. All of their services are free of charge. The seven partner organizations and sites that they work with provide classroom/lab space, recruit students, and are responsible for security. They have also begun to provide job placement services to our graduates in partnership with Jubilee Jobs. Plus, they act as mentors for 44 interns to assist in their long term educational and employment goals.

Mission Statement: CCM fosters children's love of learning by encouraging exploration, creativity, imagination, expression and discovery. The museum gives all children the opportunity to realize their pontential by giving them the freedom to learn in their own way, at their own pace. CCM and its programs champion the work of parents, guardians and educators, as they join their children in the adventure.
Museum History: Capital Children's Museum is housed in an adapted old building that is full of character, discovery and growth. Once a convent and home for the poor and aged, the building now has hundreds of children exploring the hallways, rooms and interactive exhibits daily. The museum opened its doors to the public at its new location in 1979 with Mexico and within the same year Changing Environments opened. The Mouse Pad (originally named the Future Center) opened in 1981 as the country's first public access computer classroom. The world of animation came to CCM in 1993 with the opening of Chuck Jones: An Animated Life. In 1998 the CMA Chemical Science Center was added and in November 1999 Japan: Through the Eyes of a Child opened bringing the culture of the Far East to Washington. In the past two years the museum formed a partnership with GSA to get surplus Federal computers for a computer lab room set up on the 3rd floor of the museum.

CCM distinguishes itself as being the first CTCNet affiliate in the DC metro area, and served as the host site of the 1995 CTCNet All Affiliates conference.

Novell sponsored a program initiated by FEI at Ballou High School. As a Novell Education Academic Partner (NEAP-secondary) site, Ballou is able to provide real-world, leading-edge training and Certified Novell Administrator (CNA) certification to prepare students for the job market and allow them access to well-paying careers. To assist Ballou in becoming a Novell Education Academic Partner (NEAP), Novell sponsored all the necessary teacher training, software and materials. As a result of these efforts, several Ballou High School graduates today have jobs managing computer networksCreated in 1992, the NEAP program was Novell's and the entire information technology industry's pioneer training program for bringing vendor training to colleges, universities, and trade schools. The NEAP-Secondary program enables participating non-profit secondary schools to offer Novell-authorized classes, providing high school students an opportunity to prepare for Novell's globally recognized technical certification, the CNA. Since the programs inception in February, 1996, Novell Education reports 183 high schools currently enrolled in the program, with a projected 500 schools participating by the end of the 1998 academic year. This accounts for approximately 25,000 students who will take the NetWare 4 Administration course in a high school environment in the coming academic year. There are currently over 335 NEAP organizations worldwide offering training to over 40,000 students per year.

The pioneer in information technology education programs, Novell Education has been certifying industry and network professionals since 1986. Worldwide, there are currently 180,000 CNAs; 120,000 Certified Novell Engineers (CNEs); 7,000 Master CNEs; and 5,000 Certified Novell Instructors (CNIs).

Founded in 1983, Novell (NASDAQ: NOVL) is the world's leading provider of network software. The company offers a wide range of network solutions for distributed network, Internet, Intranet and small-business markets. Novell Education and technical support programs are the most comprehensive in the network computing industry. Information about Novell's complete range of products and services can be accessed on the World Wide Web at http://www.novell.com.

5) Microsft Sites:

- TechWorld Public Charter School, Washington, DC: Awarded $15,000 + $123,000 in software (FMV)

TechWorld is a public charter school based in Washington, DC which provides its students with the academic skills necessary to attend college, the business skills to be an entrepreneur and the technical skills required to be employable in the 21st century. Using a challenging curriculum that focuses on technology skills, the school is creating a TechWorld Cyber-Learning Center, an after-school program that will serve 250 students between age 15 and 17 from low to moderate income families. This grant will pay for the lease of 35 computers that the students will use to learn a wide range of technology skills, including web design, graphics, internet, system integration and networking.

- College Bound, Washington, DC: Awarded $15,000

College Bound provides comprehensive assistance to low-income high school students from the District of Columbia interested in pursuing a college education. To supplement its offerings, College Bound will use this grant to add technological resources to the College Preparation Center. Internet access will allow students and parents to research colleges, complete applications electronically, research scholarships and apply for financial aid. In addition to the computers that will be available at College Bound's main office, funds will be used to purchase portable computers which will allow staff to provide this service to students in other low-income neighborhoods in the District.

- Woodson High School, Washington, DC: Awarded $8,000

Awarded to Woodson High School, DC to introduce and educate over 250 students in the use of computers, information technologies and business practices. The funds allowed the school to expand computer lab resources and allowed them to provide the their students with the latest software applications and access to the Internet. This lab was intended to serve as a model for the DC school system that operates in one of the highest crime areas in the country.

6) Cisco Networking Academies:
The Cisco Networking Academy program is a complete, four-semester program on the principles and practice of designing, building, and maintaining networks capable of supporting national and global organizations. The Networking Academy program is localized to individual needs of high schools and colleges, and features hands-on, project-driven training in high-demand job skills.

Their new Web site is an important aspect of Hine's emphasis on using technology to reach higher standards. Hine is a local leader in the use of technology. As Hine continues to implement its Technology Integration Program, they would like to be seen as a national technology leader. This has been a very successful year for Hine Junior High School. Hine students and teachers have received numerous awards. They have upgraded their school's networking infrastructure and classroom computers and printers. Hine students met with President Clinton and Surgeon General Satcher at the White House in May. Vice President Albert Gore visited Hine on Kick Butts Day in April. Speaker Newt Gingrich visited Hine in March to donate several computers. General Colin Powell visited Hine in December to report on the progress of the America's Promise campaign. Students have written selections on the website and developed Web pages. Publishing material on the Web site is being integrated into all aspects of the Hine program. Preparing material for our Web site will be an important part of our academic program. Their technology integration program could not have succeeded to this point without help from others. The DC Public Schools Management Information Services organization provides the Internet connection, router, and etherswitch. The Department of Transportation has donated computers. Cisco Systems, Inc. has donated $20,000 worth of equipment and technical support. Hughes/STX has provided volunteer services and computers. Northern Telecom (Nortel) donated computers. The Department of Housing and Urban Development also donated computers. Future Networking, Inc. (FutureNET) has provided technical support and staff development services. Many other organizations and individuals also have contributed to the Hine Technology Integration Program. Their website will provide students an opportunity to publish material. The site also will provide teachers with an opportunity to communicate using Web publishing as part of their classroom activities and to structure collaborative Internet-based learning activities.

On Wednesday, the President will announce funding in the budget to address the digital divide. This announcement will take place in at a local highschool. Information will be forthcoming on the specifics for the invite. We have 140 seats for business, civil rights and education groups. Please coordinate with Jay on the number of seats you will need. Once you have confirmed your attendees, you will have to send the list to Jay - name and organization is all that is required.

*The President will be doing a digital divide event at a local high school on Wednesday. Please review the draft list of Members of Congress to invite (we have 20 slots for this event). Although no Members on the speaking program right now, we can certainly address this at the next meeting--but, the Communications office would like to keep the speaking program to a minimum because of the large student crowd at the event (500 of the 700 people in the audience will be students). Please send me your suggestions ASAP so that Chuck can approve this evening and calls can go out shortly after.

The current list includes select Senate Members, Delegate Norton, CHC & CBC.

DIGITAL DIVIDE

As advances in computers and telecommunication drive the growth of e-commerce, USDA is leading the effort to close the growing rural digital divide.

However, there is a glaring lack of publicity about current USDA initiatives that are underway, which is why USDA needs POTUS to amplify what we are doing.

USDA agencies already have significant initiatives underway: for example, RUS is the sole provider of telecommunications access to several Native American Reservations and has both loan and grant funds available to assist rural communities in addressing the "access" issue; CSREES has initiatives underway to educate youth about computers; OSDBU is working with small business owners to involve them in e-commerce. At the same time, The Service Center Agencies are working to enable farmers to do business with the agency electronically.

Although RUS financed facilities are some of the most advanced telecommunications infrastructure in rural America, many rural areas are not served by RUS borrowers. There is also a new type of rural digital divide regarding local televison service, which is the subject of current Congressional legislation.

Jonathan:

I hope that you have heard that I, and the American Foundation for the Blind, are extremely interested in addressing the very seriousdigital divide facing people with disabilities. I made just this point at the Digital Divide Summit last December, where I participated on one of the breakout panels. Unfortunately, I remain dismayed at the near total lack of interest among policy leaders and principal civic orgs in the access challenges facing people with disabilities in using new technologies. With the almost sole exception of Bill Kennard, there is little coming from leaders in government or major ors about these challenges.

I am sitting here now watching the new PBS series on the Digitla Divide. Again, no mentin of disability. It's as if only money and demographics (urban/rural) matter. Those things do matter, but you and I know that technology design and attitudes held by those in power in the tech industry are posing real barriers for those with disabilities.

I addresz just this subject in a short piece I wrote for our new magazine "AccessWorld: Technology for Consumers with Visual Impairments" published by AFB. That will be the subject of my Editor's page in March, along with an article on the NFB suit against AOL.

Congress, FCC, DOJ and DOC have opportunities right now to do something. FCC has NOI out, we responded that Sec. 255 needs to be seen as covering communications technologies in the broadest sense. Administration support would be welcome. DOJ can, and should, clarify how aspects of Web sites and INternet communication are covered by the ADA with clear explanations of how little the burden is on those who provide access. DOC, and the New Markets initiative also must address universal design, along with the other themes being addressed. And, we need to push Congress to understand this aspect of the digital divide. Design can be inclusive or it can be exclusive. It may well be that exclusive design comes from ignorance of the needs of people with disabilities. Well, let's address that, law will help and voluntary initiatives like WAI do too.

Well, I guess I'm a bit frustrated. But, le'ts work at it and see what we can do. We've got a year with good folks we know, maybe more years, but let's make the best of this one.

The digital divide event is this wednesday 10:45 - 11:45 am. We are looking at 2 sites in DC: Ballou High School and Lemon G. Hine Junior High School, both with successful tech programs. Heather Davis from our office is scheduling this event. We are aiming to have a diverse audience (ethnicity and age) in picture/audience. Loretta is calling a 4:00 pm meeting today in her office to discuss details; it would be great if you or someone from your office could attend.

Thanks.

On Wednesday, the President will announce funding in the budget to address the digital divide. This announcement will take place in at a local highschool. Information will be forthcoming on the specifics for the invite. We have 140 seats for business, civil rights and education groups. Please coordinate with Jay on the number of seats you will need. Once you have confirmed your attendees, you will have to send the list to Jay - name and organization is all that is required.

TEXT:
On Wednesday, the President will announce funding in the budget to address the digital divide. This announcement will take place in at a local highschool. Information will be forthcoming on the specifics for the invite. We have 140 seats for business, civil rights and education groups. Please coordinate with Jay on the number of seats you will need. Once you have confirmed your attendees, you will have to send the list to Jay - name and organization is all that is required.

TEXT:
USDA wants to be included in this and they should as we talked about prior. They have a natural connect as rural America is often underrepresented and needs to be wired to the rest of America. I think it is a natural component to our message. Below is USDA info for background:

DIGITAL DIVIDE

As advances in computers and telecommunication drive the growth of e-commerce, USDA is leading the effort to close the growing rural digital divide.

However, there is a glaring lack of publicity about current USDA initiatives that are underway, which is why USDA needs POTUS to amplify what we are doing.

USDA agencies already have significant initiatives underway: for example, RUS is the sole provider of telecommunications access to several Native American Reservations and has both loan and grant funds available to assist rural communities in addressing the "access" issue; CSREES has initiatives underway to educate youth about computers; OSDBU is working with small business owners to involve them in e-commerce. At the same time, The Service Center Agencies are working to enable farmers to do business with the agency electronically.

Although RUS financed facilities are some of the most advanced telecommunications infrastructure in rural America, many rural areas are not served by RUS borrowers. There is also a new type of rural digital divide regarding local televison service, which is the subject of current Congressional legislation.

Subject: Some figures on digital divide in rural areas

To demonstrate how critical digital divide is to students living in rural America, USDA*s RUS pulled together the following numbers. Perhaps the President might want to mention the impact digital divide has on rural students? Sedelta Verble asked me to send you the information that follows:

Of communities under 2,500 population. the Department of Education reports there are 6,596,188 rural students. Increase the population to 25,000 per community and the total goes to 11,624,052 rural students.
