

CLOSE HOLD

TIME OF TRANSMISSION:

TIME OF RECEIPT:

01 JAN 17 PM 7:20

WHITE HOUSE SITUATION ROOM

PRECEDENCE

CLASSIFICATION:

RELEASER: _____

IMMEDIATE

CLOSE HOLD but not classified

DATE/TIME:

1-17-01

MESSAGE #: _____

FROM: Lisel Loy PH: 62702 ROOM: GrF1/WW
SUBJECT: FAREWELL ADDRESS PAGES: 6

PLEASE DELIVER TO:

LOCATION	DELIVER TO	ROOM	PHONE
AIR FORCE 1	To: DOUG BAND FOR THE PRESIDENT (please give Doug 2 copies)
	cc: JOHN PODESTA

SPECIAL DELIVERY INSTRUCTIONS/REMARKS:

CLOSE HOLD

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

January 17, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: TERRY EDMONDS
JEFF SHESOL

CC: JOHN PODESTA

SUBJECT: REVISED DRAFT OF FAREWELL ADDRESS

Attached is a revised draft of your farewell address. We have been working today with Mark Penn, Rahm Emanuel, the NSC and others to sharpen the challenge on globalization, and to tighten the structure of the first half of the speech.

This draft is 893 words long – 200 words shorter than the last. By our calculations, your rate of speaking in Oval Office addresses is 125-130 words per minute. At that pace, this speech will be 6 minutes and 50 seconds long.

* EYES ONLY ****

Draft 01/17/01 7:00pm
Jeff Shesol

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
FAREWELL ADDRESS TO THE NATION
THE OVAL OFFICE
THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON, DC
January 18, 2001

My fellow citizens:

I am speaking to you tonight from the Oval Office, for the last time as your President.

It was eight years ago, on a bright and clear winter's day, that I stood before the nation and spoke my first words as President. I said that we, the people, faced a fundamental choice. When "powerful forces are remaking our world," the question is "whether we can make change our friend and not our enemy." Whether we would fear change or embrace it; whether we would shrink from our future, or face it and shape it.

I posed the challenge; America rose to it. In the past eight years, working together, we have prepared our nation for the 21st Century. We have made this a time of American renewal. We have built a new, information economy. And we begin this new century more united, prosperous, and strong than our nation has ever been.

When Americans look back at these times of great change, I think we will all feel a sense of wonder. Technologies that didn't even exist eight years ago have changed how we live, work, and relate with the world.

This has been an age of transformation – the kind that occurs perhaps once or twice a century. And I think Americans can say with pride that we’ve emerged even stronger; and made sure the greatest benefits have gone to the greater good.

I have said that to steer our ship of state through tides of change, we have to stay true to our enduring values: opportunity for all, responsibility from all, a community of all Americans. That is our nation’s most basic bargain. In all the work I have done as President – every decision I have made, every executive action I have taken, every bill I have proposed and signed – I have sought to apply these principles.

At the start of this new century, America also needed a new kind of government. One that’s smaller, smarter, and, above all, lives within its means. We’ve done that. After decades of deficits, we have put our fiscal house in order, balanced the budget, and set in motion a virtuous cycle. Today, our economy is breaking records – with 22 million new jobs, the lowest unemployment in 30 years, and the longest economic expansion in American history.

But what matters more is that the rising tide of our economy is truly lifting all boats, expanding opportunity for all Americans. We’ve restored hope. And most important, we have put people first again.

I’ve talked a lot tonight about preparing America for the 21st Century. But there’s one thing I haven’t mentioned, and I’ve come to believe it will matter more than any other thing we can do for our country. I’m talking about the way we come to terms with globalization – and redefine our nation’s role in the world.

Looking back at the last eight years, and then looking ahead, I believe that America's security and prosperity depend more than ever on our willingness to lead. This is a remarkable moment in the history of the world. More people live in freedom than ever before. The global economy is creating countless opportunities – making it possible for more of our own people, as well as billions around the world, to work and live and raise their families with dignity.

But as our nation grows more diverse, and the world more interdependent, we face a new set of challenges. Technology and trade, in and of themselves, don't end conflicts among nations. In fact, they can create new ones. The global gap between the haves and have-nots is growing. To dismiss debt and disease and education as "soft" issues is to be blind to hard truths. Global poverty is a powder keg that could be ignited by our indifference.

Some believe we can disentangle ourselves from the world, that we can shield ourselves from the forces we fear. But if we want the global economy to embody our shared values, then our efforts must reflect our shared responsibility. If we want to fulfill the promise of this new millennium, we must embrace – boldly and resolutely – our obligation to lead. To put a human face on the global economy... To work together with our friends and allies... And to embrace, again, the forces of change – so they benefit all peoples in all nations, spurring growth and lifting lives everywhere across the world.

Again, I put the challenge to you, the American people. And I know you will rise to it. I am more confident than ever that our best days lie ahead.

Now, I join all Americans in wishing our next President well in meeting these challenges – in leading freedom's march into this new century. I will always be grateful to you for twice giving me the privilege to serve as your President. Though I will miss this historic house, I will miss – even more – the work I have done here, every day, for the American people.

My days in this office are nearly through; but my days of service are not. In the years ahead, I will never hold a position higher, or a covenant more sacred, than that of President of the United States. But there is no title I will wear more proudly than that of Citizen.

Thank you. God bless you. And God bless America.

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

1-16-01

January 12, 2001

01 JAN 12 PM 4:29

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

FROM: TERRY EDMONDS

THROUGH: JOHN PODESTA

SUBJECT: FINAL DRAFT OF PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGE TO CONGRESS ON RACE

Attached is a final draft of your Message to Congress on Race. It reflects the efforts of Bruce Reed, Karen Tramontano, and me to improve the recommendations in bold following each section. Upon your review and final approval, we will finalize this message and commence its rollout to coincide with Martin Luther King's birthday.

Thank you.

PHOTOCOPY
WJC HANDWRITING

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
MESSAGE TO CONGRESS
THE UNFINISHED WORK OF BUILDING ONE AMERICA
January 15, 2001

I hereby submit this message to the 107th Congress of the United States on the State of Race Relations in America. In it, I present my personal assessment of the current national mood concerning race relations and issue a set of concrete challenges that form what I call the unfinished business of building One America. This report is an outgrowth of my Administration's consistent emphasis on racial reconciliation, most clearly embodied in my Initiative on Race and our White House Office on One America. But it also stems from my own personal commitment to racial harmony that has its roots in the lessons and experiences of my childhood in the racially segregated south. I dedicate this report to countless civil rights champions of all colors who have struggled since the time of Frederick Douglas for an America free from the bondage of racial injustice.

Introduction

After eight years of service as President of the United States, I will relinquish that title on January 20, 2001, when George W. Bush takes the oath of office. But as a citizen, I will never abandon my commitment to my country or the ideals that propelled me into public service more than two decades ago. Foremost among those ideals is my commitment to racial reconciliation. It began for me with the crisis at Little Rock in 1957. I was only 11 years old at the time. Like most southerners then, I never attended school with a person of another race until I went to college. Though discrimination had always gnawed at me, it was the courage and sacrifice of those nine black children who endured constant attacks, both physical and emotional, to integrate Little Rock's Central High School, that made racial equality a driving commitment in my life. I came of age at the height of the civil rights struggles of the sixties: the 1962 March on Washington, the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. I vividly remember the assassinations of John F. Kennedy, Martin Luther King and Bobby Kennedy. Like any American who grew up in that era, my life was shaped by those triumphs and tragedies. And ever since that time, I have been inspired to join with others to carry on the fight for racial and ethnic justice.

As President that has meant building social and economic bridges strong enough for all of us to walk across. The overriding goal of my life in public service and as President is to ensure that all Americans have the opportunity to make the most of their God-given potential. That means equal opportunity for all. And it means finding ways to celebrate our great diversity while uniting around our common needs, concerns and values. In a nation where soon the only majority will be "American," I believe we need to talk about race in a new way – not just in terms of black and white. But in terms that recognize the essential worth and dignity of every human being regardless of color, accent or ethnicity. That is not to ignore the fact that racial tensions still exist in America. But, if we are ever going to overcome them, we must begin to focus more on the things that unite us than on those that divide us. Let's start with the remarkable fact that we are recognized around the globe as the most successful multi racial democracy in history, a model of peaceful co-existence in a world rent by ethnic, racial and religious conflict. With the current explosion of diversity in America, that image of ourselves is being tested as never before.

Fifty years ago, whites made up 90 percent of our population and the Census Bureau used only three major categories to describe us: white, Negro, and "other." Those distinctions were often reduced to just white and non-white. Since then, there has been a rapid growth in our Asian American, Hispanic, and American Indian populations. According to the latest statistics from the Census Bureau, African Americans, with a population of 35 million, still constitute the largest racial or ethnic group in America. But the gap is narrowing. During the past decade, the Asian Pacific American population has emerged as the fastest growing racial or ethnic group in America. Their numbers have skyrocketed-- from 0.7% of the total U.S. population in 1970 to 4.0% in 1999. And with a population that has grown from just 7 million in 1960 to more than 31 million today, Hispanics are the second fastest growing racial or ethnic group in the country.

The fact is, America is demographically undergoing one of the great transformations in our history. We are a changing people. Today, nearly one in ten people in the United States were born in another country and one in five schoolchildren are from immigrant families. Today, there is no majority race in Hawaii or Houston or New York City. In nine of our ten largest public school systems, over 75 percent of the students are minorities. In a little more than 50 years there will be no majority race in America.

Indeed, this unprecedented infusion of diversity brings with it a complex and sometimes controversial set of issues. Who, for example, decides who is white and who is a person of color? What will the terms "majority" and "minority" mean when there is no majority race in America? And perhaps, most importantly, will the black-white schism that has so defined racial struggle in America morph into new minority versus minority divisions or can we build new coalitions for social change and equal opportunity across all racial lines?

As our nation grows more diverse and the world grows more interdependent, our diversity will either be the great problem or the great promise of the 21st century. Do we remain two societies today, "separate and unequal," as the Kerner Commission concluded 33 years ago? I think we have moved beyond that with progress that can be measured both in numbers and in the hearts and minds of Americans. More of our children believe that racial harmony and respect for diversity is the only way for all us to live and prosper. We have not yet reached the dream of One America, but I believe in the next century, we can and we will. That is why an honest discussion and an even more earnest effort at racial reconciliation is so important now.

While this report is not intended to grapple with the full panoply of psychological, institutional and historical underpinnings of the racial divide in America, there are a number of concrete steps we can take to equalize opportunity, maximize the great potential of our growing diversity, and accelerate our journey to building the One America of our dreams. I will offer recommendations in seven broad areas of unfinished business: Economic and Social Progress, Education, Civil Rights Enforcement, Criminal Justice Reform, Eliminating Health Disparities, Election Reform and Civic Responsibility. I offer these recommendations in the hope that they will be helpful, not only to the 107th Congress and the new administration, but to all of us as we continue the work of healing the racial wounds of the past and pointing the way to a future of greater opportunity for all.

Since our founding, we have made much progress in weaving together the disparate strands of our diversity into a coat of many colors. We are a more prosperous, more secure and more united nation. But our work is not yet done. We must keep working to connect the threads and perfect the fabric of One America.

I. ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL PROGRESS

New Markets – Ensuring that the Benefits of Our Strong Economy Reach All

By any measure, America has prospered, both economically and socially over the last eight years. We are now experiencing the longest economic expansion in history. We have a balanced budget. We have turned decades of deficits into the biggest back-to-back surpluses in history. And we have achieved what many people once thought impossible – we are paying down our national debt. In fact, we are well on our way to making America debt free by the year 2010 – the first time this has happened since Andrew Jackson was President in 1835.

The rising tide of our strong economy is lifting all boats. Between 1980 and 1992 the bottom 60 percent of Americans saw little, if any, increase in income. Unemployment for African Americans and Hispanics reached record highs and the poverty rate for African Americans remained at or above 30 percent.

Today, for the first time in decades, wages are rising at all income levels. Not only did every major income group see double-digit income growth, but the lowest 20 percent saw the largest income growth since 1993. The unemployment rate for African Americans fell from 14.2 percent in 1992 to 7.6 percent today. The drop in unemployment among Hispanics has been just as dramatic – from 11.6 percent in 1992 to 5.7 percent today. We have the lowest child poverty in 20 years, the lowest poverty rate for single mothers ever recorded. The highest homeownership on record. Record numbers of Americans have left welfare for work, and those still on welfare are five times more likely to be working than eight years ago. And the number of families who own stock has grown by 40 percent.

But America is not just better off, we are a better people – more hopeful, more secure, more free, and more united than ever before in our history. We governed with a belief and commitment that we could turn around our fiscal situation and still find resources to empower the hardest-pressed families while creating new opportunities. That is why, even in our 1993 deficit reduction act, we found the resources to make an historic expansion of the Earned Income Tax Credit while creating a new Federal Empowerment Zone initiative – that was effectively led by Vice President Gore.

While maintaining fiscal discipline, we have worked to increase opportunity by more than doubling funding for Head Start, increasing efforts to close the digital divide by 300 percent, increasing Pell Grants by more than 60 percent for millions, starting new initiatives to provide mentoring and job opportunities for economically disadvantaged and minority youth, reforming and strengthening the Community Reinvestment Act, and initiating the Community Development Financial initiative – expanding loans to minority small businesses.

There is also a rising tide of shared responsibility across the land. Crime is at a 25-year low. Teen pregnancy is down. Our environment is cleaner and more secure. Citizens are reclaiming control of their families and neighborhoods and we are seeing the re-emergence of our oldest and most basic values – opportunity for all, responsibility from all in a community of all Americans.

But despite all this progress, there remain pockets of poverty in America where the light of our glowing prosperity still does not shine. In December of 1997, I paid a visit to an area of the South Bronx that had once been close to the economic equivalent of an impoverished developing country. Too many of the people living there were under-employed and under-housed and the financial community had traditionally under-invested in them. When President Reagan visited the area in the 1980s, he compared it to London in the Blitz. For many it seemed like a community beyond hope or repair.

The transformation I saw three years later was remarkable. That South Bronx neighborhood had gone from decay and chaos to development and pride; from a fragmented collection of individuals struggling to survive to a cohesive community of citizens, working to build a better life for everyone. It was the kind of meeting that made me proud to be President and even prouder to be an American.

How did it happen? The people of the South Bronx simply refused to accept the conventional wisdom about the poor, and they worked hard to create economic opportunity, fueled by partnerships between the public and private sectors. They began by asking the right questions: “Why shouldn’t I be able to work in my hometown, or have a transportation system that will get me to good jobs? Why shouldn’t people here be able to get decent housing? Why shouldn’t our children be able to walk the streets here? Why shouldn’t we have decent schools here, and grocery stores and banks?” Over time, they got-- and created -- the right answers. Their story demonstrates something I have always believed in my heart. Most Americans—rich, poor or middle class—welcome the opportunity to work hard and make the most of their lives.

That determined spirit is exactly what I saw when I traveled across America to shine a spotlight on places still untouched by our nation’s growing prosperity. And I am pleased to say that I was joined by Speaker Hastert and a bipartisan group of political and business leaders who share my view that every American in every community has a stake in the prosperity all of us have worked so hard to build.

We began our New Markets tour in July of 1999, during four days of one of the hottest summers of the decade. I went to places that have been too long forgotten and too long left behind as our economy surges forward: Hazard, Kentucky, in the heart of Appalachia; the city of Clarksdale, in the Mississippi Delta; the city of East St. Louis, where poverty is three times the national average; South Dakota’s Pine Ridge Reservation, where unemployment is nearly 75 percent; the neighborhood of South Phoenix, Arizona where unemployment is more than twice the national average; and the Watts section of Los Angeles, an area that for decades has been a symbol of urban neglect and isolation in a nation of plenty.

Yes, we did see poverty, but it may surprise you to know that we saw an awful lot of promise too. I went to these places to promote our New Markets Initiative – a strategy that builds on our successful empowerment agenda. It is designed to create the conditions for economic success in distressed communities by leveraging $15 billion in new investment in urban and rural areas. It was important that business leaders joined us at every stop so that they could see for themselves what they had been missing. I wanted them to see the enormous opportunities in America's new markets. As Robert Kennedy said in 1967, "We must turn the power and resources of our private enterprise system to the underdeveloped nations within our midst." We need to unleash the power of mainstream financial markets linked to effective community-based partners so that people in distressed communities can have access to what I call the tools of opportunity—these include access to credit, capital and jobs. This is a vital part of an empowerment agenda that must also include a raise in the minimum wage, providing child care and health care so that parents can succeed at home and at work. And equal pay for equal work.

Hard-pressed communities cannot be expected to lift themselves up on their own. In addition to their own sweat equity, they need and deserve help. That is why we have worked so hard to put in place an empowerment agenda from a number of sources, including local and federal programs, financial institutions, and technical assistance providers. Without a critical level of credit and financing, however, all their efforts will be in vain.

I am pleased that the Congress put partisanship aside to pass our New Markets initiative last month. This bill expands and strengthens Empowerment Zones, creates the New Markets Tax Credit and New Renewal Communities, and strengthens the Low-Income Housing Tax Credit and private activity bonds.

Recommendation: Build on the success of New Markets by passing a new empowerment agenda: a substantial increase in the minimum wage; expanded subsidies and refundable tax credits for child care; more health care for the working poor, starting with the parents of poor children already covered under the Children's Health Insurance Program; more education, training and mentoring for minority youths, and legislation to ensure that women get equal pay for equal work for women.

Responsible Fatherhood

But economic empowerment alone is not enough to build strong communities. The most basic building block of strong communities is strong families. Every child deserves the love and support of both parents. Still, nearly one in three American children grows up without a father. These children are five times more likely to live in poverty than children with both parents at home. Clearly, demanding and supporting responsible fatherhood is critical to lifting all children out of poverty and is an important component of welfare reform.

Throughout our Administration, Vice President Gore and I have encouraged fathers to take an active and responsible role in their children's lives. We worked hard to ensure that absent parents provide both financial and emotional support for their children. Tough new child support measures promoted by our Administration contributed to doubling child support collections since 1992, while the number of fathers taking responsibility for their children by establishing paternity tripled. Many fathers want to do right by their children, but need help to do it. The Welfare-to-Work program that we fought for in 1997 provided a major new funding source to help low-income noncustodial parents (mainly fathers) work and support their children, and the FY 2001 budget will give state, local, tribal, and community- and faith-based grantees an additional two years to spend existing funds. We provided communities and families with new tools to increase fathers' involvement in their children's learning. And, teen pregnancy and birth rates have declined to the lowest levels on record.

My FY 2001 budget proposed several new initiatives to ensure that noncustodial parents who can afford to pay child support do, to ensure that more of the child support paid goes directly to families, and to help more "deadbroke" fathers go to work. My Administration worked closely with Congress to seek enactment of the Child Support Distribution Act of 2000, which included many elements of our proposals for child support reforms and responsible fatherhood initiatives. Unfortunately, the 106th Congress failed to pass this legislation, despite strong bi-partisan support. I urge the new Congress to pass a bipartisan fatherhood bill to help more fathers live up to their responsibilities and to strengthen families and communities.

Recommendation: Pass a bipartisan fatherhood bill that provides grants to help low-income and non-custodial parents -- mainly fathers -- work, pay child support and reconnect with their children.

Native Americans

One year ago, I emphasized in my State of the Union address that we should "begin this new century by honoring our historic responsibility to empower the first Americans." While we are living in a time of great prosperity and progress, for many Native Americans, the picture is quite different. Even though economic conditions in Indian country have improved in recent years, the social, economic and educational status of American Indian and Alaska Native communities continue to lag behind the rest of the United States.

That is why I made improving conditions in Indian Country a high priority during my Administration. We worked with tribes on a government-to-government basis to bring about positive change. Most recently, I signed a new executive order that requires consultation with Indian tribal governments in the development of Federal policies that have tribal implications. I believe that honoring our trust responsibilities and fostering the government-to-government interactions is essential to improving relationships with tribes.

In order to lift up Native American communities in this century, we must focus on three areas: economic development, health care, and education. To that end, we know that a New Markets approach holds much promise for many Native American communities. I saw this first hand when I visited the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota and the Navajo Nation in Shiprock, New Mexico to highlight the needs of our Nation's first peoples and to encourage private investments in these areas. The final FY2001 budget agreement contains my historic new bipartisan New Markets and Community Renewal Initiative which contains tax credits and assistance for small businesses for underserved communities across the Nation – including Indian Country. I also fought for legislation – also included in the 2001 budget agreement -- that will treat tribes similarly to state and local governments under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act. Last year, I proposed a historic budget with the largest increase ever for key new and existing programs for Native American communities. Today, I am proud to say that we won much of our request with the final budget including an increase of $1.1 billion for Native Americans. The centerpieces of the final budget represent the priorities for Indian Country. We have won historic new increases for Bureau of Indian Affairs school construction and repair which will provide an important down payment on reducing the backlog of repairs and renovations needed. We also secured $75 million for renovations for public schools with high concentrations of Native American students. I am also proud to say that we are continuing our 1000 new Native teacher initiative, and we were able to create a new Native American Education Foundation to encourage private gifts to further educational opportunities for American Indian children.

The Vice President and I also championed and won the largest increase for the Indian Health Service – an increase of 10 percent over FY2000 – to provide additional primary care services, more drug and alcohol prevention and treatment services, and to provide a $240 million three-funding increase for a special diabetes program for Native Americans.

My sincere hope is that these budget victories will provide a baseline for the next Administration to continue to work with tribes and lift up the lives of this Nation's first Americans.

Recommendation: Make up for lost time by continuing to pass bipartisan increases in our nation's investment in turning around Native American schools, reducing the enormous disparity in Native American health, and attracting new business to Indian Country.

II. EDUCATIONAL EXCELLENCE FOR ALL CHILDREN

When Vice President Gore and I came into office in 1993, we pledged to the American people that we would strengthen education at every level and challenge the status quo by investing more in and demanding more from our nation's schools. Because every child can learn and every child deserves the opportunity to realize their dreams, the promise of a world-class education must be available to all Americans regardless of their income, where they live, or the color of their skin. As we enter the 21st century, nothing could be more important than investing in the public schools that will prepare our children to be successful in an increasingly global economy. The progress of our efforts in this regard will be remembered not by how many succeed, but by how many are left behind. Too often in the past we accepted low expectations for some children, using labels and categories to excuse our failure to educate all students.

During the last eight years we have clearly made progress in improving our schools and helping more children succeed. For example, test scores for African American students are up in virtually all categories, and between 1992 and 1999, math scores for Hispanic students increased at the 4th, 8th, and 12th grade levels. In addition, more minority students are being challenged by rigorous coursework, which is an important precursor to post-secondary education. Three times as many African American students took Advanced Placement (AP) exams in 1999 as took the tests in 1988, and nearly 70,000 Hispanic students took AP exams in 1999, the most ever.

Access to post-secondary opportunities also continues to increase for minority students: The percentage of African American high school graduates who go on to college has increased from 50 percent in 1992 to 58.5 percent in 1997, and the percentage of Hispanic high school graduates going directly to college increased from 55 percent in 1992 to 66 percent in 1997. Also, the percentage of Hispanic high school graduates age 25-29 who have a college degree is the highest ever. These improvements show that our commitment to education over the past eight years is helping more of America's students succeed, but they also highlight the fact that much work remains to be done. For example, achievement gaps between Hispanic and white students persist at all grade levels and across most academic subjects, and over 80 percent of Hispanics are not introduced to college "gateway" classes such as algebra and geometry by the eighth grade. These gaps likely contribute to the unacceptably low high school completion rate for Latinos, which has not changed substantially in the past several years.

Eight years ago, the debate on education was usually divided into partisan camps arguing over false choices. On one side were those who believed that money could solve all the problems in our schools, and who feared that setting high standards and holding schools and teachers and students accountable to them would only hold back poor children, especially poor minority children. On the other side, there were those who felt education was a state responsibility, and did not need a comprehensive national response – or the leadership of a federal Department of Education. They were willing to give up on our public schools and many of the children in them because they did not believe that we could ensure a world-class education for all students, and therefore, were unwilling to spend money trying. We believed both of those positions were wrong because every child can learn. There was plenty of evidence, even then, that high levels of learning were possible in even the most difficult social and economic circumstances. The challenge was to make the school transformation going on in some schools available and real in all schools. We sought to do this by both investing more in our schools and demanding more from them.

The strategy of greater accountability and greater investment should continue to guide our efforts to improve education. Last year, for the first time, Congress failed to fulfill its obligation to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. In May of 1999 I sent Congress a proposal that would fundamentally change the way the federal government invests in our schools -- to support more of what we know works, and to stop supporting what we know does not work. It would help put quality teachers in all classrooms; send report cards to all parents on the performance of each school; end social promotion, but offer help for students rather than blaming them when the system fails them; and require a plan to identify failing schools and improve them, or shut them down. Congress and the new Administration must act on this legislation, and I hope they will do it in a way that makes progress on accountability, while increasing key investments in what works.

The fundamental lesson of the last seven years, it seems to me, is that an education investment without accountability can be a real waste of money. But accountability without investment can be a real waste of effort. All schools need adequate resources to provide all of our children with a world-class education and yet too often, many schools in poor communities cannot meet this goal because they simply don't have the resources. Long-standing gaps in access to educational resources exist, including disparities by race and ethnicity. That's why I am appointing a Presidential Commission on resource equity charged with gathering data on this problem and reporting to the President, Congress, and the nation on the best strategies to close this equity gap.

I've also asked Congress to make a range of other investments to make accountability work. These include reduced class sizes, hiring additional, well-qualified teachers, and expanding after-school and summer school programs to help children succeed.

We know that children learn better in smaller classes. This year, we won $1.6 billion keeping us on track of hiring 100,000 new teachers who are desperately needed to lower class size in the early grades throughout this country.

We also know that children cannot not be expected to lift themselves up in schools that are literally falling down. The average school building in the United States is 42 years old, while in many cities the average is 65 years old. There are schools in New York City, for example, that are still being heated by coal-fired furnaces. For four years I have tried to get the Congress to approve my $25 billion tax credit to help to build or modernize 5,000 schools. America's school children are still waiting for this help. This year, we did win $1.2 billion in spending for urgent school repairs. This is a start, but far short of making the kind of investment needed to provide our children with the schools they deserve.

Since 1997, we've made progress in expanding after-school programs that offer additional learning opportunities for students and prevent juvenile crime. This year we nearly doubled funding for 21st Century Community Learning Centers to $846 million, serving 1.3 million students nationwide. I call on Congress to continue its support for these proven programs and further reduce the estimated 4 million latch-key children in our country.

With the largest expansion of college aid since the GI Bill, we are opening the doors of college wider so that more of our young people can not only walk through them, but walk out with a degree four years later. The percentage of young people going to college is up 10 percent since 1990. That is because of investments like our GEAR UP mentoring program which, with increases included in the FY 2001 budget, will now help 2.1 million low income middle school students finish school and prepare for college. It's because of the HOPE Scholarship and lifetime learning tax credits, which are helping 10 million Americans pay for college. And it because we have worked so hard for more affordable student loans, more Pell Grants and more work-study slots.

We cannot close disparities in race if we do not close disparities in education. It is just that simple. This means expanding federal efforts at accountability to offer every child, regardless of race, class, ethnicity, income or background, a first-class public school education.

This is a founding principle of our country and it remains today perhaps the most important tool we have to give everyone a chance to make the most of their own lives.

Recommendation: Pass and sign legislation that holds states and schools accountable for results, puts a qualified teacher in every classroom and turns around every failing school. Finish the job of hiring 100,000 teachers to reduce class size. Expand afterschool and summer school help to make sure all students reach high standards. Mentor disadvantaged youth to increase the chance they go to college. Tax credits to help build or modernize 5,000 schools. Appoint a Presidential Commission on resource equity to determine ways to close the resource equity gap between schools in poor communities and those in more affluent ones.

III. CIVIL RIGHTS ENFORCEMENT

Despite all the progress we have made in tearing down walls of segregation and barriers of opportunity, an old enemy lurks in the shadows. It continues to poison our perceptions, undermine our progress and threaten our future. Racism has been our nation's constant curse, predating the nation's founding by a century and a half. And race has been our constant struggle. The way out begins with facing and speaking the truth about our past, even when it is somewhat painful.

Consider this: We were born with a Declaration of Independence which asserted that we are all created equal and a Constitution that enshrined slavery. We fought a bloody civil war to abolish slavery and preserve the union, but we remained a house divided and unequal by law for another century. We advanced across the continent in the name of freedom, yet in doing so we pushed Native Americans off their land, often crushing their culture, their livelihood and their lives. We eagerly recruited laborers from Asia to help build our fledgling economy but in a time of war, forcibly removed more than 100,000 Japanese Americans from their homes and into internment camps. Our Statue of Liberty welcomes poor, tired, huddled masses of immigrants to our shores, but each new wave has felt the sting of discrimination, and for many that discrimination has burdened their native-born children and grandchildren. We must face these harsh contradictions squarely as a critical first step to healing the wounds of our past and unleashing the power and promise of our future. We must become One America in the 21st century.

After I launched the national initiative on race in San Diego in 1997, people asked me why, in the absence of a great national crisis like Little Rock or the Rodney King riots, should the American people focus anew on the challenge of racial reconciliation. My answer is two-fold. First and foremost, our work is not yet done. And our present progress and confidence give us the best chance to finish it. We have moved out of the epicenter of racism that rocked our nation from the time of the Indian conquest, slavery and Japanese internment until the great breakthroughs of the civil rights era, but we are still experiencing the aftershocks. Though people of color have more opportunities than ever today, we still see evidence of unequal treatment in the litany of disparities in jobs and wealth, in education, in criminal justice, that so often still break down along the color line.

Secondly, building One America is not just a fancy slogan. It is a rallying cry in defense of our future. As we have seen so often in other parts of the world, ancient ethnic divisions in the age of the new global economy are ripping some nations apart. That has not, and will not happen here in America. The main reason is our fundamental faith in freedom, embodied in the words, if not always the actions, of our founders.

I believe it is also tied to our belief in a spiritual law common to every major world religion. We hear its echo in our call for One America. It is the law of oneness. E pluribus Unum: Out of many, one. In Christianity it is expressed as loving thy neighbor as thyself. In Islam we are instructed to “Do unto all men as you wish to have done to you and reject for others what you would reject for yourself. The Talmud teaches us, “Should anyone turn aside the right of the stranger, it is as though he were to turn aside the right of the most high God.” As a nation that takes pride in both the depth and diversity of religious expression, we must embrace racial reconciliation as a way to honor our highest spiritual values.

In 1998, my Advisory Board on race made this prescient observation: “[N]ow, more than ever, racial discrimination is not only about skin color and other physical characteristics associated with race; it is also about other aspects of our identity, such as ethnicity, national origin, language, accent, religion, and cultural customs.”ⁱ While overt racial prejudice has diminished, the discrimination of today is often more camouflaged. In a sense, this makes it more dangerous: If you are denied a job, apartment, or prompt service in a store on the basis of bigotry that is never expressed, and even cloaked in politeness, then you have no signal telling you to object, to fight. In order to build One America, to finish the work that we have started, it is vitally important that all Americans understand that discrimination — intentional or not, obvious or camouflaged — still exists and that each of us has the opportunity and responsibility to help eradicate it. This is about more than enforcing laws. It is about living up to our values and keeping our promises.

With our unprecedented strength, it is all the more intolerable that there are still doors to opportunity that are padlocked by prejudice. That is why I have proposed substantial new investments to strengthen civil rights enforcement at the federal, state, and local levels. Although money by itself will not achieve our civil rights goals, a strong enforcement agenda depends on a sufficient level of resources. But we must act strategically to put the federal investments where they can be the most effective. That is why, for eight years, I have fought so hard for additional investments in civil rights enforcement. These funds are critical to helping the Justice Department expand investigations and prosecutions of criminal civil rights cases. HUD needs adequate resources to reduce housing discrimination and the Departments of Education, Agriculture and Labor will be able to improve and expand civil rights compliance and enforcement programs.

And as our comprehensive review of federal affirmative action programs revealed, affirmative action is still an effective and important tool for expanding educational and economic opportunity to all Americans.

The fact is, important gaps in civil rights law and their enforcement remain. We need to ensure equal opportunity for all Americans, regardless of race, ethnicity, religion, gender, disability or sexual orientation. To that end, I challenge the new Congress and Administration to pass the Employment Non-Discrimination act. I believe that the simple business of enforcing anti-discrimination laws should be a bipartisan commitment. We should be able to agree on at least this much – enforce the law and promote voluntary compliance with it.

Recommendation: Redouble our efforts to end all forms of discrimination against any group of Americans by expanding investments in civil rights enforcement and passing ENDA.

Eliminate Hate Crimes

There is nothing more important to the future of this country than our standing together against intolerance, prejudice, and violent bigotry. No American should be subjected to violence on account of his or her race, color, national origin, religion, sexual orientation, gender or disability. Americans of conscience were horrified by the vicious murder of James Byrd, Jr. in Jasper, Texas and the cowardly torture-murder of Matthew Shepard in Wyoming. But we must do more than shake our heads in shame—we must back up our outrage with tough sanctions against those who perpetuate these crimes. Hate crimes are criminal acts driven by bias against another person's race, religion, disability, sexual orientation, or ethnicity.ⁱⁱ In 1997, the FBI reported 8,049 incidents of such crimes.ⁱⁱⁱ Of these, 5,546 were based on the victim's race or ethnicity. It is suspected that many more go unreported. My administration has stood strong against hate crimes through vigorous prosecution under the civil rights statutes. Since 1989, over 500 defendants have been convicted on federal criminal civil rights charges for interfering with the federally protected rights of minority victims. I am proud of what we have done to combat hate crimes, but there is much more to do.

First, we must continue to enforce our civil rights laws vigorously. Under Attorney General Janet Reno's leadership, the Justice Department has taken aim at hate crimes with more prosecutions and tougher punishments. To increase our effectiveness, we have assigned substantially more FBI agents and prosecutors to work in this area, and the Justice Department has marshaled the support of every United States Attorney to establish or strengthen community enforcement strategies to combat hate crimes. The centerpiece of the Attorney General's Anti-Hate Crime Initiative is the formation of local working groups in each federal judicial district consisting of local community leaders and federal, state, and local law enforcement officials. These working groups are helping to improve coordination, community involvement, training, education, data collection, and as an education tool, the Justice Department is also spearheading the creation of hate crime resource guides for teachers, law enforcement personnel, and state and local prosecutors.

Second, we must ensure that when hate crimes do occur, we have the law enforcement tools necessary to identify the perpetrators swiftly and bring them to justice. In this regard, we must pass a Hate Crimes Prevention Act because all Americans deserve protection from crimes of hate. Currently, the law requires we prove that the defendant committed an offense not only because of the victim's race, color, religion, or national origin, but also because of the victim's participation in one of six "federally protected activities."

The federally protected activity requirement has impeded our efforts to prosecute hate crimes. For example, the federal government can prosecute a violent, racially-motivated hate crime that occurs in a public school's parking lot, but we may lack jurisdiction if the crime occurs in a private yard across the street from the school. To point out another outrageous limitation, the federal government's ability to respond to a racially motivated attack that occurs in front of a convenience store may depend on whether or not the store has a video game inside. In fact, under our current law, the federal government does not have the authority to prosecute James Byrd Jr.'s killers. Other than verbally condemning the actions of the perpetrators — at least one of them an avowed racist—who chained Mr. Byrd to a pickup truck in the predawn darkness and dragged him to his death, we would not have been able to use the power of the state to sanction this crime. We must close this gap in the law. The Hate Crimes Prevention Act will expand the Justice Department's ability to prosecute hate crimes by removing needless jurisdictional requirements for existing crimes. Our federal officers must have the authority to work in concert with state and local law enforcement agencies to end hate crimes.

In addition to removing jurisdictional barriers, the Hate Crimes Prevention Act will strengthen current law by giving Federal prosecutors the power to prosecute hate crimes committed because of the victim's sexual orientation, gender, or disability. As in the case of James Byrd, Jr., the federal government did not have the legal jurisdiction to prosecute Matthew Shepard's murderers under current law. Matthew, a 21-year old college freshman, was beaten in the dead of night, tied to a fence, and left to die alone. At Matthew's funeral, his cousin predicted that "Matt will have made a difference in the lives of thousands." I want to make sure he does. Congress and the next Administration should enact a bill that sanctions all hate crimes on an equal basis.

Let me emphasize that with the enactment of the Hate Crimes Prevention Act, state and local law enforcement agencies will continue to take the lead in investigating and prosecuting all types of hate crimes. For instance, the Justice Department will continue to defer prosecution in the first instance to state and local law enforcement officials except in highly sensitive cases where the federal interest is significant. The Justice Department will also refrain from following up a state prosecution with a federal prosecution of the same incident unless the state has left a substantial federal interest demonstrably unvindicated. The Hate Crimes Prevention Act will, however, strengthen our ability to work effectively as partners with state and local law enforcement, and to serve an important backstop function with regard to a wider range of hate-motivated violence than federal law currently permits.

Opponents of the civil rights legislation in the 1960s often said, "You can't legislate morality." It is true that a statute cannot exorcise hate—that is a personal demon that calls for a moral cleansing. But law does have a function in proclaiming our values and differentiating right from wrong. In that sense, over time, law can squeeze hate out of our public lives and eventually out of all but the most diseased hearts. The starting point is to make violent acts of hate against our neighbors a federal crime. And we should do it.

Recommendation: Recognize that hate crimes do damage not only to its victims, but to the moral fiber of our nation. They are different from other crimes and they deserve to be treated as such. The new Congress and Administration should pass the Hate Crimes Prevention Act without further delay.

Immigration

America has a rich and lengthy history of immigrants who have contributed to every facet of our society. Often in our history, however, immigrants have been scapegoats for problems plaguing America, including crime, low wages, and rising unemployment. The new Congress and all of us must not fall into the trap of blaming immigrants for all social problems. It is also imperative that while we enforce our immigration laws, we also recognize that every decision we make and every law we pass affects thousands and thousands of individuals and their families, oftentimes leading to families being separated with all the pain and damage that result.

For example, in 1996, Congress passed legislation to reduce the presence of criminal aliens and ensure that those who should be deported were deported promptly and efficiently. Yet, because this legislation was retroactive, it wrecked havoc on many families – resulting in the deportation of individuals for relatively minor crimes, sometimes years after they had been punished by the criminal justice system and without due process. Editorial pages are replete with example after example—a 19 year old boy, adopted at birth from Brazil, deported for marijuana possession to a country where he knows no one or even speaks the language; a married woman with three children who emigrated from Italy when she was young girl, deported for fraud charges resulting from bounced checks. It is time to restore due process and judicial discretion to ensure that unnecessary family tragedies do not continue.

Similarly, in 1996, Congress passed and I signed landmark welfare reform legislation. We needed to change our system of welfare but we did not need to take punitive actions against legal immigrants that had nothing to do with moving people from welfare to work. Over the last four years we have made steady progress to restore benefits [what did we do? List them] to these legal immigrants. For some legal immigrants in the country before enactment of welfare reform, we restored health care and SSI benefits and food stamps. Congress must take the next step and restore these benefits to other needy legal immigrants.

Our immigration system should be based on the principle that all immigrants from all countries should be treated equally under our laws. When Congress enacts legislation to help one group over another similarly situated group, this creates inequities that must be redressed. Since 1997, my Administration has proposed legislation to eliminate disparate treatment under our immigration laws for Salvadorans, Guatemalans, Hondurans, Haitians and Liberians who have fled civil unrest and human rights abuses and are currently living in the United States, working, paying taxes and raising families. I strongly urge the new Congress to pass the bipartisan proposal that will provide these individuals with equal opportunity to regularize their immigration status.

Furthermore, we must balance America's need for foreign workers with protecting American workers. For example, last year Congress passed legislation permitting more visas for highly skilled foreign temporary workers to meet the needs of the growing high tech industry. While we support efforts to address these needs, we cannot allow a temporary high tech worker program to divert us from the more basic obligation to provide training and education for American workers. Similarly, Congress considered legislation to simplify the process for admitting additional temporary farmworkers into the country to address the needs of the agricultural industry. Again, while we should make sure that American industry is able to have the workers that it needs, we must not do so at the expense of undermining workplace protections or depressing wages for those in the toughest jobs.

Over the last eight years, working with Congress, we have dedicated over $ 4 to enhance the ability of the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) to control illegal immigration and improve its efficiency. But it is clear that this agency needs a major management reorganization. The new Congress and Administration should make this a priority. First, the immigration enforcement and immigration services functions must have separate and clear lines of authority but both must be managed by a single senior executive. That is the only way to balance the competing and complex needs of enforcement and immigration services.

We must also continue to balance enforcement with the need for family unification. At our insistence, Congress reinstated 245(i) for four months allowing families to remain together while the paperwork is processed by the agency. I urge the new Congress to permanently reinstate this provision to support families.

Finally, immigrants, who share common American values, have traveled to our nation in search of a better life. They have come here, not only to realize the limitless possibility and promise that characterize life in America, but also to enrich us with their unique gifts. I believe we must do more to help these new Americans become successful, responsible participants in American life. To this end, Vice President Gore and I proposed the English language/Civics Initiative. This is an innovative program to help states and communities provide people who possess only limited English proficiency, expanded access to high-quality English-language instruction linked to civics and life skills instruction. This is designed to help them better understand and navigate the U.S. government system, the public education system, the workplace, and other key institutions of American life. The 107th Congress should expand this initiative to help more immigrants become full, productive participants in American life.

We must also do more to ensure that students with limited English skills get the extra help they need in order to speak English comfortably and confidently, and that they meet the same high standards expected for all students. Congress must continue to provide the necessary funding and resources to school districts for teaching English. This commitment must extend to making sure teachers have the training they need to teach LEP students. Expansion of the Immigrant Education program would help more than a thousand school districts provide supplemental instructional services to recent immigrant students.

Congress should also seize the opportunity to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act, to ensure that all schools and districts are held accountable for helping LEP students master their academic subjects and learn English. Finally, programs designed to help migrant families face the particularly difficult obstacles to gaining the education and training that will help them improve their standard of living must be expanded.

Over time, America has raised itself up by absorbing those who have come to our shores. There are today perhaps more people here whose parents were not born here than at any point in our history. And today's immigrants are of so many different races, ethnicities and parts of the world that they create a unique set of challenges and opportunities. The time is now, with our great prosperity, to offer the right kind of opportunity to our newest citizens and welcome them into the family that is America.

Recommendation: Restore vital benefits to legal immigrants and do not target legal immigrants unfairly; re-institute fairness and due process in our immigration system; restructure the Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS); continue to help immigrants learn English and the duties of citizenship and invest in education and training.

IV. CRIMINAL JUSTICE REFORM

There is perhaps no area today in which perceptions of fairness differ so greatly based on race, than in the administration of criminal justice. If you are white, you most likely believe the system is on your side, if you are a minority, you most likely feel the opposite. This is true at all levels of justice – from what happens on the beat to what happens when the sentencing gavel is pounded.

The statistics are cause for concern: . For example, in a recent survey, more than 7 out of 10 blacks said they believe that blacks are treated more harshly by the criminal justice system than whites, and more than 4 out of 10 whites agree.^{iv} Furthermore, of those crime victims who do not report the incident to police, approximately twice as many blacks than whites say they don't report a crime because the police would not care or would be inefficient, ineffective, or biased.^v No system that is perceived as unfair can have the full trust of all our citizens, even if it is fair. This lack of trust becomes a cycle, separating the community even farther from the police. We cannot turn a blind eye to this breach of trust and confidence at all levels of the system. We must keep working until every citizen believes that justice is truly blind.

In the three decades before the start of the Clinton-Gore Administration, the violent crime rate had skyrocketed by 400 percent. Many thought that rising crime would never reverse. The soaring crime rate took a particularly devastating toll in communities of color. The year I took office, homicide victimization for young black men ages 18-24 years old was at its highest level on record and was over ten times higher than the rate for white men of the same age.

Our Administration took a new approach to fighting crime with innovative policies to help communities reduce crime and restore public safety – by helping communities put 100,000 police on the beat, supporting community policing strategies so police could work closely with residents to develop solutions to local crime problems, imposing tough, targeted penalties for the most violent offenders, and providing more after school programs to keep youth supervised and out of trouble.

As a result of these and other efforts, the incidence of crime has dropped to new lows. The homicide rate is at its lowest level in 33 years, gun crime has declined by 40 percent, and the overall crime rate has dropped for over 8 straight years – the longest continuous decline on record. Moreover, people of color have in many cases experienced the sharpest decreases in crime victimization. For instance, since 1993, the murder rate for African Americans has dropped 40 percent, compared to 28 percent for whites, and property crime victimization decreased 45 percent for Hispanic households as compared to 37 percent for non-Hispanics. These are remarkable achievements.

Despite recent and substantial decreases in crime across racial lines, persons of color remain significantly more likely than whites to be victims of crime, especially violent crime. Persons of color are also much more likely to live in fear of crime. No American should have to live that way. We must remember that in the poorest, highest crime neighborhoods in this country, the vast majority of people get up every day, go to work, obey the law, pay their taxes, and do the best to raise their kids. More than anywhere else, these communities – which are often communities of color -- want, need, and deserve strong law enforcement to restore order, reduce crime, and help build stronger communities.

However, these same communities often have less trust in law enforcement – limiting its effectiveness where it is most needed. So, while we have attained historic reductions in crime, we must build on our successful strategy and develop additional ways to make every community even safer. And in doing so, we must strengthen trust and confidence law enforcement in the criminal justice system overall.

Community Policing and “Hot Spots”

First and foremost, we must reduce crime and restore order in communities of color where crime and fear of crime are greatest. Every American has the right to live in a safe community, and we should not be able to identify high-crime neighborhoods based on the race of the residents who live there. Community policing should serve as the cornerstone for our efforts. We must continue to add another 50,000 more community police to our nation’s streets and spread the philosophy of community policing which brings local police and residents together in developing ways to best solve and prevent local crime problems and disorder. We should further expand this successful model to other areas of the criminal justice system including prosecution, with new community prosecutors working side-by-side with community police to address quality of life issues and help prevent crime before it starts.

I challenge the Congress and the next Administration to create a crime “hot spots” initiative – to target more resources to communities and neighborhoods that continue to have high crime rates or emerging crime problems. In crime “hot spots,” federal, state and local law enforcement would work together to identify high-crime locations through technology such as computer mapping. There would also be an increase in policing of high-crime areas, especially during the hours when crime is most likely to occur.

Recommendation: Expand community policing efforts in the disadvantaged areas that need them most, with new community prosecutors and police officers targeted to crime “hot spots.”

Gun Safety Legislation

We must also address the problem of guns in the wrong hands – a pervasive problem in many of our high-crime communities. Gun violence has taken a high toll on minority youth; for example, of the ten children killed each day by gun violence nearly 4 are black youth. We know that sensible and strong gun laws can make a difference in saving lives. The Brady Law alone has stopped over 611,000 felons, fugitives, and domestic abusers from buying guns through background checks since I signed it into law in 1993. The next Administration and Congress should take the next step to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and children by passing common sense gun legislation that closes the gun show loophole and requires safety locks for handguns to help prevent child access to guns. I also call on more gun manufacturers to join us in the fight to protect our children and keep guns out of the wrong hands.

Recommendation: Pass common-sense gun safety legislation to close the gun show loophole and require safety locks to prevent child access to guns.

Ex-Offenders

Another public safety area that must be addressed is the more than 600,000 ex-offenders that will be released from prison and reenter communities each year across the country. Many of these ex-offenders will return to communities of color. We need to maximize opportunities to help keep released offenders on the right track and out of trouble, able to meet their family obligations, and equipped to lead productive lives. We should foster the creation of reentry courts, similar to drug courts, and reentry partnerships, to provide more community and judicial supervision, more probation and parole oversight, drug treatment, job training, and links to community groups such as faith-based and fatherhood organizations. Our Administration secured $95 million in the most recent budget to get this initiative started. I challenge the Congress and the next Administration to continue this important effort and work with state and local governments to meet this growing public safety challenge.

Recommendation: Expand drug testing and treatment to make sure that ex-offenders leave the criminal justice system drug-free, so they can become productive citizens who never return to a life of crime or prison.

Crime Prevention

And finally, we must prevent young people of color from becoming involved in crime and the criminal justice system in the first place. That means giving our youth alternatives to the streets, where they are often most at-risk for being involved in, or falling prey to gangs, drugs and crime. We must continue to increase the number of after school programs that help to provide adult supervision and activities for young people during the afternoon and early evening hours when juvenile crime peaks. And we must make sure that they have strong adult supervision, as well as role models and mentors.

As we work to further reduce crime across America, we also must strive to ensure fairness in the criminal justice system so that it has the complete confidence of all of our nation's citizens. To do this, we must address important issues underlying the present racial gap in trust and confidence in our criminal justice system, including racial profiling, sentencing policy, and the death penalty.

Recommendation: Help young people avoid crime by giving them something to say yes to, by dramatically expanding after-school programs and increasing support for mentoring. afterschool programs, adult supervision and role models.

Racial Profiling

We know that in order for police to be truly effective in their work, they must have the trust and cooperation of the residents in their community. Yet, in many communities, especially minority communities, there remains a disturbing lack of trust in law enforcement among residents. Among the reasons for this distrust are reports of police misconduct such as racial profiling. The vast majority of law enforcement officers in this nation are dedicated public servants of great courage and high moral character who deserve the respect of citizens of all races. However, we cannot tolerate officers who mistreat law-abiding individuals and who bring their own racial bias to the job. Racial profiling is the opposite of good police work where actions are based on hard facts, not stereotypes. Simply stated, no person should be targeted by law enforcement because of the color of his or her skin. We must stop the morally indefensible and deeply corrosive practice of racial profiling. While some remedies are already available, we know this practice is widespread. We know it is wrong. And it should be illegal, everywhere.

Recent polls show that while many individuals believe that law enforcement engage in racial profiling, there is very little data on traffic stops to determine where and when it is occurring. That is why I ordered federal law enforcement agencies to begin to collect data on the race, ethnicity and gender of individuals subject to certain stops and searches. Federal law enforcement should make such data collection permanent and expand it to include more sites so we can identify problem areas and take concrete steps to eliminate racial profiling anywhere it exists. In addition, I challenge state and local law enforcement to take similar action to collect data. The federal government can help by providing funding and technical assistance to help them in their efforts. We should also provide for more police integrity training and resources to promote local dialogue to strengthen trust between police and the residents they serve.

But I believe we should go a step further. Even with many of these remedies already in place, we know that racial profiling continues to occur. We must find a way to construct and pass a national law banning racial profiling so that every citizen is assured that no police department and no community will tolerate this terrible practice.

Recommendation: End the intolerable practice of racial profiling by continuing efforts to document extent of problem and passing a national law banning the practice of racial profiling.

Mandatory Minimum Sentencing

We must re-examine our national sentencing policies, focusing particularly on mandatory minimum sentences for non-violent offenders. With the prison and jail population at roughly two million, it is time to take a hard look at who we are sending to prison – and whether our sentencing policies make sense given current circumstances. Over the long term, we should not be satisfied when so many Americans, especially so many people of color, are behind bars for so long, with so little hope of putting their lives back together when they get out. We must demand a system that actually works to reduce criminality and recidivism.

One way to do this is to use the power of the criminal justice system to help offenders to kick their drug habits. As we have seen, addiction plays a key role as to why many people end up in prison to begin with: more than two-thirds of all state prisoners report past drug use, nearly one in five committed their crime to get money to buy drugs, and one-third were under the influence of drugs at the time of their offense. In order to help break this cycle of drugs and crime, we should implement a rigorous course of drug testing and treatment for federal and state prisoners, probationers and parolees. Offenders should be required to be drug-free when they leave prison and stay free of drugs in order keep their freedom. In addition, we should further spread alternatives to incarceration for nonviolent drug offenders, such as drug courts. Drug courts, which employ judicial supervision, escalating sanctions, and frequent drug testing and treatment in lieu of incarceration have been shown to significantly reduce recidivism and future drug use.

In general, sentences must be firm, but they must also be fair and fit the crime. In the 1980's, mandatory minimum sentences were adopted to attack the horrible problem of crack cocaine and other drugs that were ravaging our cities. While mandatory minimums have been effective in removing hardened criminals from the streets, they have also swept in many lower level offenders, for whom better alternatives may exist, as discussed above.

One penalty I believe can be changed immediately is the 1986 federal law that creates a 100-to-1 ratio between crack and powder cocaine sentencing policies. This substantial disparity has led to a perception of racial injustice and inconsistency in the federal criminal justice system. Republican and Democratic Members of Congress alike have called for a repeal of this inequitable policy. Congress should revise the law to shrink the disparity to 10-to-1; specifically, the amount of powder cocaine required to trigger a five-year mandatory sentence should be reduced from 500 to 250 grams while the amount of crack cocaine required for the same sentence should increase from 5 grams to 25 grams. This difference would continue to reflect the greater addictive power of crack cocaine, the greater violence associated with crack cocaine trafficking, and the importance of targeting mid- and higher level traffickers instead of low level drug offenders.

At the same time, I encourage states with mandatory minimum drug sentences to adopt a “safety valve” similar to the provision I signed into law in the 1994 Crime Act. The federal “safety valve” allows non-violent drug offenders with no more than a minor criminal record to be exempt from the federal mandatory minimum sentences.

Recommendation: Re-examine federal sentencing guidelines, particularly mandatory minimums for non-violent offenders. Pass legislation to shrink the disparity between crack and powder cocaine sentencing from the current 100-to-1 to 10-to-1.

The Death Penalty

Finally, I believe we bear a special obligation to do everything we can to ensure that the death penalty is administered fairly. Justice Department studies have found that minorities are over-represented as both victims and defendants in both the federal and state death penalty systems. While this does not necessarily show that these systems are fundamentally broken or that they discriminate, this information raises profoundly disturbing questions. Congress can take an important step forward by passing legislation like that introduced by Senator Leahy, which provides greater access to post-conviction DNA testing as well as increased access to competent counsel for defendants in capital cases. These are important steps towards guaranteeing a system that is fair and just in its results and in its process – so we are absolutely sure the system does not punish the innocent and that the innocent are not convicted in the first place.

Recommendation: Pass and sign legislation to provide greater access to post-conviction DNA testing and increased access to competent counsel for defendants in capital cases.

V. ELIMINATING RACIAL AND ETHNIC HEALTH DISPARITIES

Nowhere are the divisions of race and ethnicity more sharply drawn than in the health of our people. Despite notable progress in the overall health of the nation, there are continuing disparities in the burden of illness and death experienced by African Americans, Hispanics, American Indians and Alaska Natives, and Pacific Islanders, compared to the U.S. population as a whole. African Americans are 40 percent more likely to die from heart disease than whites. Hispanic Americans have two to three times the rate of stomach cancer. Native Americans have the highest risk for diabetes of any population in the country -- three times the rate of whites. Asian Americans are as much as five times more likely to die from liver cancer associated with hepatitis. We do not know all the reasons for these disturbing gaps. But we do know that overall these groups are less likely to be immunized against disease, less likely to be routinely tested for cancer, and less likely to get regular checkups. No matter what the reason, racial and ethnic disparities in health are unacceptable in a country that values equality and equal opportunity for all. Access to the best health care America has to offer is a new civil right for the 21st century.

That is why we have set a national goal to eliminate racial and ethnic health disparities in six key areas by the year 2010: infant mortality; diabetes; cancer; heart disease; HIV/AIDS; and immunizations. To reach this goal, my Administration launched a major preventive health outreach campaign focusing on diseases disproportionately affecting racial and ethnic minorities. We also initiated a public-private collaboration to address racial and ethnic health disparities; and secured approximately $40 million in 2000 and 2001 for programs to research the causes and devise solutions for these disparities.

In 1999, the Administration launched a new initiative to address HIV/AIDS in minority communities, which received $167 million in funds this year. Finally, in 2001, NIH will establish the Center for Research on Minority Health and Health Disparities, which will coordinate the over $1 billion NIH invests annually in minority health and health disparities research.

America has the best health care system in the world. But we can't take full pride in it until every American has an equal chance to benefit from its ever-expanding potential. That is why achieving our goal of eliminating racial and ethnic disparities in health by the year 2010 must be a priority of the new Congress and new Administration.

Recommendation: Eliminate racial and ethnic disparities in health by 2010, by expanding investment in research into such disparities, in HIV/AIDS prevention, and in the treatment of diseases that disproportionately harm people of color.

VI. VOTING REFORM

If ever there was a doubt about the importance of exercising the most fundamental right of citizenship, it was clearly answered by the first Presidential election of the 21st century. No American will ever again be able to seriously say, "My vote doesn't count." That election also revealed serious flaws in the mechanics of voting, and brought up disturbing allegations of voter intimidation that we thought were relics of the past. Too many people felt that the votes they cast were not counted and some felt that there were organized efforts to keep them from the polls. Both of these allegations must be fully investigated. But, whatever the outcome, we can and must take aggressive steps to improve voter turnout, and modernize and restore confidence in our voting system.

While voting is the sacred right and responsibility of every American, it carries even greater weight for those who have fought so long and hard for civil rights and equal justice in America. In many ways the struggle for civil rights and racial progress in America is analogous to the struggle for voting rights. And this struggle, too, has not been all black and white.

The 15th amendment declared "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude." But new barriers, like poll taxes and literacy tests, were erected to prevent blacks and poor whites from casting their ballots. It was not until that historic confrontation on Selma's Edmund Pettus Bridge and the monumental Selma to Montgomery march that the Voting Rights Act of 1965, outlawing these racist impediments, was passed. Full voting rights for women were not secured until the passage of the 19th amendment in 1919. It wasn't until 1924, with the passage of the Indian Citizenship Act, that Native Americans won the right to vote. It took until 1952 for the Walter - McCarran Act to extend full citizenship and voting rights to Asian immigrants. And only after the elimination of English-only elections through the passage of the Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1975, did the final barriers to Hispanic voting rights fall.

Consider the fact that while our Declaration of Independence and Constitution proclaimed liberty and justice for all, originally this only applied to property-owning white males. Barbara Jordan once put it in stark terms, when she said of the Preamble to the Constitution, "We the People. It is a very eloquent beginning. But when the document was completed on the 17th of September in 1787, I was not included in that We the People." America's on-going efforts to right those wrongs is marked by the blood, sweat and tears of scores of voting rights warriors — from Frederick Douglas, Sojourner Truth and Elizabeth Cady Stanton to Martin Luther King, Willie Velasquez and Viola Liuzzo, who was one of a number of white freedom riders who lost their lives at the hands of bigots while working with blacks in the south for equal voting rights in the 1960s.

The right to vote is not only a sacred testament to the struggles of the past. It is an indispensable weapon in our current arsenal of efforts to empower those who have traditionally been left out, particularly people of color. So much progress—from the passage of civil rights laws to the increase in the numbers of minorities holding elected office—is the direct result of citizens exercising their right to vote. And so many of the needed changes in public policy, including those I have outlined in this Message to Congress, require active support by voters. Otherwise little will change. But, today, too many of us take our right to vote for granted. In recent presidential elections in France, for example, nearly 85 percent of the eligible voters went to the polls on election day. In America, there aren't more than two states that ever have an 80 percent turnout, even during a presidential election when interest runs very high.

So, we must do more to ensure that more people vote and that every vote is counted. In an effort to restore confidence in our democracy, I recommend the next President appoint a nonpartisan Presidential Commission on Electoral Reform. The Commission should be headed by distinguished citizens who can put country ahead of party, such as former Presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. The Commission should gather the facts and determine the causes of voting disparities in every state, including disparities of race, class, ethnicity, and geography. The Commission should make recommendations to Congress about how to achieve a fair, inclusive, and uniform system of voting in national elections -- including how to modernize voting technologies, establish uniform voting standards, prevent voter suppression and intimidation, and increase voter participation.

I believe such a Commission also should examine two other issues that haven't received as much attention, but could go a long way toward ensuring every American citizen the right to vote and the chance to exercise that right. First, declaring election day a national holiday so that no one has to choose between their responsibilities at work and their responsibilities as a citizen. In other countries that do this, voter participation dwarfs ours, and the most fundamental act of democracy gets the attention it deserves. Second, giving those who have repaid their debt to society the chance to regain their right to be a voting member of that society. Over the next decade, millions of Americans in the criminal justice system will serve out their sentences and re-enter society. These Americans are disproportionately poor and minority. We should be doing everything we can to make sure that they re-enter as responsible citizens. That means making sure that those who leave the criminal justice system leave it drug-free, and get the training they need to hold down a job and do right by their communities and their families. But if we want them to live right and do right, we should give them the chance to earn back their rights -- above all, the right to vote.

Recommendation: Appoint a non-partisan Presidential Commission on election reform to ensure a fair, inclusive and uniform system of voting standards, prevent voter suppression and intimidation and increase voter participation. Declare election day a national holiday. Give ex-offenders who have repaid their debt to society the chance to earn back the right to vote.

VII. CIVIC RESPONSIBILITY: BUILDING ONE AMERICA IS THE WORK OF EVERY AMERICAN

When violence and strife exploded in Los Angeles following the Rodney King verdict, countless residents and community leaders responded with inspiring efforts to build bridges that would not only heal wounds but create opportunity. When more than 190 black churches, white churches, synagogues, and mosques were burned or desecrated during 1995-96, we witnessed an awe-inspiring outpouring of concern and assistance across all lines of race and faith and party. When Jasper, Texas, was shaken to its core by a hideous hate crime, residents and leaders worked tirelessly to hold together, and in doing so, taught us all that some evils can be conquered with understanding. What all these examples prove is that when communities are faced with a crisis, our better angels soar to the challenge. In those moments, America ceases to be a nation of people divided into categories of color. America at its best is people of all colors united for the common good.

As in so many other areas, racial reconciliation and building opportunity simply won't happen unless there is committed engagement by people in communities and institutions throughout the nation. But in the absence of a crisis, we may be tempted to leave this work to so-called national leaders, such as politicians, clergy, business executives or the heads of nonprofit organizations. Such leaders can perhaps help set a tone, point out examples, offer support, and provide critical seed resources. But it takes all of us working together to prevent the kind of devastating crisis that pulls us together only after much pain and suffering. At the end of the day, we will make the most fundamental kind of progress when we work with our neighbors for change.

To help spur this work, I hope that in the coming years leaders of goodwill in individual communities will rededicate themselves to working together across racial and ethnic lines in community partnerships designed to help us build that more perfect union. In many areas, there may already be a vesting place, such as an active ecumenical council of faith leaders, or a human rights commission with broad-based public legitimacy. In other places, convening a group of leaders might require a special initiative by a mayor, a tribal leader, a newspaper publisher, an archbishop, a leading employer or the board of a civic organization.

Much of that work is already underway across America. And I am proud that my White House Office on One America is doing its part. In February, 1999, I launched the first-ever White House office specifically charged with keeping the nation focused on closing opportunity gaps and fostering racial reconciliation. Since its inception, the office has been instrumental in the formation of “Lawyers for One America,” a group of attorneys who have committed to change the racial justice landscape through greater diversity within the legal profession and increased pro bono service.

The Office also convened corporate leaders at the White House, who also pledged a renewed commitment to diversity in their workplaces and stronger efforts to close opportunity gaps. And the One America Office brought a broad cross-section of religious leaders to the White House to pledge that the faith community would focus more of its efforts on expanding diversity, ending racism and promoting racial reconciliation.

The White House Office on One America has helped focus and coordinate efforts throughout my Administration to build One America. It is my sincere hope that the next Administration will maintain this office and its noble purpose.

Building One America requires a new kind of leadership. Instead of looking outward for signs of hope, we must first look in the mirror and know that change is our responsibility. Rooted in the heart, that wisdom has the power to connect us in ways that nourish our dreams for a future that is better than our past. Whether you are able to give guidance to a single child or lead a national movement for justice, it all begins with a personal commitment to racial reconciliation. As Dr. King once said, “No social movement rolls in on the wheels of inevitability. Every step toward the goal of justice requires sacrifice, suffering, and struggle; the tireless exertions and passionate concern of dedicated individuals.”

Recommendation: Maintain the White House Office on One America. Every American should become engaged in the work of expanding opportunity for all and building One America.

CLOSE HOLD

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

01 JAN 8 PM 11:34

January 8, 2001

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

1-16-01

FROM: TERRY EDMONDS

THROUGH: JOHN PODESTA

SUBJECT: DRAFT OF PRESIDENTIAL MESSAGE TO CONGRESS ON RACE

Attached is a first draft of your Message to Congress on Race. It reflects the discussion you had with me, John and Bruce last week. As we discussed, the issues covered are: New Markets, fatherhood, Native Americans, education, civil rights enforcement, hate crimes, immigration, criminal justice reform (ex-offenders, mandatory minimums, racial profiling, death penalty), eliminating health disparities, voting reform and civic responsibility in the work of building One America.

With Bruce's indispensable help, and further consultation with John and Mark Penn we have prepared this draft for your review in hopes that we can produce and release a final document within the next few days.

Much of this document is based on the work that Chris Edley and I did last year, but it includes new issues and recommendations in areas that are of particular interest to you.

Upon your review and input, we will finalize this message and commence its rollout to coincide with Martin Luther King's birthday.

Thank you.

PHOTOCOPY
WJC HANDWRITING

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
MESSAGE TO CONGRESS
THE UNFINISHED WORK OF BUILDING ONE AMERICA
January 15, 2001

I hereby submit this message to the 107th Congress of the United States on the State of Race Relations in America. In it, I present my personal assessment of the current national mood concerning race relations and issue a set of concrete challenges that form what I call the unfinished business of building One America. This report is an outgrowth of my Administration's consistent emphasis on racial reconciliation, most clearly embodied in my Initiative on Race and our White House Office on One America. But it also stems from my own personal commitment to racial harmony that has its roots in the lessons and experiences of my childhood in the racially segregated south. I dedicate this report to countless civil rights champions of all colors who have struggled since the time of Frederick Douglas for an America free from the bondage of racial injustice.

Introduction

After eight years of service as President of the United States, I will relinquish that title on January 20, 2001, when George W. Bush takes the oath of office. But as a citizen, I will never abandon my commitment to my country or the ideals that propelled me into public service more than two decades ago. Foremost among those ideals is my commitment to racial reconciliation. It began for me with the crisis at Little Rock in 1957. I was only 11 years old at the time. Like most southerners then, I never attended school with a person of another race until I went to college. Though discrimination had always gnawed at me, it was the courage and sacrifice of those nine black children who endured constant attacks, both physical and emotional, to integrate Little Rock's Central High School, that made racial equality a driving commitment in my life. I came of age at the height of the civil rights struggles of the sixties: the 1962 March on Washington, the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and the Voting Rights Act of 1965. I vividly remember the assassinations of Martin Luther King, John F. Kennedy and Bobby Kennedy. Like any American who grew up in that era, my life was shaped by those triumphs and tragedies. And ever since that time, I have been inspired to join with others to carry on the fight for racial and ethnic justice.

As President that has meant building social and economic bridges strong enough for all of us to walk across. The overriding goal of my life in public service and as President is to ensure that all Americans have the opportunity to make the most of their God-given potential. That means equal opportunity for all. And it means finding ways to celebrate our great diversity while uniting around our common needs, concerns and values. In a nation where soon the only majority will be "American," I believe we need to talk about race in a new way – not just in terms of black and white. But in terms that recognize the essential worth and dignity of every human being regardless of color, accent or ethnicity. That is not to ignore the fact that racial tensions still exist in America. But, if we are ever going to overcome them, we must begin to focus more on the things that unite us than on those that divide us. Let's start with the remarkable fact that we are recognized around the globe as the most successful multi racial democracy in history, a model of peaceful co-existence in a world rent by ethnic, racial and religious conflict. With the current explosion of diversity in America, that image of ourselves is being tested as never before.

Fifty years ago, whites made up 90 percent of our population and the Census Bureau used only three major categories to describe us: white, Negro, and "other." Those distinctions were often reduced to just white and non-white. Since then, there has been a rapid growth in our Asian American, Hispanic, and American Indian populations. Hispanics, for example have grown from a population of just 7 million in 1960 to more than 25 million today. The Asian Pacific American population has skyrocketed as well – from 0.7% of the total U.S. population in 1970 to 2.9% in 1990.

The fact is, America is demographically undergoing one of the great transformations in our history. We are a changing people. Today, nearly one in ten people in the United States were born in another country and one in five schoolchildren are from immigrant families. Today, there is no majority race in Hawaii or Houston or New York City. In nine of our ten largest public school systems, over 75 percent of the students are minorities. In a little more than 50 years there will be no majority race in America.

Indeed, this unprecedented infusion of diversity brings with it a complex and sometimes controversial set of issues. Who, for example, decides who is white and who is a person of color? What will the terms "majority" and "minority" mean when there is no majority race in America? And perhaps, most importantly, will the black-white schism that has so defined racial struggle in America morph into new minority versus minority divisions or can we build new coalitions for social change and equal opportunity across all racial lines?

As our nation grows more diverse and the world grows more interdependent, our diversity will either be the great problem or the great promise of the 21st century. That is why an honest discussion and an even more earnest effort at racial reconciliation is so important now.

While this report is not intended to grapple with the full panoply of psychological, institutional and historical underpinnings of the racial divide in America, there are a number of concrete steps we can take to equalize opportunity, maximize the great potential of our growing diversity, and accelerate our journey to building the One America of our dreams. I will offer recommendations in seven broad areas of unfinished business: Economic and Social Progress, Education, Civil Rights Enforcement, Criminal Justice Reform, Eliminating Health Disparities, Election Reform and Civic Responsibility. I offer these recommendations in the hope that they will be helpful, not only to the new administration, but to all of us as we continue the work of healing the racial wounds of the past and pointing the way to a future of greater opportunity for all.

Since our founding, we have made much progress in weaving together the disparate strands of our diversity into a coat of many colors. We are a more prosperous, more secure and more united nation. But our work is not yet done. We must keep working to connect the threads and perfect the fabric of One America.

I. ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL PROGRESS

New Markets – Ensuring that the Benefits of Our Strong Economy Reach All

By any measure, America has prospered, both economically and socially over the last eight years. We are now experiencing the longest economic expansion in history. We have a balanced budget. We have turned decades of deficits into the biggest back-to-back surpluses in history. And we have achieved what many people once thought impossible – we are paying down our national debt. In fact, we are well on our way to making America debt free by the year 2010 – the first time this has happened since Andrew Jackson was President in 1835.

The rising tide of our strong economy is lifting all boats. Between 1980 and 1992 the bottom 60 percent of Americans saw little, if any, increase in income. Unemployment for African Americans and Hispanics reached record highs and the poverty rate for African Americans remained at or above 30 percent.

Today, for the first time in decades, wages are rising at all income levels. The unemployment rate for African Americans fell from 14.2 percent in 1992 to 7.3 percent today. The drop in unemployment among Hispanics has been just as dramatic – from 11.8 percent in 1992 to 5.0 percent today. We have the lowest child poverty in 20 years, the lowest poverty rate for single mothers ever recorded. The highest homeownership on record. Record numbers of Americans have left welfare for work, and those still on welfare are five times more likely to be working than eight years ago. And the number of families who own stock has grown by 40 percent.

But America is not just better off, we are a better people – more hopeful, more secure, more free, and more united than ever before in our history. We have worked to increase opportunity with a greater commitment to Head Start and secondary education, and by expanding access to college and job training, expanding loans to minority small businesses and launching efforts to close the digital divide and open new markets, bringing jobs and businesses to underserved communities.

There is also a rising tide of shared responsibility across the land. Crime is at a 25-year low. Teen pregnancy is down. Our environment is cleaner and more secure. Citizens are reclaiming control of their families and neighborhoods and we are seeing the re-emergence of our oldest and most basic values – opportunity for all, responsibility from all in a community of all Americans.

But despite all this progress, there remain pockets of poverty in America where the light of our glowing prosperity still does not shine. In December of 1997, I paid a visit to an area of the South Bronx that had once been close to the economic equivalent of an impoverished developing country. Too many of the people living there were under-employed and under-housed and the financial community had traditionally under-invested in them. When President Reagan visited the area in the 1980s, he compared it to London in the Blitz. For many it seemed like a community beyond hope or repair.

The transformation I saw three years later was remarkable. That South Bronx neighborhood had gone from decay and chaos to development and pride; from a fragmented collection of individuals struggling to survive to a cohesive community of citizens, working to build a better life for everyone. It was the kind of meeting that made me proud to be President and even prouder to be an American.

How did it happen? The people of the South Bronx simply refused to accept the conventional wisdom about the poor, and they worked hard to create economic opportunity, fueled by partnerships between the public and private sectors. They began by asking the right questions: “Why shouldn’t I be able to work in my hometown, or have a transportation system that will get me to good jobs? Why shouldn’t people here be able to get decent housing? Why shouldn’t our children be able to walk the streets here? Why shouldn’t we have decent schools here, and grocery stores and banks?” Over time, they got-- and created -- the right answers. Their story demonstrates something I have always believed in my heart. Most Americans—rich, poor or middle class—welcome the opportunity to work hard and make the most of their lives.

That determined spirit is exactly what I saw when I traveled across America to shine a spotlight on places still untouched by our nation’s growing prosperity. And I am pleased to say that I was joined by Speaker Hastert and a bipartisan group of political and business leaders who share my view that every American in every community has a stake in the prosperity all of us have worked so hard to build.

We began our New Markets tour in July of 1999, during four days of one of the hottest summers of the decade. I went to places that have been too long forgotten and too long left behind as our economy surges forward: Hazard, Kentucky, in the heart of Appalachia; the city of Clarksdale, in the Mississippi Delta; the city of East St. Louis, where poverty is three times the national average; South Dakota’s Pine Ridge Reservation, where unemployment is nearly 75 percent; the neighborhood of South Phoenix, Arizona where unemployment is more than twice the national average; and the Watts section of Los Angeles, an area that for decades has been a symbol of urban neglect and isolation in a nation of plenty.

Yes, we did see poverty, but it may surprise you to know that we saw an awful lot of promise too. I went to these places to promote our New Markets Initiative – a strategy that builds on our successful empowerment agenda. It is designed to create the conditions for economic success in distressed communities by leveraging $15 billion in new investment in urban and rural areas. It was important that business leaders joined us at every stop so that they could see for themselves what they had been missing. I wanted them to see the enormous opportunities in America’s new markets. As Robert Kennedy said in 1967, “We must turn the power and resources of our private enterprise system to the underdeveloped nations within our midst.” We need to unleash the power of mainstream financial markets linked to effective community-based partners so that people in distressed communities can have access to what I call the tools of opportunity—these include access to credit, capital and jobs. This is a vital part of an empowerment agenda that must also include a raise in the minimum wage, providing child care and health care so that parents can succeed at home and at work. And equal pay for equal work.

Hard-pressed communities cannot be expected to lift themselves up on their own. In addition to their own sweat equity, they need and deserve help. That is why we have worked so hard to put in place an empowerment agenda from a number of sources, including local and federal programs, financial institutions, and technical assistance providers. Without a critical level of credit and financing, however, all their efforts will be in vain.

I am pleased that the Congress put partisanship aside to pass our New Markets initiative last month. But that is only one part of an effective empowerment agenda. We must also raise the minimum wage, provide child care and health care so parents can succeed at home and at work, and make sure women receive equal pay for equal work. If we commit ourselves to that agenda, we can ensure that we leave no one behind as we move into the 21st century.

Recommendation: Continue to build on the success of New Markets and pass an empowerment agenda that includes an increase in the minimum wage, more child care and health care for working parents and equal pay for equal work for women.

Responsible Fatherhood

But economic empowerment alone is not enough to build strong communities. The most basic building block of strong communities is strong families. Every child deserves the love and support of both parents. Still, nearly one in three American children grows up without a father. These children are five times more likely to live in poverty than children with both parents at home. Clearly, demanding and supporting responsible fatherhood is critical to lifting all children out of poverty and is an important component of welfare reform.

Throughout our Administration, Vice President Gore and I have encouraged fathers to take an active and responsible role in their children's lives. We worked hard to ensure that absent parents provide both financial and emotional support for their children. Tough new child support measures promoted by our Administration contributed to doubling child support collections since 1992, while the number of fathers taking responsibility for their children by establishing paternity tripled. Many fathers want to do right by their children, but need help to do it. The Welfare-to-Work program that we fought for in 1997 provided a major new funding source to help low-income noncustodial parents (mainly fathers) work and support their children, and the FY 2001 budget will give state, local, tribal, and community- and faith-based grantees an additional two years to spend existing funds. We provided communities and families with new tools to increase fathers' involvement in their children's learning. And, teen pregnancy and birth rates have declined to the lowest levels on record.

My FY 2001 budget proposed several new initiatives to ensure that noncustodial parents who can afford to pay child support do, to ensure that more of the child support paid goes directly to families, and to help more "dead broke" fathers go to work. My Administration worked closely with Congress to seek enactment of the Child Support Distribution Act of 2000, which included many elements of our proposals for child support reforms and responsible fatherhood initiatives; unfortunately, the 106th Congress failed to pass this legislation, despite strong bi-partisan support. I urge the new Congress to pass a bipartisan fatherhood bill to help more fathers live up to their responsibilities and to strengthen families and communities.

Recommendation: Pass a bipartisan fatherhood bill.

Native Americans

One year ago, I emphasized in my State of the Union address that we should "begin this new century by honoring our historic responsibility to empower the first Americans." While we are living in a time of great prosperity and progress, for many Native Americans, the picture is quite different. Even though economic conditions in Indian country have improved in recent years, the social, economic and educational status of American Indian and Alaska Native communities continue to lag behind the rest of the United States.

That is why I made improving conditions in Indian Country a high priority during my Administration. We worked with tribes on a government-to-government basis to bring about positive change. Most recently, I signed a new executive order that requires consultation with Indian tribal governments in the development of Federal policies that have tribal implications. I believe that honoring our trust responsibilities and fostering the government-to-government interactions is essential to improving relationships with tribes.

In order to lift up Native American communities in this century, we must focus on three areas: economic development, health care, and education. To that end, we know that a New Markets approach holds much promise for many Native American communities. I saw this first hand when I visited the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota and the Navajo Nation in Shiprock, New Mexico to highlight the needs of our Nation's first peoples and to encourage private investments in these areas. The final FY2001 budget agreement contains my historic new bipartisan New Markets and Community Renewal Initiative which contains tax credits and assistance for small businesses for underserved communities across the Nation – including Indian Country. I also fought for legislation – also included in the final budget agreement -- that will treat tribes similarly to state and local governments under the Federal Unemployment Tax Act. Last year, I proposed a historic budget with the largest increase ever for key new and existing programs for Native American communities. Today, I am proud to say that we won much of our request with the final budget including an increase of $1.1 billion for Native Americans. The centerpieces of the final budget represent the priorities for Indian Country. We have won historic new increases for Bureau of Indian Affairs school construction and repair which will provide an important down payment on reducing the backlog of repairs and renovations needed. We also secured $75 million for renovations for public schools with high concentrations of Native American students. I am also proud to say that we are continuing our 1000 new Native teacher initiative, and we were able to create a new Native American Education Foundation to encourage private gifts to further educational opportunities for American Indian children.

The Vice President and I also championed and won the largest increase for the Indian Health Service – an increase of 10 percent over FY2000 – to provide additional primary care services, to increase drug and alcohol prevention and treatment services, and to provide a $240 million three-funding increase for a special diabetes program for Native Americans.

My sincere hope is that these budget victories will provide a baseline for the next Administration to continue to work with tribes and lift up the lives of this Nation's first Americans.

Recommendation: Continue to work in government-to-government partnership with tribes to improve economic conditions, health care and education in Native American communities.

II. EDUCATIONAL EXCELLENCE FOR ALL CHILDREN

When Vice President Gore and I came into office in 1993, we pledged to the American people that we would strengthen education at every level and challenge the status quo by investing more in and demanding more from our nation's schools. Because every child can learn and every child deserves the opportunity to realize their dreams, the promise of a world-class education must be available to all Americans regardless of their income, where they live, or the color of their skin. As we enter the 21st century, nothing could be more important than investing in the public schools that will prepare our children to be successful in an increasingly global economy. The progress of our efforts in this regard will be remembered not by how many succeed, but by how many are left behind. Too often in the past we accepted low expectations for some children, using labels and categories to excuse our failure to educate all students.

During the last eight years we have clearly made progress in improving our schools and helping more children succeed. For example, test scores for African American students are up in virtually all categories, and between 1992 and 1999, math scores for Hispanic students increased at the 4th, 8th, and 12th grade levels. In addition, more minority students are being challenged by rigorous coursework, which is an important precursor to post-secondary education. Three times as many African American students took Advanced Placement (AP) exams in 1999 as took the tests in 1988, and nearly 70,000 Hispanic students took AP exams in 1999, the most ever.

Access to post-secondary opportunities also continues to increase for minority students: The percentage of African American high school graduates who go on to college has increased from 50 percent in 1992 to 58.5 percent in 1997, and the percentage of Hispanic high school graduates going directly to college increased from 55 percent in 1992 to 66 percent in 1997. Also, the percentage of Hispanic high school graduates age 25-29 who have a college degree is the highest ever. These improvements show that our commitment to education over the past eight years is helping more of America's students succeed, but they also highlight the fact that much work remains to be done. For example, achievement gaps between Hispanic and white students persist at all grade levels and across most academic subjects, and over 80 percent of Hispanics are not introduced to college "gateway" classes such as algebra and geometry by the eighth grade. These gaps likely contribute to the unacceptably low high school completion rate for Latinos, which has not changed substantially in the past several years.

Eight years ago, the debate on education was usually divided into partisan camps arguing over false choices. On one side were those who believed that money could solve all the problems in our schools, and who feared that setting high standards and holding schools and teachers and students accountable to them would only hold back poor children, especially poor minority children. On the other side, there were those who felt education was a state responsibility, and did not need a comprehensive national response – or the leadership of a federal Department of Education. They were willing to give up on our public schools and many of the children in them because they did not believe that we could ensure a world-class education for all students, and therefore, were unwilling to spend money trying. We believed both of those positions were wrong because every child can learn. There was plenty of evidence, even then, that high levels of learning were possible in even the most difficult social and economic circumstances. The challenge was to make the school transformation going on in some schools available and real in all schools. We sought to do this by both investing more in our schools and demanding more from them.

The strategy of greater accountability and greater investment should continue to guide our efforts to improve education. Last year, for the first time, Congress failed to fulfill its obligation to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act. In May of 1999 I sent Congress a proposal that would fundamentally change the way the federal government invests in our schools -- to support more of what we know works, and to stop supporting what we know does not work. It would help put quality teachers in all classrooms; send report cards to all parents on the performance of each school; end social promotion, but offer help for students rather than blaming them when the system fails them; and require a plan to identify failing schools and improve them, or shut them down. It is past time for Congress to act on this legislation, and I hope they will do it in a way that makes progress on accountability, while increasing key investments in what works.

The fundamental lesson of the last seven years, it seems to me, is that an education investment without accountability can be a real waste of money. But accountability without investment can be a real waste of effort. All schools need adequate resources to provide all of our children with a world-class education and yet too often, many schools in poor communities cannot meet this goal because they simply don't have the resources. Long-standing gaps in access to educational resources exist, including disparities by race and ethnicity. That's why I am appointing a Presidential Commission on resource equity charged with gathering data on this problem and reporting to the President, Congress, and the nation on the best strategies to close this equity gap.

I've also asked Congress to make a range of other investments to make accountability work. These include reduced class sizes, hiring additional, well-qualified teachers, and expanding after-school and summer school programs to help children succeed.

We know that children learn better in smaller classes. This year, we won $1.6 billion keeping us on track of hiring 100,000 new teachers who are desperately needed to lower class size in the early grades throughout this country.

We also know that children cannot not be expected to lift themselves up in schools that are literally falling down. The average school building in the United States is 42 years old, while in many cities the average is 65 years old. There are schools in New York City, for example, that are still being heated by coal-fired furnaces. For four years I have tried to get the Congress to approve my $25 billion tax credit to help to build or modernize 5,000 schools. America's school children are still waiting for this help. This year, we did win $1.2 billion in spending for urgent school repairs. This is a start, but far short of making the kind of investment needed to provide our children with the schools they deserve.

Since 1997, we've made progress in expanding after-school programs that offer additional learning opportunities for students and prevent juvenile crime. This year we nearly doubled funding for 21st Century Community Learning Centers to $846 million, serving 1.3 million students nationwide. I call on Congress to continue its support for these proven programs and further reduce the estimated 4 million latch-key children in our country.

With the largest expansion of college aid since the GI Bill, we are opening the doors of college wider so that more of our young people can not only walk through them, but walk out with a degree four years later. The percentage of young people going to college is up 10 percent since 1990. That is because of investments like our GEAR UP mentoring program which, with increases included in the FY 2001 budget, will now help 2.1 million low income middle school students finish school and prepare for college. It's because of the HOPE Scholarship and lifetime learning tax credits, which are helping 10 million Americans pay for college. And it because we have worked so hard for more affordable student loans, more Pell Grants and more work-study slots

Clearly, there is a new consensus for greater investment and greater accountability in education. It says to every child, regardless of race, ethnicity, income or background -- you can learn. And it says to the American people, education will do more to strengthen both our economy and our national community than a big, across the board tax cut which cannot be justified and which will either throw us back to the bad old days of deficits or require big cuts in domestic programs, including education, or both.

Recommendation: Continue to invest more in and demand more from our public schools. Do not sacrifice the education of our children to a big, across the board tax cut.

III. CIVIL RIGHTS ENFORCEMENT

Despite all the progress we have made in tearing down walls of segregation and barriers of opportunity, an old enemy lurks in the shadows. It continues to poison our perceptions, undermine our progress and threaten our future. Racism has been our nation's constant curse, predating the nation's founding by a century and a half. And race has been our constant struggle. The way out begins with facing and speaking the truth about our past, even when it is somewhat painful.

Consider this: We were born with a Declaration of Independence which asserted that we are all created equal and a Constitution that enshrined slavery. We fought a bloody civil war to abolish slavery and preserve the union, but we remained a house divided and unequal by law for another century. We advanced across the continent in the name of freedom, yet in doing so we pushed Native Americans off their land, often crushing their culture, their livelihood and their lives. We eagerly recruited laborers from Asia to help build our fledgling economy but in a time of war, forcibly removed more than 100,000 Japanese Americans from their homes and into internment camps. Our Statue of Liberty welcomes poor, tired, huddled masses of immigrants to our shores, but each new wave has felt the sting of discrimination, and for many that discrimination has burdened their native-born children and grandchildren. We must face these harsh contradictions squarely as a critical first step to healing the wounds of our past and unleashing the power and promise of our future. We must become One America in the 21st century.

After I launched the national initiative on race in San Diego in 1997, people asked me why, in the absence of a great national crisis like Little Rock or the Rodney King riots, should the American people focus anew on the challenge of racial reconciliation. My answer is two-fold. First and foremost, our work is not yet done. And our present progress and confidence give us the best chance to finish it. We have moved out of the epicenter of racism that rocked our nation from the time of the Indian conquest, slavery and Japanese internment until the great breakthroughs of the civil rights era, but we are still experiencing the aftershocks. Though people of color have more opportunities than ever today, we still see evidence of unequal treatment in the litany of disparities in jobs and wealth, in education, in criminal justice, that so often still break down along the color line.

Secondly, building One America is not just a fancy slogan. It is a rallying cry in defense of our future. As we have seen so often in other parts of the world, ancient ethnic divisions in the age of the new global economy are ripping some nations apart. That has not, and will not happen here in America. The main reason is our fundamental faith in freedom, embodied in the words, if not always the actions, of our founders.

I believe it is also tied to our belief in a spiritual law common to every major world religion. We hear its echo in our call for One America. It is the law of oneness. E pluribus Unum: Out of many, one. In Christianity it is expressed as loving thy neighbor as thyself. In Islam we are instructed to "Do unto all men as you wish to have done to you and reject for others what you would reject for yourself. The Talmud teaches us, "Should anyone turn aside the right of the stranger, it is as though he were to turn aside the right of the most high God." As a nation that takes pride in both the depth and diversity of religious expression, we must embrace racial reconciliation as a way to honor our highest spiritual values.

In 1998, my Advisory Board on race made this prescient observation: "[N]ow, more than ever, racial discrimination is not only about skin color and other physical characteristics associated with race; it is also about other aspects of our identity, such as ethnicity, national origin, language, accent, religion, and cultural customs."ⁱ While overt racial prejudice has diminished, the discrimination of today is often more camouflaged. In a sense, this makes it more dangerous: If you are denied a job, apartment, or prompt service in a store on the basis of bigotry that is never expressed, and even cloaked in politeness, then you have no signal telling you to object, to fight. In order to build One America, to finish the work that we have started, it is vitally important that all Americans understand that discrimination — intentional or not, obvious or camouflaged — still exists and that each of us has the opportunity and responsibility to help eradicate it. This is about more than enforcing laws. It is about living up to our values and keeping our promises.

With our unprecedented strength, it is all the more intolerable that there are still doors to opportunity that are padlocked by prejudice. That is why I have proposed substantial new investments to strengthen civil rights enforcement at the federal, state, and local levels. Although money by itself will not achieve our civil rights goals, a strong enforcement agenda depends on a sufficient level of resources. But we must act strategically to put the federal investments where they can be the most effective. That is why, for eight years, I have fought so hard for additional investments in civil rights enforcement. These funds are critical to helping the Justice Department expand investigations and prosecutions of criminal civil rights cases. HUD needs adequate resources to reduce housing discrimination and the Departments of Education, Agriculture and Labor will be able to improve and expand civil rights compliance and enforcement programs.

And as our comprehensive review of federal affirmative action programs revealed, affirmative action is still an effective and important tool for expanding educational and economic opportunity to all Americans.

The fact is, important gaps in civil rights law and their enforcement remain. I believe that the simple business of enforcing anti-discrimination laws should be a bipartisan commitment. We should be able to agree on at least this much — enforce the law and promote voluntary compliance with it.

Recommendation: Maintain essential investments in civil rights enforcement.

Eliminate Hate Crimes

There is nothing more important to the future of this country than our standing together against intolerance, prejudice, and violent bigotry. No American should be subjected to violence on account of his or her race, color, national origin, religion, sexual orientation, gender or disability. Americans of conscience were horrified by the vicious murder of James Byrd, Jr. in Jasper, Texas and the cowardly torture-murder of Matthew Shepard in Wyoming. But we must do more than shake our heads in shame—we must back up our outrage with tough sanctions against those who perpetuate these crimes. Hate crimes are criminal acts driven by bias against another person's race, religion, disability, sexual orientation, or ethnicity.ⁱⁱ In 1997, the FBI reported 8,049 incidents of such crimes.ⁱⁱⁱ Of these, 5,546 were based on the victim's race or ethnicity. It is suspected that many more go unreported. My administration has stood strong against hate crimes through vigorous prosecution under the civil rights statutes. Since 1989, over 500 defendants have been convicted on federal criminal civil rights charges for interfering with the federally protected rights of minority victims. I am proud of what we have done to combat hate crimes, but there is much more to do.

First, we must continue to enforce our civil rights laws vigorously. Under Attorney General Janet Reno's leadership, the Justice Department has taken aim at hate crimes with more prosecutions and tougher punishments. To increase our effectiveness, we have assigned substantially more FBI agents and prosecutors to work in this area, and the Justice Department has marshaled the support of every United States Attorney to establish or strengthen community enforcement strategies to combat hate crimes. The centerpiece of the Attorney General's Anti-Hate Crime Initiative is the formation of local working groups in each federal judicial district consisting of local community leaders and federal, state, and local law enforcement officials. These working groups are helping to improve coordination, community involvement, training, education, data collection, and as an education tool, the Justice Department is also spearheading the creation of hate crime resource guides for teachers, law enforcement personnel, and state and local prosecutors.

Second, we must ensure that when hate crimes do occur, we have the law enforcement tools necessary to identify the perpetrators swiftly and bring them to justice. In this regard, we must pass a Hate Crimes Prevention Act because all Americans deserve protection from crimes of hate. Currently, the law requires we prove that the defendant committed an offense not only because of the victim's race, color, religion, or national origin, but also because of the victim's participation in one of six "federally protected activities."

The federally protected activity requirement has impeded our efforts to prosecute hate crimes. For example, the federal government can prosecute a violent, racially-motivated hate crime that occurs in a public school's parking lot, but we may lack jurisdiction if the crime occurs in a private yard across the street from the school. To point out another outrageous limitation, the federal government's ability to respond to a racially motivated attack that occurs in front of a convenience store may depend on whether or not the store has a video game inside. In fact, under our current law, the federal government does not have the authority to prosecute James Byrd Jr.'s killers. Other than verbally condemning the actions of the perpetrators — at least one of them an avowed racist—who chained Mr. Byrd to a pickup truck in the predawn darkness and dragged him to his death, we would not have been able to use the power of the state to sanction this crime. We must close this gap in the law. The Hate Crimes Prevention Act will expand the Justice Department's ability to prosecute hate crimes by removing needless jurisdictional requirements for existing crimes. Our federal officers must have the authority to work in concert with state and local law enforcement agencies to end hate crimes.

In addition to removing jurisdictional barriers, the Hate Crimes Prevention Act will strengthen current law by giving Federal prosecutors the power to prosecute hate crimes committed because of the victim's sexual orientation, gender, or disability. As in the case of James Byrd, Jr., the federal government did not have the legal jurisdiction to prosecute Matthew Shepard's murderers under current law. Matthew, a 21-year old college freshman, was beaten in the dead of night, tied to a fence, and left to die alone. At Matthew's funeral, his cousin predicted that "Matt will have made a difference in the lives of thousands." I want to make sure he does. Congress and the next Administration should enact a bill that sanctions all hate crimes on an equal basis.

Let me emphasize that with the enactment of the Hate Crimes Prevention Act, state and local law enforcement agencies will continue to take the lead in investigating and prosecuting all types of hate crimes. For instance, the Justice Department will continue to defer prosecution in the first instance to state and local law enforcement officials except in highly sensitive cases where the federal interest is significant. The Justice Department will also refrain from following up a state prosecution with a federal prosecution of the same incident unless the state has left a substantial federal interest demonstrably unvindicated. The Hate Crimes Prevention Act will, however, strengthen our ability to work effectively as partners with state and local law enforcement, and to serve an important backstop function with regard to a wider range of hate-motivated violence than federal law currently permits.

Opponents of the civil rights legislation in the 1960s often said, "You can't legislate morality." It is true that a statute cannot exorcise hate—that is a personal demon that calls for a moral cleansing. But law does have a function in proclaiming our values and differentiating right from wrong. In that sense, over time, law can squeeze hate out of our public lives and eventually out of all but the most diseased hearts. The starting point is to make violent acts of hate against our neighbors a federal crime. And we should do it.

Recommendation: Pass the hate Crimes Prevention Act.

Immigration

America has a rich and lengthy history of immigrants who have contributed to every facet of our society as they left an indelible mark of progress and positivism. Those who have traveled to our nation in search of a better life share common American values and are driven to realize the possibility and promise that characterizes our nation. I believe that we must help these new Americans become successful, responsible participants in American life and ensure that immigrants and their families are treated fairly under our immigration laws.

Since 1997, my Administration has proposed legislation to eliminate disparate treatment under our immigration laws for Salvadorans, Guatemalans, Hondurans, Haitians, and Liberians who fled civil unrest and human rights abuses, and are currently living in the United States, working, paying taxes, and raising families. I strongly urge this Congress to finally pass the bipartisan proposal that will provide these individuals with equal opportunity to regularize their immigration status. And I implore you to permanently reinstate section 245(i) of the Immigration and Nationality Act to allow families to stay together while applications for adjustment of status await approval. Legislation to provide relief for certain individuals tragically separated from their families by changes in the 1996 immigration law must be enacted. Passage of this bipartisan legislation, stalled in the final days of the 106th Congress, is imperative if we are to achieve fairness in our immigration system.

I believe that legal immigrants should have the same economic opportunity, and bear the same responsibility, as other members of society. In the Balanced Budget Act of 1997 and the Agricultural Research Act of 1998, I fought for and succeeded in reversing some of the unfair cuts in benefits to legal immigrants. I have proposed a budget that builds upon the Administration's progress of restoring these important benefits by providing $2.5 billion over five years to allow states to provide health care to legal immigrant children and pregnant women, to restore SSI and Medicaid to certain legal immigrants with disabilities, and to restore Food Stamp eligibility to certain legal immigrants who are elderly, or live in a household with Food Stamp-eligible children. However, despite bipartisan support, the 106th Congress failed to act on these initiatives. I urge this Congress to stand behind families that pay taxes and play by the rules by passing these provisions to restore vital benefits for legal immigrants.

Today's immigrants are driven by a dream – and to achieve that dream, they seek to learn the ways of this land and become full participants in American society. To this end, Vice President Gore and I proposed the English Language/Civics Initiative, an innovative program to help states and communities provide limited English proficient (LEP) individuals with expanded access to high-quality English-language instruction linked to civics and life skills instruction, including understanding and navigating the U.S. government system, the public education system, the workplace, and other key institutions of American life. This important initiative is a powerful tool in building a stronger American community. The 107th Congress should expand this initiative to help more immigrants become full, productive participants in American life.

We must commit ourselves to ensuring that students with limited English skills get the extra help they need in order to speak English comfortably and confidently and meet the same high standards expected for all students. Under the Administration's Hispanic Education Action Plan (HEAP), which has increased overall by $1.2 billion over the past three years, the federal investment in bilingual education programs has grown from $198 million in 1998 to $296 million in 2001. Bilingual education funding helps school districts teach English and provides teachers with the training they need to teach LEP students, while the Immigrant Education program helps more than a thousand school districts provide supplemental instructional services to recent immigrant students. In addition to continuing to expand these vital investments, Congress should seize the opportunity to reauthorize the Elementary and Secondary Education Act and enact the Administration's proposals to offer additional help so that all teachers are well-trained to meet the needs of students with Limited English Proficiency, and make schools and districts more accountable for helping children with Limited English Proficiency master their academic subjects and learn English.

Migrant families face particularly difficult obstacles to gaining the education and training that will help them improve their standard of living. I have worked to improve the Migrant Education Program in the 1994 reauthorization of the Elementary and Secondary Act, and through Hispanic Education Action Plan (HEAP) won $75 million in increases to the program. As part of HEAP, we have also increased funds for the High School Equivalency Program, the College Assistance Migrant Program, and funding for a Migrant Youth Job Training Demonstration. It is my belief that this Congress should continue to expand the reach of these critical programs.

Recommendation: Restore vital benefits to legal immigrants, continue to help immigrants learn English and the duties of citizenship, and invest in education and training that can help immigrants become productive citizens.

IV. CRIMINAL JUSTICE REFORM

In the three decades before the start of the Clinton-Gore Administration, the violent crime rate had skyrocketed by 400 percent. Many thought that rising crime would never reverse. The soaring crime rate took a particularly devastating toll in communities of color. The year I took office, homicide victimization for young black men ages 18-24 years old was at its highest level on record and was over ten times higher than the rate for white men of the same age.

Our Administration took a new approach to fighting crime with innovative policies to help communities reduce crime and restore public safety – by helping communities put 100,000 police on the beat, supporting community policing strategies so police could work closely with residents to develop solutions to local crime problems, imposing tough, targeted penalties for the most violent offenders, and providing more after school programs to keep youth supervised and out of trouble.

As a result of these and other efforts, the incidence of crime has dropped to new lows. The homicide rate is at its lowest level in 33 years, gun crime has declined by 40 percent, and the overall crime rate has dropped for over 8 straight years – the longest continuous decline on record. Moreover, people of color have in many cases experienced the sharpest decreases in crime victimization. For instance, since 1993, the murder rate for African Americans has dropped 40 percent, compared to 28 percent for whites, and property crime victimization decreased 45 percent for Hispanic households as compared to 37 percent for non-Hispanics. These are remarkable achievements.

Despite recent and substantial decreases in crime across racial lines, persons of color remain significantly more likely than whites to be victims of crime, especially violent crime. Persons of color are also much more likely to live in fear of crime. No American should have to live that way. We must remember that in the poorest, highest crime neighborhoods in this country, the vast majority of people get up every day, go to work, obey the law, pay their taxes, and do the best to raise their kids. More than anywhere else, these communities – which are often communities of color -- want, need, and deserve strong law enforcement to restore order, reduce crime, and help build stronger communities.

However, these same communities often have less trust in law enforcement – limiting its effectiveness where it is most needed. So, while we have attained historic reductions in crime, we must build on our successful strategy and develop additional ways to make every community even safer. And in doing so, we must strengthen trust and confidence law enforcement in the criminal justice system overall.

Community Policing and “Hot Spots”

First and foremost, we must reduce crime and restore order in communities of color where crime and fear of crime are greatest. Every American has the right to live in a safe community, and we should not be able to identify high-crime neighborhoods based on the race of the residents who live there. Community policing should serve as the cornerstone for our efforts. We must continue to add another 50,000 more community police to our nation’s streets and spread the philosophy of community policing which brings local police and residents together in developing ways to best solve and prevent local crime problems and disorder. We should further expand this successful model to other areas of the criminal justice system including prosecution, with new community prosecutors working side-by-side with community police to address quality of life issues and help prevent crime before it starts.

I challenge the Congress and the next Administration to create a crime “hot spots” initiative – to target more resources to communities and neighborhoods that continue to have high crime rates or emerging crime problems. In crime “hot spots,” federal, state and local law enforcement would work together to identify high-crime locations through technology such as computer mapping. There would also be an increase in policing of high-crime areas, especially during the hours when crime is most likely to occur.

Recommendation: Continue to build on effective community policing efforts with new community prosecutors and a new crime “hot spots” initiative.

Gun Safety Legislation

We must also address the problem of guns in the wrong hands – a pervasive problem in many of our high-crime communities. Gun violence has taken a high toll on minority youth; for example, of the ten children killed each day by gun violence nearly 4 are black youth. We know that sensible and strong gun laws can make a difference in saving lives. The Brady Law alone has stopped over 611,000 felons, fugitives, and domestic abusers from buying guns through background checks since I signed it into law in 1993. The next Administration and Congress should take the next step to keep guns out of the hands of criminals and children by passing common sense gun legislation that closes the gun show loophole and requires safety locks for handguns to help prevent child access to guns. I also call on more gun manufacturers to join us in the fight to protect our children and keep guns out of the wrong hands.

Recommendation: Pass common-sense gun safety legislation to close the gun show loophole and require safety locks to prevent child access to guns.

Ex-Offenders

Another public safety area that must be addressed is the more than 600,000 ex-offenders that will be released from prison and reenter communities each year across the country. Many of these ex-offenders will return to communities of color. We need to maximize opportunities to help keep released offenders on the right track and out of trouble, able to meet their family obligations, and equipped to lead productive lives. We should foster the creation of reentry courts, similar to drug courts, and reentry partnerships, to provide more community and judicial supervision, more probation and parole oversight, drug treatment, job training, and links to community groups such as faith-based and fatherhood organizations. Our Administration secured $115 million in the most recent budget to get this initiative started. I challenge the Congress and the next Administration to continue this important effort and work with state and local governments to meet this growing public safety challenge.

Recommendation: Continue efforts to ensure that ex-offenders re-enter communities as productive citizens who never return to a life of crime or prison.

Crime Prevention

And finally, we must prevent young people of color from becoming involved in crime and the criminal justice system in the first place. The need is clear: for black males born today, the odds of going to prison are greater than going to college. This is unacceptable. That is why we must give our youth alternatives to the streets, where they are often most at-risk for being involved in, or falling prey to gangs, drugs and crime. We must continue to increase the number of after school programs that help to provide adult supervision and activities for young people during the afternoon and early evening hours when juvenile crime peaks. And we must make sure that they have strong adult supervision, as well as role models and mentors.

As we work to further reduce crime across America, we also must strive to ensure fairness in the criminal justice system so that it has the complete confidence of all of our nation's citizens. To do this, we must address important issues underlying the present racial gap in trust and confidence in our criminal justice system, including racial profiling, sentencing policy, and the death penalty.

Recommendation: Help young people avoid crime by giving them something to say yes to: afterschool programs, adult supervision and role models.

Racial Profiling

We know that in order for police to be truly effective in their work, they must have the trust and cooperation of the residents in their community. Yet, in many communities, especially minority communities, there remains a disturbing lack of trust in law enforcement among residents. Among the reasons for this distrust are reports of police misconduct such as racial profiling. The vast majority of law enforcement officers in this nation are dedicated public servants of great courage and high moral character who deserve the respect of citizens of all races. However, we cannot tolerate officers who mistreat law-abiding individuals and who bring their own racial bias to the job. Racial profiling is the opposite of good police work where actions are based on hard facts, not stereotypes. Simply stated, no person should be targeted by law enforcement because of the color of his or her skin. We must stop the morally indefensible and deeply corrosive practice of racial profiling. While some remedies are already available, we know this practice is widespread. There ought to be there ought to be a way

Recent polls show that while many individuals believe that law enforcement engage in racial profiling, there is very little data on traffic stops to determine where and when it is occurring. That is why I ordered federal law enforcement agencies to begin to collect data on the race, ethnicity and gender of individuals subject to certain stops and searches. Federal law enforcement should make such data collection permanent and expand it to include more sites so we can identify problem areas and take concrete steps to eliminate racial profiling anywhere it exists. In addition, I challenge state and local law enforcement to take similar action to collect data. The federal government can help by providing funding and technical assistance to help them in their efforts. We should also provide for more police integrity training and resources to promote local dialogue to strengthen trust between police and the residents they serve.

But I believe we should go a step further. Even with many of these remedies already in place, we know that racial profiling continues to occur. We must find a way to construct and pass a national law banning racial profiling so that every citizen is assured that no police department and no community will tolerate this terrible practice.

Recommendation: Continue efforts to document extent of problem and pass a national law banning the practice of racial profiling.

Mandatory Minimum Sentencing

We must re-examine our national sentencing policies, focusing particularly on mandatory minimum sentences for non-violent offenders. With the prison and jail population at roughly two million, it is time to take a hard look at who we are sending to prison – and whether our sentencing policies make sense given current circumstances. Over the long term, we should not be satisfied when so many Americans, especially so many people of color, are behind bars for so long, with so little hope of putting their lives back together when they get out. We must demand a system that actually works to reduce criminality and recidivism.

One way to do this is to use the power of the criminal justice system to help offenders to kick their drug habits. As we have seen, addiction plays a key role as to why many people end up in prison to begin with: more than two-thirds of all state prisoners report past drug use, nearly one in five committed their crime to get money to buy drugs, and one-third were under the influence of drugs at the time of their offense. In order to help break this cycle of drugs and crime, we should implement a rigorous course of drug testing and treatment for federal and state prisoners, probationers and parolees. Offenders should be required to be drug-free when they leave prison and stay free of drugs in order keep their freedom. In addition, we should further spread alternatives to incarceration for nonviolent drug offenders, such as drug courts. Drug courts, which employ judicial supervision, escalating sanctions, and frequent drug testing and treatment in lieu of incarceration have been shown to significantly reduce recidivism and future drug use.

In general, sentences must be firm, but they must also be fair and fit the crime. In the 1980's, mandatory minimum sentences were adopted to attack the horrible problem of crack cocaine and other drugs that were ravaging our cities. While mandatory minimums have been effective in removing hardened criminals from the streets, they have also swept in many lower level offenders, for whom better alternatives may exist, as discussed above.

However, one penalty I believe can be changed immediately is the 1986 federal law that creates a 100-to-1 ratio between crack and powder cocaine sentencing policies. This substantial disparity has led to a perception of racial injustice and inconsistency in the federal criminal justice system. Republican and Democratic Members of Congress alike have called for a repeal of this inequitable policy. Congress should revise the law to shrink the disparity to 10-to-1; specifically, the amount of powder cocaine required to trigger a five-year mandatory sentence should be reduced from 500 to 250 grams while the amount of crack cocaine required for the same sentence should increase from 5 grams to 25 grams. This difference would continue to reflect the greater addictive power of crack cocaine, the greater violence associated with crack cocaine trafficking, and the importance of targeting mid- and higher level traffickers instead of low level drug offenders.

At the same time, I encourage states with mandatory minimum drug sentences to adopt a “safety valve” similar to the provision I signed into law in the 1994 Crime Act. The federal “safety valve” allows non-violent drug offenders with no more than a minor criminal record to be exempt from the federal mandatory minimum sentences.

Recommendation: Re-examine federal sentencing guidelines, particularly mandatory minimums for non-violent offenders. And shrink the disparity between crack and powder cocaine sentencing from the current 100-to-1 to 10-to-1.

The Death Penalty

Finally, I believe we bear a special obligation to do everything we can to ensure that the death penalty is administered fairly. Justice Department studies have found that minorities are over-represented as both victims and defendants in both the federal and state death penalty systems. While this does not necessarily show that these systems are fundamentally broken or that they discriminate, they confirm that we must work hard to ensure fairness at every step of this irreversible punishment. Congress can take an important step forward by passing legislation like that introduced by Senator Leahy, which provides greater access to post-conviction DNA testing as well as increased access to competent counsel for defendants in capital cases. These are important steps towards guaranteeing a system that is fair and just in its results and in its process – so we are absolutely sure the system does not punish the innocent and that the innocent are not convicted in the first place.

Recommendation: Pass and sign legislation to provide greater access to post-conviction DNA testing and increased access to competent counsel for defendants in capital cases.

V. ELIMINATING RACIAL AND ETHNIC HEALTH DISPARITIES

Nowhere are the divisions of race and ethnicity more sharply drawn than in the health of our people. Despite notable progress in the overall health of the nation, there are continuing disparities in the burden of illness and death experienced by African Americans, Hispanics, American Indians and Alaska Natives, and Pacific Islanders, compared to the U.S. population as a whole. African Americans are 40 percent more likely to die from heart disease than whites. Hispanic Americans have two to three times the rate of stomach cancer. Native Americans have the highest risk for diabetes of any population in the country -- three times the rate of whites. Asian Americans are as much as five times more likely to die from liver cancer associated with hepatitis. We do not know all the reasons for these disturbing gaps. But we do know that overall these groups are less likely to be immunized against disease, less likely to be routinely tested for cancer, and less likely to get regular checkups. No matter what the reason, racial and ethnic disparities in health are unacceptable in a country that values equality and equal opportunity for all. Access to the best health care America has to offer is a new civil right for the 21st century.

That is why we have set a national goal to eliminate racial and ethnic health disparities in six key areas by the year 2010: infant mortality; diabetes; cancer; heart disease; HIV/AIDS; and immunizations. To reach this goal, my Administration launched a major preventive health outreach campaign focusing on diseases disproportionately affecting racial and ethnic minorities. We also initiated a public-private collaboration to address racial and ethnic health disparities; and secured approximately $40 million in 2000 and 2001 for programs to research the causes and devise solutions for these disparities.

In 1999, the Administration launched a new initiative to address HIV/AIDS in minority communities, which received $167 million in funds this year. Finally, in 2001, NIH will establish the Center for Research on Minority Health and Health Disparities, which will coordinate the over $1 billion NIH invests annually in minority health and health disparities research.

America has the best health care system in the world. But we can't take full pride in it until every American has an equal chance to benefit from its ever-expanding potential. That is why achieving our goal of eliminating racial and ethnic disparities in health by the year 2010 must be a priority of the new Congress and new Administration.

Recommendation: Maintain our commitment to eliminate racial and ethnic disparities in health by 2010.

VI. VOTING REFORM

If ever there was a doubt about the importance of exercising the most fundamental right of citizenship, it was clearly answered by the first Presidential election of the 21st century. No American will ever again be able to seriously say, "My vote doesn't count." That election also revealed serious flaws in the mechanics of voting, and brought up disturbing allegations of voter intimidation that we thought were relics of the past. Too many people felt that the votes they cast were not counted and some felt that there were organized efforts to keep them from the polls. Both of these allegations must be fully investigated. But, whatever the outcome, we can and must take aggressive steps to improve voter turnout, and modernize and restore confidence in our voting system.

While voting is the sacred right and responsibility of every American, it carries even greater weight for those who have fought so long and hard for civil rights and equal justice in America. In many ways the struggle for civil rights and racial progress in America is analogous to the struggle for voting rights. And this struggle, too, has not been all black and white.

The 15th amendment declared "the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude." But new barriers, like poll taxes and literacy tests, were erected to prevent blacks and poor whites from casting their ballots. It was not until that historic confrontation on Selma's Edmund Pettus Bridge and the monumental Selma to Montgomery march that the Voting Rights Act of 1965, outlawing these racist impediments, was passed. Full voting rights for women were not secured until the passage of the 19th amendment in 1919. It wasn't until 1924, with the passage of the Indian Citizenship Act, that Native Americans won the right to vote. It took until 1952 for the Walter - McCarran Act to extend full citizenship and voting rights to Asian immigrants. And only after the elimination of English-only elections through the passage of the Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1975, did the final barriers to Hispanic voting rights fall.

Consider the fact that while our Declaration of Independence and Constitution proclaimed liberty and justice for all, originally this only applied to property-owning white males. Barbara Jordan once put it in stark terms, when she said of the Preamble to the Constitution, "We the People. It is a very eloquent beginning. But when the document was completed on the 17th of September in 1787, I was not included in that We the People." America's on-going efforts to right those wrongs is marked by the blood, sweat and tears of scores of voting rights warriors — from Frederick Douglass, Sojourner Truth and Elizabeth Cady Stanton to Martin Luther King, Willie Velasquez and Viola Liuzzo, who was one of a number of white freedom riders who lost their lives at the hands of bigots while working with blacks in the south for equal voting rights in the 1960s.

The right to vote is not only a sacred testament to the struggles of the past. It is an indispensable weapon in our current arsenal of efforts to empower those who have traditionally been left out, particularly people of color. So much progress—from the passage of civil rights laws to the increase in the numbers of minorities holding elected office—is the direct result of citizens exercising their right to vote. And so many of the needed changes in public policy, including those I have outlined in this Message to Congress, require active support by voters. Otherwise little will change. But, today, too many of us take our right to vote for granted. In recent presidential elections in France, for example, nearly 85 percent of the eligible voters went to the polls on election day. In America, there aren't more than two states that ever have an 80 percent turnout, even during a presidential election when interest runs very high.

So, we must do more to ensure that more people vote and that every vote is counted. In an effort to restore confidence in our democracy, I recommend the next President appoint a nonpartisan Presidential Commission on Electoral Reform. The Commission should be headed by distinguished citizens who can put country ahead of party, such as former Presidents Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. The Commission should gather the facts and determine the causes of voting disparities in every state, including disparities of race, class, ethnicity, and geography. The Commission should make recommendations to Congress about how to achieve a fair, inclusive, and uniform system of voting in national elections -- including how to modernize voting technologies, establish uniform voting standards, prevent voter suppression and intimidation, and increase voter participation.

I believe such a Commission also should examine two other issues that haven't received as much attention, but could go a long way toward ensuring every American citizen the right to vote and the chance to exercise that right. First, declaring election day a national holiday so that no one has to choose between their responsibilities at work and their responsibilities as a citizen.

In other countries that do this, voter participation dwarfs ours, and the most fundamental act of democracy gets the attention it deserves. Second, giving those who have repaid their debt to society the chance to regain their right to be a voting member of that society. Over the next decade, millions of Americans in the criminal justice system will serve out their sentences and re-enter society. These Americans are disproportionately poor and minority. We should be doing everything we can to make sure that they re-enter as responsible citizens. That means making sure that those who leave the criminal justice system leave it drug-free, and get the training they need to hold down a job and do right by their communities and their families. But if we want them to live right and do right, we should give them the chance to earn back their rights -- above all, the right to vote.

Recommendation: Appoint a non-partisan Presidential Commission on election reform to ensure a fair, inclusive and uniform system of voting standards, prevent voter suppression and intimidation and increase voter participation. Declare election day a national holiday. And give ex-offenders who have repaid their debt to society the chance to earn back the right to vote.

VII. CIVIC RESPONSIBILITY: BUILDING ONE AMERICA IS THE WORK OF EVERY AMERICAN

When violence and strife exploded in Los Angeles following the Rodney King verdict, countless residents and community leaders responded with inspiring efforts to build bridges that would not only heal wounds but create opportunity. When more than 190 black churches, white churches, synagogues, and mosques were burned or desecrated during 1995-96, we witnessed an awe-inspiring outpouring of concern and assistance across all lines of race and faith and party. When Jasper, Texas, was shaken to its core by a hideous hate crime, residents and leaders worked tirelessly to hold together, and in doing so, taught us all that some evils can be conquered with understanding. What all these examples prove is that when communities are faced with a crisis, our better angels soar to the challenge. In those moments, America ceases to be a nation of people divided into categories of color. America at its best is people of all colors united for the common good.

As in so many other areas, racial reconciliation and building opportunity simply won't happen unless there is committed engagement by people in communities and institutions throughout the nation. But in the absence of a crisis, we may be tempted to leave this work to so-called national leaders, such as politicians, clergy, business executives or the heads of nonprofit organizations. Such leaders can perhaps help set a tone, point out examples, offer support, and provide critical seed resources. But it takes all of us working together to prevent the kind of devastating crisis that pulls us together only after much pain and suffering. At the end of the day, we will make the most fundamental kind of progress when we work with our neighbors for change.

To help spur this work, I hope that in the coming years leaders of goodwill in individual communities will rededicate themselves to working together across racial and ethnic lines in community partnerships designed to help us build that more perfect union. In many areas, there may already be a vesting place, such as an active ecumenical council of faith leaders, or a human rights commission with broad-based public legitimacy. In other places, convening a group of leaders might require a special initiative by a mayor, a tribal leader, a newspaper publisher, an archbishop, a leading employer or the board of a civic organization.

Much of that work is already underway across America. And I am proud that my White House Office on One America is doing its part. In February, 1999, I launched the first-ever White House office specifically charged with keeping the nation focused on closing opportunity gaps and fostering racial reconciliation. Since its inception, the office has been instrumental in the formation of “Lawyers for One America,” a group of attorneys who have committed to change the racial justice landscape through greater diversity within the legal profession and increased pro bono service.

The Office also convened corporate leaders at the White House, who also pledged a renewed commitment to diversity in their workplaces and stronger efforts to close opportunity gaps. And the One America Office brought a broad cross-section of religious leaders to the White House to pledge that the faith community would focus more of its efforts on expanding diversity, ending racism and promoting racial reconciliation.

The White House Office on One America has helped focus and coordinate efforts throughout my Administration to build One America. It is my sincere hope that the next Administration will maintain this office and its noble purpose.

Building One America requires a new kind of leadership. Instead of looking outward for signs of hope, we must first look in the mirror and know that change is our responsibility. Rooted in the heart, that wisdom has the power to connect us in ways that nourish our dreams for a future that is better than our past. Whether you are able to give guidance to a single child or lead a national movement for justice, it all begins with a personal commitment to racial reconciliation. As Dr. King once said, “No social movement rolls in on the wheels of inevitability. Every step toward the goal of justice requires sacrifice, suffering, and struggle; the tireless exertions and passionate concern of dedicated individuals.”

Recommendation: Maintain the White House Office on One America.

Final 01/16/01 7:30pm
Heather Hurlburt

REVISED

'01 JAN 17 AM 10:04

THE PRESIDENT

1-17-01

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
POINTS FOR OPEN ARRIVAL IN ARKANSAS
LITTLE ROCK, ARKANSAS
January 17, 2001

- 1 -

- Thank performers: Little Joe and the B.K.'s; Choir from Trumpet & Zion Church. Senator Pryor; Congressmen Beryl Anthony, Mike Ross and Vic Snyder; State Rep Carol Whillacok.
- I'm so proud of all the people from Arkansas who came to Washington with me and did a world-class job.

- 2 -

Secretary Slater, Secretary Gober, Administrator Witt. Mack McLarty, Bruce Lindsey, Stephanie Streett, Bob Nash, Marsha Scott, Janis Kearney, Gloria Cabe and Meredith Cabe, Jim French, Craig Smith, Shannon Butler and so many others. That's something every one of you – and everyone in this state -- should be proud of for the rest of your lives.

- 3 -

- Thank all of you who have supported me every campaign I've run: for Congress in Arkansas' Third District, for Attorney General, Governor, and President.

- 4 -

- For years now, we've worked together to build the economy and invest in our people and in Arkansas' future.

We knew something about how to do that back in 1992, when we led the nation in job creation, with 90,000 new jobs over four years. When I went to Washington in January 1993, we had the third-strongest economic performance in America.

- 5 -

I'm proud of how we've lifted America and Arkansas up over the last eight years. Today, the unemployment rate here is 4.2 percent, down from 6.7, with more than 200,000 new Arkansas jobs over the last 8 years. Poverty is down, average income is up.

- 6 -

- Across the nation, unemployment is at a 30-year low; we have 22.5 million new jobs, the longest economic expansion in history, the lowest minority unemployment ever recorded, the lowest female unemployment in 40 years. And we turned record budget deficits into record surpluses and started paying down the national debt.

- 7 -

We said we would be fiscally responsible and invest in people, and we kept our word, starting with education. Here in Arkansas, we've provided funds to hire hundreds of new teachers, doubled funding for Head Start, and set aside more than $10 million to repair school buildings here.

- 8 -

And more than 90,000 Arkansas students are using our HOPE Scholarship and Lifetime Learning tax credits to pay for college.

- We created the Delta Regional Authority to promote economic development.

- 9 -

- We've driven crime down and helped Arkansas hire more than 1200 new police officers. We've cleaned up six toxic waste sites – twice as many as the previous two Administrations. And we've invested in infrastructure: water projects and highways, airports and mass transportation.

- 10 -

- I'm going to keep investing in Arkansas – and I'm going to be spending a lot of time here: we're building a library that will be a beautiful building that works for the people of Arkansas. It will have a park for the people of Little Rock to enjoy; it will draw tourists and visitors from all over the world.

- 11 -

- And with the University of Arkansas, it will have a public policy school offering a Master's Degree program and a chance for businesses to send people there for a couple of months as an orientation into public service.

- Through the library, and every other way I can, I want to keep working to empower people in Arkansas, especially young people – and keep spreading the word that America's best days are still out in front of us. Thank you.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ImmediateSubject: Remarks to U.S. Conference of Mayors

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☐	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS: Comments to Paul Glastris.

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS TO U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS
THE WHITE HOUSE
January 16, 2001

Acknowledgments: Boise Mayor and USCM Pres. Brent Coles; New Orleans Mayor and VP USCM Marc Morial; Boston Mayor and USMC Advisory Board Chair Tom Menino; USMC Exec. Dir. Tom Cochran; Sec. Cuomo, Sec. Herman, Sec. Shalala; IGA Director Mickey Ibarra; Special Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs Zina Pierre

I have often said that I shouldn't be getting awards because the job of President is reward enough. But this is a very special award for me, and I thank you for it from the bottom of my heart.

I also want to thank my friend, Mayor Brent Coles, for presenting it. We talk a lot in Washington about the need for bipartisanship, but for inspiration, we should look to America's mayors. I have found that the closer elected officials are to the people, the more they naturally understand that they will be judged not by their partisan rhetoric but by their ability to get things done that improve people's lives. As Mayor La Guardia once said, "There's no Republican or Democratic way to pick up the garbage. It either gets picked up or it doesn't."

This is something I learned as the governor for twelve years of a state with a population about the size of a typical American big city. As President, I have tried to keep it in mind. And so it has been a great joy for me, every year for eight years, to welcome the U.S. Conference of Mayors to the White House. I hope that you have come to feel that this house is your house. And I hope that you are as proud as I am of the partnership we have forged.

Twenty-five hundred years ago, Pericles, one of history's first mayors, said "All things good flow from the cities." We can see that's still true today, with the magnificent renaissance of America's cities that the people in this room have helped bring about. But it was also true eight years ago, when times were very different. Back then, ten million of our fellow citizens were unemployed. We had high interest rates, ballooning deficits and debt, and rising crime, drug abuse, teen pregnancy, welfare rolls, and income inequality. All of this was hitting cities particularly hard.

And yet in every city I visited when I was running for President, I found determination, hope, and good ideas for solving our problems. I remember playing basketball in Philadelphia with Mayor Rendell and some kids in a local park that had been a haven for drug dealers, but now was safe thanks to an innovative community policing program. I remember seeing the same kinds of successes in Houston under Lee Brown, who was then the police chief. And I remember visiting a school in Boston with Mayor Flynn where the children were once again excited about learning thanks to the help of top young college graduates teaching there as part of the CityYear program. Everywhere I went, I saw good things flowing from the cities.

I knew that if we could get the national government to support these ideas, if we could get the deficit down and investment up, we could create an America in which there is opportunity for all citizens, responsibility from all citizens, in a community that includes all citizens. No group was more committed to that vision than America's mayors.

Today, we are enjoying the longest economic expansion in history, with over 22 million new jobs, the lowest female unemployment rate in 40 years, the lowest Hispanic and African American unemployment rate ever recorded, the highest home ownership in history. Since 1993, after inflation, the yearly income of the typical family is up $6,300. Hourly wages are up by more than 9 percent. And unlike some previous recoveries, this rising tide has lifted all boats. All income groups have had their income increase and in the last three years the biggest percentage increase has come in the 20 percent of our workers that are earning the lowest wages.

We are seeing the benefits of this in our cities, where incomes have risen faster than they have in the suburbs and poverty is down 23 percent since 1993.

We're not just better off, we're a stronger, more united country. Crime is down, the welfare rolls are down nearly 60 percent. Teen pregnancy is the lowest rate it's been in decades. We are growing more diverse, but we're also growing more united.

This progress is the result of your hard work at the local level, and the work we have done in partnership together for eight years.

Together, we passed the 1994 crime bill that has funded 130,000 community police officers. Together, we banned assault weapons, and passed the Brady Law, which has kept guns out of the hands of 600,000 felons, fugitives and stalkers. Today, we have the lowest crime rate in 25 years.

Together, we worked to get more private sector investment in our cities, through the Vice President's empowerment zone program; through the brownfields tax credit, which the mayors helped design; through community development banks; and through strengthening the Community Reinvestment Act. That law had been on the books for over 20 years, but had never really been enforced. Over 95 percent of the investment by private banks in poor areas in America has occurred since 1993. And it's working. There are more jobs, more thriving businesses, bank profits are up, and for the first time, more than half of city residents in America own their own homes. And late last year, our bipartisan New Markets Initiative passed, which will get even more money into the inner cities, into small rural communities, into Native American reservations across America that have been left out and left behind by this recovery.

Together, we made sure that when we reformed welfare, we did it the right way. We've cut the welfare rolls by 60 percent nationwide, and helped millions move from welfare to work. But we also insisted that those who go to work should have job training and child care and transportation, and that their children should not lose their Medicaid and food support. We raised the minimum wage and we doubled the earned income tax credit. By requiring work and rewarding work, we now have the lowest poverty rate in 20 years, and last year we had the biggest drop in child poverty in 34 years.

Together, we have made the Children's Health Insurance Program work to provide health insurance to 3.3 million children. Now, for the first time in a dozen years, the number of Americans without health insurance is falling.

Together, we put together a new strategy for our public schools, based on the success that principals, teachers, and increasingly, mayors all over America were having improving schools at the local level against enormous odds. It's a simple strategy: higher standards more accountability, more investment and equal opportunity. In 1992, there were only 14 states that had core academic standards for what all kids should learn. Today, there are 49. Since 1993, we have more than doubled our investment in schools. We've expanded and improved Head Start, and the budget I signed late last year includes the largest Head Start increase in history. We're now providing federal support for the very first time for summer school and after-school programs. This year, we'll cover 1.3 million children.

In 1994, 3 percent of classrooms and 35 percent of schools were hooked up to the Internet. Today, with the help of the Vice President's E-rate program, 65 percent of classroom and 95 percent of schools are hooked up. This year, for the very first time since World War II, there will be federal support, more than $1 billion, to help repair the most severely distressed schools.

This strategy, of investing more in our schools and demanding more from them, is working. Reading and math scores are rising, with some of the biggest gains in some of our most disadvantaged urban schools. SAT scores are at a 30-year high, in no small measure because there's been a 50-percent increase in the number of kids taking Advanced Placement courses. And more people than ever are going on to college, thanks to more and bigger Pell grants, the Hope Scholarship, education IRAs, direct student loans, and other supports that together amount to the largest increase in college aid since the G.I. bill passed 50 years ago.

There are so many areas where we have worked together and made a difference. More than 550 cities and towns have been part of the First Lady's Millennium Communities project to preserve local historic treasures and increase civic participation. You've supported our successful efforts to preserve and increase federal funding for the arts. You've been a vital participant in our One America initiative. Just yesterday, I issued a challenge to the new administration and the new Congress to complete the unfinished business of building One America—from ending racial profiling to ensuring that in every neighborhood, every vote counts, and every vote is counted. I know we can count on you to make sure these challenges are met.

Our work is far from over, but the path we're on is the right one. If we continue our policy of fiscal responsibility and investing in our people, we can keep the prosperity going and be debt-free for the first time since 1835 when Andrew Jackson was President. If we continue to put more police on the street, keep guns out of the hands of criminals and gives our kids something to say yes to as well as something to say no to, we can make this country the safest big nation on earth. If we continue to add people to the rolls of health insurance--and we ought to start by including the parents of all the kids we're insuring with the Children's Health Insurance Program--we can achieve the cherished goal of providing health insurance to all American families. If we continue investing more in our schools and demanding more from them, we can make sure every child gets a 21st century education. If we continue to require work, reward work, and support working families, and bring more investment to communities left behind, then we can expand the circle of prosperity and still strengthen the fabric of our society.

With your help, I believe America's best days are yet to come.

Thank you and God bless you.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ImmediateSubject: Remarks to U.S. Conference of Mayors

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☐	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS: Comments to Paul Glastris.

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

01 JAN 15 11:37:09

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS TO U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS
THE WHITE HOUSE
January 16, 2001

Acknowledgments: Boise Mayor and USCM Pres. Brent Coles; New Orleans Mayor and VP USCM Marc Morial; Boston Mayor and USMC Advisory Board Chair Tom Menino; USMC Exec. Dir. Tom Cochran; Sec. Cuomo. Sec. Herman, Sec. Shalala; IGA Director Mickey Ibarra; Special Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs Zina Pierre

I have often said that I shouldn't be getting awards because the job of President is reward enough. But this is a very special award for me, and I thank you for it from the bottom of my heart.

I also want to thank my friend, Mayor Brent Coles, for presenting it. We talk a lot in Washington about the need for bipartisanship, but for inspiration, we should look to America's mayors. I have found that the closer elected officials are to the people, the more they naturally understand that they will be judged not by their partisan rhetoric but by their ability to get things done that improve people's lives. As Mayor La Guardia once said, "There's no Republican or Democratic way to pick up the garbage. It either gets picked up or it doesn't."

This is something I learned as the governor for twelve years of a state with a population about the size of a typical American big city. As President, I have tried to keep it in mind. And so it has been a great joy for me, every year for eight years, to welcome the U.S. Conference of Mayors to the White House. I hope that you have come to feel that this house is your house. And I hope that you are as proud as I am of the partnership we have forged.

Twenty-five hundred years ago, Pericles, one of history's first mayors, said "All things good flow from the cities." We can see that's still true today, with the magnificent renaissance of America's cities that the people in this room have helped bring about. But it was also true eight years ago, when times were very different. Back then, ten million of our fellow citizens were unemployed. We had high interest rates, ballooning deficits and debt, and rising crime, drug abuse, teen pregnancy, welfare rolls, and income inequality. All of this was hitting cities particularly hard.

And yet in every city I visited when I was running for President, I found determination, hope, and good ideas for solving our problems. I remember playing basketball in Philadelphia with Mayor Rendell and some kids in a local park that had been a haven for drug dealers, but now was safe thanks to an innovative community policing program. I remember seeing the same kinds of successes in Houston under Lee Brown, who was then the police chief. And I remember visiting a school in Boston with Mayor Flynn where the children were once again excited about learning thanks to the help of top young college graduates teaching there as part of the CityYear program. Everywhere I went, I saw good things flowing from the cities.

I knew that if we could get the national government to support these ideas, if we could get the deficit down and investment up, we could create an America in which there is opportunity for all citizens, responsibility from all citizens, in a community that includes all citizens. No group was more committed to that vision than America's mayors.

Today, we are enjoying the longest economic expansion in history, with over 22 million new jobs, the lowest female unemployment rate in 40 years, the lowest Hispanic and African American unemployment rate ever recorded, the highest home ownership in history. Since 1993, after inflation, the yearly income of the typical family is up $6,300. Hourly wages are up by more than 9 percent. And unlike some previous recoveries, this rising tide has lifted all boats. All income groups have had their income increase and in the last three years the biggest percentage increase has come in the 20 percent of our workers that are earning the lowest wages.

We are seeing the benefits of this in our cities, where incomes have risen faster than they have in the suburbs and poverty is down 23 percent since 1993.

We're not just better off, we're a stronger, more united country. Crime is down, the welfare rolls are down nearly 60 percent. Teen pregnancy is the lowest rate it's been in decades. We are growing more diverse, but we're also growing more united.

This progress is the result of your hard work at the local level, and the work we have done in partnership together for eight years.

Together, we passed the 1994 crime bill that has funded 130,000 community police officers. Together, we banned assault weapons, and passed the Brady Law, which has kept guns out of the hands of 600,000 felons, fugitives and stalkers. Today, we have the lowest crime rate in 25 years.

Together, we worked to get more private sector investment in our cities, through the Vice President's empowerment zone program; through the brownfields tax credit, which the mayors helped design; through community development banks; and through strengthening the Community Reinvestment Act. That law had been on the books for over 20 years, but had never really been enforced. Over 95 percent of the investment by private banks in poor areas in America has occurred since 1993. And it's working. There are more jobs, more thriving businesses, bank profits are up, and for the first time, more than half of city residents in America own their own homes. And late last year, our bipartisan New Markets Initiative passed, which will get even more money into the inner cities, into small rural communities, into Native American reservations across America that have been left out and left behind by this recovery.

Together, we made sure that when we reformed welfare, we did it the right way. We've cut the welfare rolls by 60 percent nationwide, and helped millions move from welfare to work. But we also insisted that those who go to work should have job training and child care and transportation, and that their children should not lose their Medicaid and food support. We raised the minimum wage and we doubled the earned income tax credit. By requiring work and rewarding work, we now have the lowest poverty rate in 20 years, and last year we had the biggest drop in child poverty in 34 years.

Together, we have made the Children's Health Insurance Program work to provide health insurance to 3.3 million children. Now, for the first time in a dozen years, the number of Americans without health insurance is falling.

Together, we put together a new strategy for our public schools, based on the success that principals, teachers, and increasingly, mayors all over America were having improving schools at the local level against enormous odds. It's a simple strategy: higher standards more accountability, more investment and equal opportunity. In 1992, there were only 14 states that had core academic standards for what all kids should learn. Today, there are 49. Since 1993, we have more than doubled our investment in schools. We've expanded and improved Head Start, and the budget I signed late last year includes the largest Head Start increase in history. We're now providing federal support for the very first time for summer school and after-school programs. This year, we'll cover 1.3 million children.

In 1994, 3 percent of classrooms and 35 percent of schools were hooked up to the Internet. Today, with the help of the Vice President's E-rate program, 65 percent of classroom and 95 percent of schools are hooked up. This year, for the very first time since World War II, there will be federal support, more than $1 billion, to help repair the most severely distressed schools.

This strategy, of investing more in our schools and demanding more from them, is working. Reading and math scores are rising, with some of the biggest gains in some of our most disadvantaged urban schools. SAT scores are at a 30-year high, in no small measure because there's been a 50-percent increase in the number of kids taking Advanced Placement courses. And more people than ever are going on to college, thanks to more and bigger Pell grants, the Hope Scholarship, education IRAs, direct student loans, and other supports that together amount to the largest increase in college aid since the G.I. bill passed 50 years ago.

There are so many areas where we have worked together and made a difference. More than 550 cities and towns have been part of the First Lady's Millenium Communities project to preserve local historic treasures and increase civic participation. You've supported our successful efforts to preserve and increase federal funding for the arts. You've been a vital participant in our One America initiative. Just yesterday, I issued a challenge to the new administration and the new Congress to complete the unfinished business of building One America—from ending racial profiling to ensuring that in every neighborhood, every vote counts, and every vote is counted. I know we can count on you to make sure these challenges are met.

Our work is far from over, but the path we're on is the right one. If we continue our policy of fiscal responsibility and investing in our people, we can keep the prosperity going and be debt-free for the first time since 1835 when Andrew Jackson was President. If we continue to put more police on the street, keep guns out of the hands of criminals and gives our kids something to say yes to as well as something to say no to, we can make this country the safest big nation on earth. If we continue to add people to the rolls of health insurance--and we ought to start by including the parents of all the kids we're insuring with the Children's Health Insurance Program--we can achieve the cherished goal of providing health insurance to all American families. If we continue investing more in our schools and demanding more from them, we can make sure every child gets a 21st century education. If we continue to require work, reward work, and support working families, and bring more investment to communities left behind, then we can expand the circle of prosperity and still strengthen the fabric of our society.

With your help, I believe America's best days are yet to come.

Thank you and God bless you.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ImmediateSubject: Remarks to U.S. Conference of Mayors

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☐	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS: Comments to Paul Glastris.

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS TO U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS
THE WHITE HOUSE
January 16, 2001

Acknowledgments: Boise Mayor and USCM Pres. Brent Coles; New Orleans Mayor and VP USCM Marc Morial; Boston Mayor and USMC Advisory Board Chair Tom Menino; USMC Exec. Dir. Tom Cochran; Sec. Cuomo. Sec. Herman, Sec. Shalala; IGA Director Mickey Ibarra; Special Assistant to the President for Intergovernmental Affairs Zina Pierre

I have often said that I shouldn't be getting awards because the job of President is reward enough. But this is a very special award for me, and I thank you for it from the bottom of my heart.

I also want to thank my friend, Mayor Brent Coles, for presenting it. We talk a lot in Washington about the need for bipartisanship, but for inspiration, we should look to America's mayors. I have found that the closer elected officials are to the people, the more they naturally understand that they will be judged not by their partisan rhetoric but by their ability to get things done that improve people's lives. As Mayor La Guardia once said, "There's no Republican or Democratic way to pick up the garbage. It either gets picked up or it doesn't."

This is something I learned as the governor for twelve years of a state with a population about the size of a typical American big city. As President, I have tried to keep it in mind. And so it has been a great joy for me, every year for eight years, to welcome the U.S. Conference of Mayors to the White House. I hope that you have come to feel that this house is your house. And I hope that you are as proud as I am of the partnership we have forged.

Twenty-five hundred years ago, Pericles, one of history's first mayors, said "All things good flow from the cities." We can see that's still true today, with the magnificent renaissance of America's cities that the people in this room have helped bring about. But it was also true eight years ago, when times were very different. Back then, ten million of our fellow citizens were unemployed. We had high interest rates, ballooning deficits and debt, and rising crime, drug abuse, teen pregnancy, welfare rolls, and income inequality. All of this was hitting cities particularly hard.

And yet in every city I visited when I was running for President, I found determination, hope, and good ideas for solving our problems. I remember playing basketball in Philadelphia with Mayor Rendell and some kids in a local park that had been a haven for drug dealers, but now was safe thanks to an innovative community policing program. I remember seeing the same kinds of successes in Houston under Lee Brown, who was then the police chief. And I remember visiting a school in Boston with Mayor Flynn where the children were once again excited about learning thanks to the help of top young college graduates teaching there as part of the CityYear program. Everywhere I went, I saw good things flowing from the cities.

I knew that if we could get the national government to support these ideas, if we could get the deficit down and investment up, we could create an America in which there is opportunity for all citizens, responsibility from all citizens, in a community that includes all citizens. No group was more committed to that vision than America's mayors.

Today, we are enjoying the longest economic expansion in history, with over 22 million new jobs, the lowest female unemployment rate in 40 years, the lowest Hispanic and African American unemployment rate ever recorded, the highest home ownership in history. Since 1993, after inflation, the yearly income of the typical family is up $6,300. Hourly wages are up by more than 9 percent. And unlike some previous recoveries, this rising tide has lifted all boats. All income groups have had their income increase and in the last three years the biggest percentage increase has come in the 20 percent of our workers that are earning the lowest wages.

We are seeing the benefits of this in our cities, where incomes have risen faster than they have in the suburbs and poverty is down 23 percent since 1993.

We're not just better off, we're a stronger, more united country. Crime is down, the welfare rolls are down nearly 60 percent. Teen pregnancy is the lowest rate it's been in decades. We are growing more diverse, but we're also growing more united.

This progress is the result of your hard work at the local level, and the work we have done in partnership together for eight years.

Together, we passed the 1994 crime bill that has funded 130,000 community police officers. Together, we banned assault weapons, and passed the Brady Law, which has kept guns out of the hands of 600,000 felons, fugitives and stalkers. Today, we have the lowest crime rate in 25 years.

Together, we worked to get more private sector investment in our cities, through the Vice President's empowerment zone program; through the brownfields tax credit, which the mayors helped design; through community development banks; and through strengthening the Community Reinvestment Act. That law had been on the books for over 20 years, but had never really been enforced. Over 95 percent of the investment by private banks in poor areas in America has occurred since 1993. And it's working. There are more jobs, more thriving businesses, bank profits are up, and for the first time, more than half of city residents in America own their own homes. And late last year, our bipartisan New Markets Initiative passed, which will get even more money into the inner cities, into small rural communities, into Native American reservations across America that have been left out and left behind by this recovery.

Together, we made sure that when we reformed welfare, we did it the right way. We've cut the welfare rolls by 60 percent nationwide, and helped millions move from welfare to work. But we also insisted that those who go to work should have job training and child care and transportation, and that their children should not lose their Medicaid and food support. We raised the minimum wage and we doubled the earned income tax credit. By requiring work and rewarding work, we now have the lowest poverty rate in 20 years, and last year we had the biggest drop in child poverty in 34 years.

Together, we have made the Children's Health Insurance Program work to provide health insurance to 3.3 million children. Now, for the first time in a dozen years, the number of Americans without health insurance is falling.

Together, we put together a new strategy for our public schools, based on the success that principals, teachers, and increasingly, mayors all over America were having improving schools at the local level against enormous odds. It's a simple strategy: higher standards more accountability, more investment and equal opportunity. In 1992, there were only 14 states that had core academic standards for what all kids should learn. Today, there are 49. Since 1993, we have more than doubled our investment in schools. We've expanded and improved Head Start, and the budget I signed late last year includes the largest Head Start increase in history. We're now providing federal support for the very first time for summer school and after-school programs. This year, we'll cover 1.3 million children.

In 1994, 3 percent of classrooms and 35 percent of schools were hooked up to the Internet. Today, with the help of the Vice President's E-rate program, 65 percent of classroom and 95 percent of schools are hooked up. This year, for the very first time since World War II, there will be federal support, more than $1 billion, to help repair the most severely distressed schools.

This strategy, of investing more in our schools and demanding more from them, is working. Reading and math scores are rising, with some of the biggest gains in some of our most disadvantaged urban schools. SAT scores are at a 30-year high, in no small measure because there's been a 50-percent increase in the number of kids taking Advanced Placement courses. And more people than ever are going on to college, thanks to more and bigger Pell grants, the Hope Scholarship, education IRAs, direct student loans, and other supports that together amount to the largest increase in college aid since the G.I. bill passed 50 years ago.

There are so many areas where we have worked together and made a difference. More than 550 cities and towns have been part of the First Lady's Millenium Communities project to preserve local historic treasures and increase civic participation. You've supported our successful efforts to preserve and increase federal funding for the arts. You've been a vital participant in our One America initiative. Just yesterday, I issued a challenge to the new administration and the new Congress to complete the unfinished business of building One America—from ending racial profiling to ensuring that in every neighborhood, every vote counts, and every vote is counted. I know we can count on you to make sure these challenges are met.

Our work is far from over, but the path we're on is the right one. If we continue our policy of fiscal responsibility and investing in our people, we can keep the prosperity going and be debt-free for the first time since 1835 when Andrew Jackson was President. If we continue to put more police on the street, keep guns out of the hands of criminals and gives our kids something to say yes to as well as something to say no to, we can make this country the safest big nation on earth. If we continue to add people to the rolls of health insurance--and we ought to start by including the parents of all the kids we're insuring with the Children's Health Insurance Program--we can achieve the cherished goal of providing health insurance to all American families. If we continue investing more in our schools and demanding more from them, we can make sure every child gets a 21st century education. If we continue to require work, reward work, and support working families, and bring more investment to communities left behind, then we can expand the circle of prosperity and still strengthen the fabric of our society.

With your help, I believe America's best days are yet to come.

Thank you and God bless you.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP
 Subject: Remarks - Designation of Nat'l Monuments

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☒	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	E. Lovell	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to John Pollack

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 1/16/01 12:25 p.m.
John Pollack

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
REMARKS ON DESIGNATION OF
NATIONAL MONUMENTS
WASHINGTON, DC
January 17, 2001

Good morning. Secretary Babbitt; Senators Baucus and Leahy; OTHER MoCs TK; descendants of the Lewis and Clark families; Jim Holmberg; Stephen Ambrose, who has brought history to life for so many people; honored guests – welcome to the White House. This is the last time, as President, that I will have the honor of extending such a welcome, and I thank you all for joining us here today.

This may also be the last time that I have the opportunity to thank the members of our administration's environmental team, including Secretary Babbitt, George Frampton and Carol Browner – as well as the national environmental community. While we still face big challenges, especially global warming, we have also made big progress on a lot of environmental issues over the past eight years.

Today, our air and water is cleaner, our food is safer, and we've cleaned up more toxic waste sites than the past two administrations combined. We also did away with the false choice between economic growth and environmental protection, a shift in thinking that will pay big dividends in years to come. And I'm also very proud that our administration has now set aside more land for conservation in the lower 48 states than any administration since that of Teddy Roosevelt, nearly a century ago.

But there is still more we must do. Before I talk about the National Monuments we are creating today, I want to say a few words about two areas that will require our protection in the years to come.

First, the Owyhee (o-WHY-hee) Canyonlands in southwest Idaho. These are some of the most spectacular unprotected federal lands in the country, a maze of ancient canyons that are home to bighorn sheep, antelope, and many other species. If we all work together, we can protect its wilderness value and its potential for traditional local uses – much as the people of Oregon did with Steens Mountain earlier this year.

Second, we must continue to safeguard the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, which is one of the last truly wild places on earth, a Serengeti of the Americas. Some people have urged that I declare the coastal plain of the Refuge a National Monument. I have declined, because current law actually provides more protection for this refuge than monument status would.

But I want to be very clear here: those who propose invading this wilderness in a search for oil are wrong. No-one should be allowed squander this environmental Eden forever, just to save a few pennies at the gas pump. In 1995, I used my veto to prevent oil drilling here, and I will continue – as a private citizen – to defend it from exploitation. But before I re-assume that simple but proud title of “citizen” this weekend, I have some unfinished business to complete as President.

Over the past 200 years, the White House has been witness to a remarkable sweep of American history, from the mundane to the magnificent. It was right here, in the East Room, that First Lady Abigail Adams used to hang up the Presidential laundry to dry, and here in this room that union soldiers slept during the Civil War. It was also here that a young idealist named Meriwether Lewis – summoned by President Jefferson to serve as his personal secretary – first unpacked his traveler’s trunk, and set up quarters in 1801.

The history books tell us this room looked quite different back then: no chandeliers, no parquet floors, no silk drapes – just the rough slatting of walls awaiting plaster, and two stone hearths to ward off the winter chill. But if this empty hall lacked grandeur, the ideas that filled it made up for all of that. For it was here that Jefferson and Lewis – down on their hands and knees – first unfurled an unfinished map of a great continent, and planned a bold expedition of discovery.

Given all that followed – one of history’s great journeys of exploration, the opening of the American west, and ultimately the nation we know today – it is entirely fitting that we meet here in this room to celebrate that early vision, and to protect this historic legacy for generations to come.

Of course, most of the wild landscape Meriwether Lewis and William Clark traversed nearly two centuries ago has changed beyond recognition – forests have been cut; prairies plowed; rivers dammed; cities built. That is the march of time. But there are still a few wild places left, rugged reminders of our nation’s rich history, and nature’s enduring majesty. At the dawn of the 21st century, they are more important to America than ever, and so – after careful review and extensive public input – we protect them today by establishing them as National Monuments.

The first of these Monuments covers a remote stretch of the Missouri River in central Montana, known as the Upper Missouri River Breaks. If you canoe these magical waters or hike their weathered bluffs, you might well encounter deer, elk, bear, wolves, mountain lions or even bighorn sheep – just as Lewis and Clark did in 1805. In a journal entry dated May 31st of that year, Lewis wrote “The hills and river cliffs which we passed today exhibit a most romantic appearance... As we passed on, it seemed as if those scenes of visionary enchantment would never have an end.”

Today we protect the Breaks so these “scenes of visionary enchantment” will never end, as long as Americans cherish our heritage and pass it on to future generations.

The second monument we designate today is also in Montana. It is Pompey’s Pillar, the sandstone outcrop named after Pompey, the newborn son of Sacagawea, the expedition’s Shoshone guide. A religious site and natural lookout for nearly 12,000 years, this monolith bears the petroglyphs of many ancient travelers. Lewis carved his own name into the rock and it's still there today, a mute testimony to that epic journey of 8,000 miles.

Some years ago, the novelist Wallace Stegner observed that America has a fundamental interest in preserving wilderness of all kinds, because it was the challenge of this wilderness that formed our character as a people. He wrote that even if we rarely set foot in such wild places, they give us a "geography of hope," one that sustains us in our busy lives, even here in the city.

We need to protect this American "geography of hope" – not just along the Lewis and Clark trail, but all across the country. To help accomplish that, I am proud to establish or expand six other National Monuments today. In saving these sites, we save our heritage, and we leave the world a little better off for our children and grandchildren.

These monuments include: the U.S. Virgin Island Coral Reef National Monument and the Buck Island Reef National Monument, to further protect our endangered coral reefs; the Sonoran Desert National Monument in Arizona, which is the most biologically diverse desert in America; the Kasha-Katuwe Tent Rocks National Monument in New Mexico, an ancient volcanic range of spectacular beauty; and the NAME internment camp in Idaho, where many Japanese Americans spent hard, lonely years waiting for war – and injustice – to end.

In addition to creating these National Monuments, I also want to take this opportunity to address some of the expedition's unfinished business and right some injustices that have lingered for nearly 200 years now.

The first of these concerns William Clark. Although promised the rank of Captain when he agreed to help Lewis lead the Corps of Discovery, issues of budget and bureaucracy intervened, and he never got that commission. A natural leader and remarkable frontiersman, Lt. William Clark risked his life for his country across a continent and back, and I was proud to sign legislation promoting him, posthumously, to the rank of Captain. His great, great, great grandson, Bud Clark, will accept the citation on his behalf.

The expedition's success also hinged on the courage and commitment of Sacagawea, an extraordinary fifteen-year-old Shoshone guide who made most of the trip with a baby boy on her back. Time and again her language skills, local knowledge and tribal connections saved Lewis and Clark from certain disaster, even death.

Despite her quiet heroics, Sacagawea received no formal recognition after the expedition returned. Last year, we put her likeness on the new dollar coin. Today, I am proud to announce that the Army has named her as an Honorary Scout in the Corps of Discovery, so that all might remember her critical role in Lewis and Clark's journey to the sea. Amy Mossett, a tribal leader, will accept the citation on her behalf.

Finally, I want to recognize York, the slave who accompanied Lewis and Clark to the Pacific and back. Like Sacagawea, York shared all the risk but none of the reward. And while the rigors of the wilderness fostered a certain camaraderie and respect among York and his fellow explorers, that did not translate into freedom upon his return. Only years later did he finally gain his liberty, before fading into history.

Today, in recognition of York's selfless contributions to the Corps of Discovery and his service to our country, the Army has named him an Honorary Scout. Jim Holmberg, an archivist and scholar of the expedition, will accept the citation on York's behalf.

Even as we finally right these wrongs, and even as we celebrate the legacy of Lewis and Clark, we recognize the irony inherent in their expedition. Theirs was an historic journey of discovery that opened up the American West, a mythic frontier that even today endures in the American mind as a symbol of freedom.

But York, a slave, was anything but free. And Sacagawea's tribe – like its neighbors – would in decades to come be swept away by a flood of American settlers, determined to claim the Great Plains and the land beyond. These are hard truths. They do not fit comfortably within the narrow moral boundaries of manifest destiny, or square with modern American notions of democracy and diversity.

But just as our nation has grown physically through the course of its history, so too have we grown as a people. It has been precisely this capacity for growth – an expanding awareness of our common humanity and shared destiny – that makes our democracy resilient and strong.

Nearly two centuries ago, Lewis and Clark used the compass on this table to navigate a continent of possibility. Now, America is setting out to navigate a new century of possibility. If we can protect our nation's natural and historic heritage – if we recognize that our fate is inextricably linked to that of the land we love – we will surely leave this world a little better than we found it, and this nation a little closer to that more perfect union of our Founders' dreams.

-#-

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP
 Subject: Remarks - Designation of Nat'l Monuments

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☒	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	E. Lovell	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS: Comments to John Pollack

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 1/16/01 12:25 p.m.
John Pollack

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
REMARKS ON DESIGNATION OF
NATIONAL MONUMENTS
WASHINGTON, DC
January 17, 2001

Good morning. Secretary Babbitt; Senators Baucus and Leahy; OTHER MoCs TK; descendants of the Lewis and Clark families; Jim Holmberg; Stephen Ambrose, who has brought history to life for so many people; honored guests – welcome to the White House. This is the last time, as President, that I will have the honor of extending such a welcome, and I thank you all for joining us here today.

This may also be the last time that I have the opportunity to thank the members of our administration's environmental team, including Secretary Babbitt, George Frampton and Carol Browner – as well as the national environmental community. While we still face big challenges, especially global warming, we have also made big progress on a lot of environmental issues over the past eight years.

Today, our air and water is cleaner, our food is safer, and we've cleaned up more toxic waste sites than the past two administrations combined. We also did away with the false choice between economic growth and environmental protection, a shift in thinking that will pay big dividends in years to come. And I'm also very proud that our administration has now set aside more land for conservation in the lower 48 states than any administration since that of Teddy Roosevelt, nearly a century ago.

But there is still more we must do. Before I talk about the National Monuments we are creating today, I want to say a few words about two areas that will require our protection in the years to come.

First, the Owyhee (o-WHY-hee) Canyonlands in southwest Idaho. These are some of the most spectacular unprotected federal lands in the country, a maze of ancient canyons that are home to bighorn sheep, antelope, and many other species. If we all work together, we can protect its wilderness value and its potential for traditional local uses – much as the people of Oregon did with Steens Mountain earlier this year.

Second, we must continue to safeguard the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, which is one of the last truly wild places on earth, a Serengeti of the Americas. Some people have urged that I declare the coastal plain of the Refuge a National Monument. I have declined, because current law actually provides more protection for this refuge than monument status would.

But I want to be very clear here: those who propose invading this wilderness in a search for oil are wrong. No-one should be allowed squander this environmental Eden forever, just to save a few pennies at the gas pump. In 1995, I used my veto to prevent oil drilling here, and I will continue – as a private citizen – to defend it from exploitation. But before I re-assume that simple but proud title of “citizen” this weekend, I have some unfinished business to complete as President.

Over the past 200 years, the White House has been witness to a remarkable sweep of American history, from the mundane to the magnificent. It was right here, in the East Room, that First Lady Abigail Adams used to hang up the Presidential laundry to dry, and here in this room that union soldiers slept during the Civil War. It was also here that a young idealist named Meriwether Lewis – summoned by President Jefferson to serve as his personal secretary – first unpacked his traveler’s trunk, and set up quarters in 1801.

The history books tell us this room looked quite different back then: no chandeliers, no parquet floors, no silk drapes – just the rough slatting of walls awaiting plaster, and two stone hearths to ward off the winter chill. But if this empty hall lacked grandeur, the ideas that filled it made up for all of that. For it was here that Jefferson and Lewis – down on their hands and knees – first unfurled an unfinished map of a great continent, and planned a bold expedition of discovery.

Given all that followed – one of history’s great journeys of exploration, the opening of the American west, and ultimately the nation we know today – it is entirely fitting that we meet here in this room to celebrate that early vision, and to protect this historic legacy for generations to come.

Of course, most of the wild landscape Meriwether Lewis and William Clark traversed nearly two centuries ago has changed beyond recognition – forests have been cut; prairies plowed; rivers dammed; cities built. That is the march of time. But there are still a few wild places left, rugged reminders of our nation’s rich history, and nature’s enduring majesty. At the dawn of the 21st century, they are more important to America than ever, and so – after careful review and extensive public input – we protect them today by establishing them as National Monuments.

The first of these Monuments covers a remote stretch of the Missouri River in central Montana, known as the Upper Missouri River Breaks. If you canoe these magical waters or hike their weathered bluffs, you might well encounter deer, elk, bear, wolves, mountain lions or even bighorn sheep – just as Lewis and Clark did in 1805. In a journal entry dated May 31st of that year, Lewis wrote “The hills and river cliffs which we passed today exhibit a most romantic appearance... As we passed on, it seemed as if those scenes of visionary enchantment would never have an end.”

Today we protect the Breaks so these “scenes of visionary enchantment” will never end, as long as Americans cherish our heritage and pass it on to future generations.

The second monument we designate today is also in Montana. It is Pompey’s Pillar, the sandstone outcrop named after Pompey, the newborn son of Sacagawea, the expedition’s Shoshone guide. A religious site and natural lookout for nearly 12,000 years, this monolith bears the petroglyphs of many ancient travelers. Lewis carved his own name into the rock and it's still there today, a mute testimony to that epic journey of 8,000 miles.

Some years ago, the novelist Wallace Stegner observed that America has a fundamental interest in preserving wilderness of all kinds, because it was the challenge of this wilderness that formed our character as a people. He wrote that even if we rarely set foot in such wild places, they give us a "geography of hope," one that sustains us in our busy lives, even here in the city.

We need to protect this American "geography of hope" – not just along the Lewis and Clark trail, but all across the country. To help accomplish that, I am proud to establish or expand six other National Monuments today. In saving these sites, we save our heritage, and we leave the world a little better off for our children and grandchildren.

These monuments include: the U.S. Virgin Island Coral Reef National Monument and the Buck Island Reef National Monument, to further protect our endangered coral reefs; the Sonoran Desert National Monument in Arizona, which is the most biologically diverse desert in America; the Kasha-Katuwe Tent Rocks National Monument in New Mexico, an ancient volcanic range of spectacular beauty; and the NAME internment camp in Idaho, where many Japanese Americans spent hard, lonely years waiting for war – and injustice – to end.

In addition to creating these National Monuments, I also want to take this opportunity to address some of the expedition's unfinished business and right some injustices that have lingered for nearly 200 years now.

The first of these concerns William Clark. Although promised the rank of Captain when he agreed to help Lewis lead the Corps of Discovery, issues of budget and bureaucracy intervened, and he never got that commission. A natural leader and remarkable frontiersman, Lt. William Clark risked his life for his country across a continent and back, and I was proud to sign legislation promoting him, posthumously, to the rank of Captain. His great, great, great grandson, Bud Clark, will accept the citation on his behalf.

The expedition's success also hinged on the courage and commitment of Sacagawea, an extraordinary fifteen-year-old Shoshone guide who made most of the trip with a baby boy on her back. Time and again her language skills, local knowledge and tribal connections saved Lewis and Clark from certain disaster, even death.

Despite her quiet heroics, Sacagawea received no formal recognition after the expedition returned. Last year, we put her likeness on the new dollar coin. Today, I am proud to announce that the Army has named her as an Honorary Scout in the Corps of Discovery, so that all might remember her critical role in Lewis and Clark's journey to the sea. Amy Mossett, a tribal leader, will accept the citation on her behalf.

Finally, I want to recognize York, the slave who accompanied Lewis and Clark to the Pacific and back. Like Sacagawea, York shared all the risk but none of the reward. And while the rigors of the wilderness fostered a certain camaraderie and respect among York and his fellow explorers, that did not translate into freedom upon his return. Only years later did he finally gain his liberty, before fading into history.

Today, in recognition of York's selfless contributions to the Corps of Discovery and his service to our country, the Army has named him an Honorary Scout. Jim Holmberg, an archivist and scholar of the expedition, will accept the citation on York's behalf.

Even as we finally right these wrongs, and even as we celebrate the legacy of Lewis and Clark, we recognize the irony inherent in their expedition. Theirs was an historic journey of discovery that opened up the American West, a mythic frontier that even today endures in the American mind as a symbol of freedom.

But York, a slave, was anything but free. And Sacagawea's tribe – like its neighbors – would in decades to come be swept away by a flood of American settlers, determined to claim the Great Plains and the land beyond. These are hard truths. They do not fit comfortably within the narrow moral boundaries of manifest destiny, or square with modern American notions of democracy and diversity.

But just as our nation has grown physically through the course of its history, so too have we grown as a people. It has been precisely this capacity for growth – an expanding awareness of our common humanity and shared destiny – that makes our democracy resilient and strong.

Nearly two centuries ago, Lewis and Clark used the compass on this table to navigate a continent of possibility. Now, America is setting out to navigate a new century of possibility. If we can protect our nation's natural and historic heritage – if we recognize that our fate is inextricably linked to that of the land we love – we will surely leave this world a little better than we found it, and this nation a little closer to that more perfect union of our Founders' dreams.

-#-

  TX REPORT ***

TRANSMISSION OK

TX/RX NO	2513
CONNECTION TEL		57376
CONNECTION ID	MILLENNIUM COUNC
ST. TIME	01/16 14:06
USAGE T	01'52
PGS. SENT	5
RESULT	OK

Document No. _____

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP
 Subject: Remarks - Designation of Nat'l Monuments

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☒	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	E. Lovell	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☒	☐		☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐		☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐		☐	☐

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAPSubject: Remarks - Designation of Nat'l Monuments

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☒	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	E. Lovell	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☒	☐		☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐		☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐		☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐		☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐		☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to John Pollack

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 1/16/01 12:25 p.m.
John Pollack

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
REMARKS ON DESIGNATION OF
NATIONAL MONUMENTS
WASHINGTON, DC
January 17, 2001

Good morning. Secretary Babbitt; Senators Baucus and Leahy; OTHER MoCs TK; descendants of the Lewis and Clark families; Jim Holmberg; Stephen Ambrose, who has brought history to life for so many people; honored guests – welcome to the White House. This is the last time, as President, that I will have the honor of extending such a welcome, and I thank you all for joining us here today.

This may also be the last time that I have the opportunity to thank the members of our administration's environmental team, including Secretary Babbitt, George Frampton and Carol Browner – as well as the national environmental community. While we still face big challenges, especially global warming, we have also made big progress on a lot of environmental issues over the past eight years.

Today, our air and water is cleaner, our food is safer, and we've cleaned up more toxic waste sites than the past two administrations combined. We also did away with the false choice between economic growth and environmental protection, a shift in thinking that will pay big dividends in years to come. And I'm also very proud that our administration has now set aside more land for conservation in the lower 48 states than any administration since that of Teddy Roosevelt, nearly a century ago.

But there is still more we must do. Before I talk about the National Monuments we are creating today, I want to say a few words about two areas that will require our protection in the years to come.

First, the Owyhee (o-WHY-hee) Canyonlands in southwest Idaho. These are some of the most spectacular unprotected federal lands in the country, a maze of ancient canyons that are home to bighorn sheep, antelope, and many other species. If we all work together, we can protect its wilderness value and its potential for traditional local uses – much as the people of Oregon did with Steens Mountain earlier this year.

Second, we must continue to safeguard the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, which is one of the last truly wild places on earth, a Serengeti of the Americas. Some people have urged that I declare the coastal plain of the Refuge a National Monument. I have declined, because current law actually provides more protection for this refuge than monument status would.

But I want to be very clear here: those who propose invading this wilderness in a search for oil are wrong. No-one should be allowed squander this environmental Eden forever, just to save a few pennies at the gas pump. In 1995, I used my veto to prevent oil drilling here, and I will continue – as a private citizen – to defend it from exploitation. But before I re-assume that simple but proud title of “citizen” this weekend, I have some unfinished business to complete as President.

Over the past 200 years, the White House has been witness to a remarkable sweep of American history, from the mundane to the magnificent. It was right here, in the East Room, that First Lady Abigail Adams used to hang up the Presidential laundry to dry, and here in this room that union soldiers slept during the Civil War. It was also here that a young idealist named Meriwether Lewis – summoned by President Jefferson to serve as his personal secretary – first unpacked his traveler’s trunk, and set up quarters in 1801.

The history books tell us this room looked quite different back then: no chandeliers, no parquet floors, no silk drapes – just the rough slatting of walls awaiting plaster, and two stone hearths to ward off the winter chill. But if this empty hall lacked grandeur, the ideas that filled it made up for all of that. For it was here that Jefferson and Lewis – down on their hands and knees – first unfurled an unfinished map of a great continent, and planned a bold expedition of discovery.

Given all that followed – one of history’s great journeys of exploration, the opening of the American west, and ultimately the nation we know today – it is entirely fitting that we meet here in this room to celebrate that early vision, and to protect this historic legacy for generations to come.

Of course, most of the wild landscape Meriwether Lewis and William Clark traversed nearly two centuries ago has changed beyond recognition – forests have been cut; prairies plowed; rivers dammed; cities built. That is the march of time. But there are still a few wild places left, rugged reminders of our nation’s rich history, and nature’s enduring majesty. At the dawn of the 21st century, they are more important to America than ever, and so – after careful review and extensive public input – we protect them today by establishing them as National Monuments.

The first of these Monuments covers a remote stretch of the Missouri River in central Montana, known as the Upper Missouri River Breaks. If you canoe these magical waters or hike their weathered bluffs, you might well encounter deer, elk, bear, wolves, mountain lions or even bighorn sheep – just as Lewis and Clark did in 1805. In a journal entry dated May 31st of that year, Lewis wrote “The hills and river cliffs which we passed today exhibit a most romantic appearance... As we passed on, it seemed as if those scenes of visionary enchantment would never have an end.”

Today we protect the Breaks so these “scenes of visionary enchantment” will never end, as long as Americans cherish our heritage and pass it on to future generations.

The second monument we designate today is also in Montana. It is Pompey’s Pillar, the sandstone outcrop named after Pompey, the newborn son of Sacagawea, the expedition’s Shoshone guide. A religious site and natural lookout for nearly 12,000 years, this monolith bears the petroglyphs of many ancient travelers. Lewis carved his own name into the rock and it's still there today, a mute testimony to that epic journey of 8,000 miles.

Some years ago, the novelist Wallace Stegner observed that America has a fundamental interest in preserving wilderness of all kinds, because it was the challenge of this wilderness that formed our character as a people. He wrote that even if we rarely set foot in such wild places, they give us a "geography of hope," one that sustains us in our busy lives, even here in the city.

We need to protect this American "geography of hope" – not just along the Lewis and Clark trail, but all across the country. To help accomplish that, I am proud to establish or expand six other National Monuments today. In saving these sites, we save our heritage, and we leave the world a little better off for our children and grandchildren.

These monuments include: the U.S. Virgin Island Coral Reef National Monument and the Buck Island Reef National Monument, to further protect our endangered coral reefs; the Sonoran Desert National Monument in Arizona, which is the most biologically diverse desert in America; the Kasha-Katuwe Tent Rocks National Monument in New Mexico, an ancient volcanic range of spectacular beauty; and the NAME internment camp in Idaho, where many Japanese Americans spent hard, lonely years waiting for war – and injustice – to end.

In addition to creating these National Monuments, I also want to take this opportunity to address some of the expedition's unfinished business and right some injustices that have lingered for nearly 200 years now.

The first of these concerns William Clark. Although promised the rank of Captain when he agreed to help Lewis lead the Corps of Discovery, issues of budget and bureaucracy intervened, and he never got that commission. A natural leader and remarkable frontiersman, Lt. William Clark risked his life for his country across a continent and back, and I was proud to sign legislation promoting him, posthumously, to the rank of Captain. His great, great, great grandson, Bud Clark, will accept the citation on his behalf.

The expedition's success also hinged on the courage and commitment of Sacagawea, an extraordinary fifteen-year-old Shoshone guide who made most of the trip with a baby boy on her back. Time and again her language skills, local knowledge and tribal connections saved Lewis and Clark from certain disaster, even death.

Despite her quiet heroics, Sacagawea received no formal recognition after the expedition returned. Last year, we put her likeness on the new dollar coin. Today, I am proud to announce that the Army has named her as an Honorary Scout in the Corps of Discovery, so that all might remember her critical role in Lewis and Clark's journey to the sea. Amy Mossett, a tribal leader, will accept the citation on her behalf.

Finally, I want to recognize York, the slave who accompanied Lewis and Clark to the Pacific and back. Like Sacagawea, York shared all the risk but none of the reward. And while the rigors of the wilderness fostered a certain camaraderie and respect among York and his fellow explorers, that did not translate into freedom upon his return. Only years later did he finally gain his liberty, before fading into history.

Today, in recognition of York's selfless contributions to the Corps of Discovery and his service to our country, the Army has named him an Honorary Scout. Jim Holmberg, an archivist and scholar of the expedition, will accept the citation on York's behalf.

Even as we finally right these wrongs, and even as we celebrate the legacy of Lewis and Clark, we recognize the irony inherent in their expedition. Theirs was an historic journey of discovery that opened up the American West, a mythic frontier that even today endures in the American mind as a symbol of freedom.

But York, a slave, was anything but free. And Sacagawea's tribe – like its neighbors – would in decades to come be swept away by a flood of American settlers, determined to claim the Great Plains and the land beyond. These are hard truths. They do not fit comfortably within the narrow moral boundaries of manifest destiny, or square with modern American notions of democracy and diversity.

But just as our nation has grown physically through the course of its history, so too have we grown as a people. It has been precisely this capacity for growth – an expanding awareness of our common humanity and shared destiny – that makes our democracy resilient and strong.

Nearly two centuries ago, Lewis and Clark used the compass on this table to navigate a continent of possibility. Now, America is setting out to navigate a new century of possibility. If we can protect our nation's natural and historic heritage – if we recognize that our fate is inextricably linked to that of the land we love – we will surely leave this world a little better than we found it, and this nation a little closer to that more perfect union of our Founders' dreams.

-#-

  TX REPORT ***

TRANSMISSION OK

TX/RX NO 2514
 CONNECTION TEL 62710
 CONNECTION ID
 ST. TIME 01/16 15:27
 USAGE T 01'52
 PGS. SENT 5
 RESULT OK

Document No. _____

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP
 Subject: Remarks. Designation of Nat'l Monuments

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☒	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	E. Lovell	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☒	☐		☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐		☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐		☐	☐

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAPSubject: Remarks - Designation of Nat'l Monuments

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☒	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☒	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	E. Lovell	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☒	☐		☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐		☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐		☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐		☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐		☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to John Pollack

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 1/16/01 12:25 p.m.
John Pollack

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
REMARKS ON DESIGNATION OF
NATIONAL MONUMENTS
WASHINGTON, DC
January 17, 2001

Good morning. Secretary Babbitt; Senators Baucus and Leahy; OTHER MoCs TK; descendants of the Lewis and Clark families; Jim Holmberg; Stephen Ambrose, who has brought history to life for so many people; honored guests – welcome to the White House. This is the last time, as President, that I will have the honor of extending such a welcome, and I thank you all for joining us here today.

This may also be the last time that I have the opportunity to thank the members of our administration's environmental team, including Secretary Babbitt, George Frampton and Carol Browner – as well as the national environmental community. While we still face big challenges, especially global warming, we have also made big progress on a lot of environmental issues over the past eight years.

Today, our air and water is cleaner, our food is safer, and we've cleaned up more toxic waste sites than the past two administrations combined. We also did away with the false choice between economic growth and environmental protection, a shift in thinking that will pay big dividends in years to come. And I'm also very proud that our administration has now set aside more land for conservation in the lower 48 states than any administration since that of Teddy Roosevelt, nearly a century ago.

But there is still more we must do. Before I talk about the National Monuments we are creating today, I want to say a few words about two areas that will require our protection in the years to come.

First, the Owyhee (o-WHY-hee) Canyonlands in southwest Idaho. These are some of the most spectacular unprotected federal lands in the country, a maze of ancient canyons that are home to bighorn sheep, antelope, and many other species. If we all work together, we can protect its wilderness value and its potential for traditional local uses – much as the people of Oregon did with Steens Mountain earlier this year.

Second, we must continue to safeguard the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, which is one of the last truly wild places on earth, a Serengeti of the Americas. Some people have urged that I declare the coastal plain of the Refuge a National Monument. I have declined, because current law actually provides more protection for this refuge than monument status would.

But I want to be very clear here: those who propose invading this wilderness in a search for oil are wrong. No-one should be allowed squander this environmental Eden forever, just to save a few pennies at the gas pump. In 1995, I used my veto to prevent oil drilling here, and I will continue – as a private citizen – to defend it from exploitation. But before I re-assume that simple but proud title of “citizen” this weekend, I have some unfinished business to complete as President.

Over the past 200 years, the White House has been witness to a remarkable sweep of American history, from the mundane to the magnificent. It was right here, in the East Room, that First Lady Abigail Adams used to hang up the Presidential laundry to dry, and here in this room that union soldiers slept during the Civil War. It was also here that a young idealist named Meriwether Lewis – summoned by President Jefferson to serve as his personal secretary – first unpacked his traveler’s trunk, and set up quarters in 1801.

The history books tell us this room looked quite different back then: no chandeliers, no parquet floors, no silk drapes – just the rough slatting of walls awaiting plaster, and two stone hearths to ward off the winter chill. But if this empty hall lacked grandeur, the ideas that filled it made up for all of that. For it was here that Jefferson and Lewis – down on their hands and knees – first unfurled an unfinished map of a great continent, and planned a bold expedition of discovery.

Given all that followed – one of history’s great journeys of exploration, the opening of the American west, and ultimately the nation we know today – it is entirely fitting that we meet here in this room to celebrate that early vision, and to protect this historic legacy for generations to come.

Of course, most of the wild landscape Meriwether Lewis and William Clark traversed nearly two centuries ago has changed beyond recognition – forests have been cut; prairies plowed; rivers dammed; cities built. That is the march of time. But there are still a few wild places left, rugged reminders of our nation’s rich history, and nature’s enduring majesty. At the dawn of the 21st century, they are more important to America than ever, and so – after careful review and extensive public input – we protect them today by establishing them as National Monuments.

The first of these Monuments covers a remote stretch of the Missouri River in central Montana, known as the Upper Missouri River Breaks. If you canoe these magical waters or hike their weathered bluffs, you might well encounter deer, elk, bear, wolves, mountain lions or even bighorn sheep – just as Lewis and Clark did in 1805. In a journal entry dated May 31st of that year, Lewis wrote “The hills and river cliffs which we passed today exhibit a most romantic appearance... As we passed on, it seemed as if those scenes of visionary enchantment would never have an end.”

Today we protect the Breaks so these “scenes of visionary enchantment” will never end, as long as Americans cherish our heritage and pass it on to future generations.

The second monument we designate today is also in Montana. It is Pompey’s Pillar, the sandstone outcrop named after Pompey, the newborn son of Sacagawea, the expedition’s Shoshone guide. A religious site and natural lookout for nearly 12,000 years, this monolith bears the petroglyphs of many ancient travelers. Lewis carved his own name into the rock and it's still there today, a mute testimony to that epic journey of 8,000 miles.

Some years ago, the novelist Wallace Stegner observed that America has a fundamental interest in preserving wilderness of all kinds, because it was the challenge of this wilderness that formed our character as a people. He wrote that even if we rarely set foot in such wild places, they give us a "geography of hope," one that sustains us in our busy lives, even here in the city.

We need to protect this American "geography of hope" – not just along the Lewis and Clark trail, but all across the country. To help accomplish that, I am proud to establish or expand six other National Monuments today. In saving these sites, we save our heritage, and we leave the world a little better off for our children and grandchildren.

These monuments include: the U.S. Virgin Island Coral Reef National Monument and the Buck Island Reef National Monument, to further protect our endangered coral reefs; the Sonoran Desert National Monument in Arizona, which is the most biologically diverse desert in America; the Kasha-Katuwe Tent Rocks National Monument in New Mexico, an ancient volcanic range of spectacular beauty; and the NAME internment camp in Idaho, where many Japanese Americans spent hard, lonely years waiting for war – and injustice – to end.

In addition to creating these National Monuments, I also want to take this opportunity to address some of the expedition's unfinished business and right some injustices that have lingered for nearly 200 years now.

The first of these concerns William Clark. Although promised the rank of Captain when he agreed to help Lewis lead the Corps of Discovery, issues of budget and bureaucracy intervened, and he never got that commission. A natural leader and remarkable frontiersman, Lt. William Clark risked his life for his country across a continent and back, and I was proud to sign legislation promoting him, posthumously, to the rank of Captain. His great, great, great grandson, Bud Clark, will accept the citation on his behalf.

The expedition's success also hinged on the courage and commitment of Sacagawea, an extraordinary fifteen-year-old Shoshone guide who made most of the trip with a baby boy on her back. Time and again her language skills, local knowledge and tribal connections saved Lewis and Clark from certain disaster, even death.

Despite her quiet heroics, Sacagawea received no formal recognition after the expedition returned. Last year, we put her likeness on the new dollar coin. Today, I am proud to announce that the Army has named her as an Honorary Scout in the Corps of Discovery, so that all might remember her critical role in Lewis and Clark's journey to the sea. Amy Mossett, a tribal leader, will accept the citation on her behalf.

Finally, I want to recognize York, the slave who accompanied Lewis and Clark to the Pacific and back. Like Sacagawea, York shared all the risk but none of the reward. And while the rigors of the wilderness fostered a certain camaraderie and respect among York and his fellow explorers, that did not translate into freedom upon his return. Only years later did he finally gain his liberty, before fading into history.

Today, in recognition of York's selfless contributions to the Corps of Discovery and his service to our country, the Army has named him an Honorary Scout. Jim Holmberg, an archivist and scholar of the expedition, will accept the citation on York's behalf.

Even as we finally right these wrongs, and even as we celebrate the legacy of Lewis and Clark, we recognize the irony inherent in their expedition. Theirs was an historic journey of discovery that opened up the American West, a mythic frontier that even today endures in the American mind as a symbol of freedom.

But York, a slave, was anything but free. And Sacagawea's tribe – like its neighbors – would in decades to come be swept away by a flood of American settlers, determined to claim the Great Plains and the land beyond. These are hard truths. They do not fit comfortably within the narrow moral boundaries of manifest destiny, or square with modern American notions of democracy and diversity.

But just as our nation has grown physically through the course of its history, so too have we grown as a people. It has been precisely this capacity for growth – an expanding awareness of our common humanity and shared destiny – that makes our democracy resilient and strong.

Nearly two centuries ago, Lewis and Clark used the compass on this table to navigate a continent of possibility. Now, America is setting out to navigate a new century of possibility. If we can protect our nation's natural and historic heritage – if we recognize that our fate is inextricably linked to that of the land we love – we will surely leave this world a little better than we found it, and this nation a little closer to that more perfect union of our Founders' dreams.

-#-

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAPSubject: Points for Open Arrival in Arkansas

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	Nancy Harmerich	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to Heather Hurlburt

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
POINTS FOR OPEN ARRIVAL IN ARKANSAS

January 17, 2001

- Acknowledgements: [TO BE PROVIDED]
- When I took the oath of office, we had the third-strongest economic performance in America, and we had created 90,000 new jobs in Arkansas over four years. But unemployment was still 6.7 percent. Today, it's 4.2 percent, with more than 200,000 new Arkansas jobs over the last 8 years. Poverty is down, average income is up.
- The same thing has happened across nation. Unemployment is at a 30-year low; we have 22.5 million new jobs, the longest economic expansion in history, the lowest minority unemployment ever recorded, the lowest female unemployment in 40 years.
- We turned record budget deficits into record surpluses and started paying down the national debt. And that means lower interest rates for college loans, home mortgages, car payments, business loans, more jobs, higher incomes. People here in Arkansas and all across America are saving as much as $2,000 a year on mortgages and loans because we stuck to the path of fiscal discipline.
- We said we would be fiscally responsible and invest in people, and we kept our word, starting with education. Here in Arkansas, we've provided funds to hire hundreds of new teachers and cut class size in the early grades. We more than doubled funding for Head Start and set aside more than $10 million to repair school buildings here. And more than 90,000 Arkansas students are using our HOPE Scholarship and Lifetime Learning tax credits to pay for college.
- At the same time, we've driven crime down across the nation and helped Arkansas hire more than 1200 new police officers. We've helped Arkansas cut its welfare rolls by 60 percent, and helped former welfare recipients find jobs and keep them. We've cleaned up six toxic waste sites – twice as many as the previous two Administrations. And we've invested in highways, airports and mass transportation, including the Northwest Arkansas Regional Airport.
- I'm going to keep investing in Arkansas: we're building a library that will be a beautiful building that works for the people of Arkansas. It will have a park for the people of Little Rock to enjoy; it will draw tourists and visitors from all over the world; and with the University of Arkansas, it will have a public policy school offering a Master's Degree program and a chance for businesses to send people there for a couple of months as an orientation into public service.

Data Missing

This document resulted from a POST operation and has expired from the cache. If you wish you can repost the form data to recreate the document by pressing the reload button.

- Through the library, and every other way I can, I want to keep working to empower people in Arkansas, especially young people – and keep spreading the word that America’s best days are still out in front of us. Thank you.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAPSubject: Points for Open Arrival in Arkansas

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	Nancy Hornreich	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to Heather Hurlburt

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 01/16/01 5:30pm
Heather Hurlburt

01 JAN 16 PM 5:51

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
POINTS FOR OPEN ARRIVAL IN ARKANSAS

January 17, 2001

- Acknowledgements: [TO BE PROVIDED]
- When I took the oath of office, we had the third-strongest economic performance in America, and we had created 90,000 new jobs in Arkansas over four years. But unemployment was still 6.7 percent. Today, it's 4.2 percent, with more than 200,000 new Arkansas jobs over the last 8 years. Poverty is down, average income is up.
- The same thing has happened across nation. Unemployment is at a 30-year low; we have 22.5 million new jobs, the longest economic expansion in history, the lowest minority unemployment ever recorded, the lowest female unemployment in 40 years.
- We turned record budget deficits into record surpluses and started paying down the national debt. And that means lower interest rates for college loans, home mortgages, car payments, business loans, more jobs, higher incomes. People here in Arkansas and all across America are saving as much as $2,000 a year on mortgages and loans because we stuck to the path of fiscal discipline.
- We said we would be fiscally responsible and invest in people, and we kept our word, starting with education. Here in Arkansas, we've provided funds to hire hundreds of new teachers and cut class size in the early grades. We more than doubled funding for Head Start and set aside more than $10 million to repair school buildings here. And more than 90,000 Arkansas students are using our HOPE Scholarship and Lifetime Learning tax credits to pay for college.
- At the same time, we've driven crime down across the nation and helped Arkansas hire more than 1200 new police officers. We've helped Arkansas cut its welfare rolls by 60 percent, and helped former welfare recipients find jobs and keep them. We've cleaned up six toxic waste sites – twice as many as the previous two Administrations. And we've invested in highways, airports and mass transportation, including the Northwest Arkansas Regional Airport.
- I'm going to keep investing in Arkansas: we're building a library that will be a beautiful building that works for the people of Arkansas. It will have a park for the people of Little Rock to enjoy; it will draw tourists and visitors from all over the world; and with the University of Arkansas, it will have a public policy school offering a Master's Degree program and a chance for businesses to send people there for a couple of months as an orientation into public service.

- Through the library, and every other way I can, I want to keep working to empower people in Arkansas, especially young people – and keep spreading the word that America's best days are still out in front of us. Thank you.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAPSubject: Points for Open Arrival in Arkansas

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI 	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	Nancy Hammerich	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to Heather Hurlburt

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 01/16/01 5:30pm
Heather Hurlburt

01 JAN 15 PM 5:52

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
POINTS FOR OPEN ARRIVAL IN ARKANSAS

January 17, 2001

- Acknowledgements: [TO BE PROVIDED]
- When I took the oath of office, we had the third-strongest economic performance in America, and we had created 90,000 new jobs in Arkansas over four years. But unemployment was still 6.7 percent. Today, it's 4.2 percent, with more than 200,000 new Arkansas jobs over the last 8 years. Poverty is down, average income is up.
- The same thing has happened across nation. Unemployment is at a 30-year low; we have 22.5 million new jobs, the longest economic expansion in history, the lowest minority unemployment ever recorded, the lowest female unemployment in 40 years.
- We turned record budget deficits into record surpluses and started paying down the national debt. And that means lower interest rates for college loans, home mortgages, car payments, business loans, more jobs, higher incomes. People here in Arkansas and all across America are saving as much as $2,000 a year on mortgages and loans because we stuck to the path of fiscal discipline.
- We said we would be fiscally responsible and invest in people, and we kept our word, starting with education. Here in Arkansas, we've provided funds to hire hundreds of new teachers and cut class size in the early grades. We more than doubled funding for Head Start and set aside more than $10 million to repair school buildings here. And more than 90,000 Arkansas students are using our HOPE Scholarship and Lifetime Learning tax credits to pay for college.
- At the same time, we've driven crime down across the nation and helped Arkansas hire more than 1200 new police officers. We've helped Arkansas cut its welfare rolls by 60 percent, and helped former welfare recipients find jobs and keep them. We've cleaned up six toxic waste sites – twice as many as the previous two Administrations. And we've invested in highways, airports and mass transportation, including the Northwest Arkansas Regional Airport.
- I'm going to keep investing in Arkansas: we're building a library that will be a beautiful building that works for the people of Arkansas. It will have a park for the people of Little Rock to enjoy; it will draw tourists and visitors from all over the world; and with the University of Arkansas, it will have a public policy school offering a Master's Degree program and a chance for businesses to send people there for a couple of months as an orientation into public service.

- Through the library, and every other way I can, I want to keep working to empower people in Arkansas, especially young people – and keep spreading the word that America’s best days are still out in front of us. Thank you.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01

ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY:

ASAP

Subject: _____

Points for Open Arrival in Arkansas

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	Nancy Hammerich	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐	_____	☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐	_____	☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to Heather Hurlburt

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 01/16/01 5:30pm
Heather Hurlburt

01 JAN 16 PM 5:51

PRESIDENT WILLIAM JEFFERSON CLINTON
POINTS FOR OPEN ARRIVAL IN ARKANSAS

January 17, 2001

- Acknowledgements: [TO BE PROVIDED]
- When I took the oath of office, we had the third-strongest economic performance in America, and we had created 90,000 new jobs in Arkansas over four years. But unemployment was still 6.7 percent. Today, it's 4.2 percent, with more than 200,000 new Arkansas jobs over the last 8 years. Poverty is down, average income is up.
- The same thing has happened across nation. Unemployment is at a 30-year low; we have 22.5 million new jobs, the longest economic expansion in history, the lowest minority unemployment ever recorded, the lowest female unemployment in 40 years.
- We turned record budget deficits into record surpluses and started paying down the national debt. And that means lower interest rates for college loans, home mortgages, car payments, business loans, more jobs, higher incomes. People here in Arkansas and all across America are saving as much as $2,000 a year on mortgages and loans because we stuck to the path of fiscal discipline.
- We said we would be fiscally responsible and invest in people, and we kept our word, starting with education. Here in Arkansas, we've provided funds to hire hundreds of new teachers and cut class size in the early grades. We more than doubled funding for Head Start and set aside more than $10 million to repair school buildings here. And more than 90,000 Arkansas students are using our HOPE Scholarship and Lifetime Learning tax credits to pay for college.
- At the same time, we've driven crime down across the nation and helped Arkansas hire more than 1200 new police officers. We've helped Arkansas cut its welfare rolls by 60 percent, and helped former welfare recipients find jobs and keep them. We've cleaned up six toxic waste sites – twice as many as the previous two Administrations. And we've invested in highways, airports and mass transportation, including the Northwest Arkansas Regional Airport.
- I'm going to keep investing in Arkansas: we're building a library that will be a beautiful building that works for the people of Arkansas. It will have a park for the people of Little Rock to enjoy; it will draw tourists and visitors from all over the world; and with the University of Arkansas, it will have a public policy school offering a Master's Degree program and a chance for businesses to send people there for a couple of months as an orientation into public service.

- Through the library, and every other way I can, I want to keep working to empower people in Arkansas, especially young people – and keep spreading the word that America’s best days are still out in front of us. Thank you.

  TX REPORT ***

TRANSMISSION OK

TX/RX NO 2518
 CONNECTION TEL 62505
 CONNECTION ID
 ST. TIME 01/16 19:10
 USAGE T 00'53
 PGS. SENT 3
 RESULT OK

Document No.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP
 Subject: Points for Open Arrival in Arkansas

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☐	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☐	☐	STREETT	☐	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	Nancy Hammelch	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐		☐	☐
IBARRA	☐	☐		☐	☐
JOHNSON R	☐	☐		☐	☐

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP 8:30 PM
 Subject: Remarks - Joint Session of AK Legislature

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☒	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☒	☐	STREETT	☒	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	L. Cutter	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	J. Kearny	☒	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	B. Linden	☒	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	N. Hernandez	☒	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐		☒	☐
LANE	☐	☐		☐	☐

REMARKS: Comments to Gotthelmer 62554

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS TO JOINT SESSION OF ARKANSAS LEGISLATURE
LITTLE ROCK, AR
January 17, 2001

Ack. Sen. Pryor. Rep. Snyder. Rep. Ross. Sec. Slater. Sec. Gober. Admin. James Lee Witt. Mack McLarty (former state legislator); Gloria Cabe (former state legislator). State Rep. Mary Ann Salmon.

In the last days of my presidency, there's no place I'd rather be than here in Arkansas, and here in this august chamber, where it all began for me. I remember the first time I spoke here. It's seems like just yesterday. I was a 28 years old candidate for Congress, and I came here to ask for the support of the House. I lost that election – but I won a passion for public service. And I haven't been able to shake it ever since.

Since then, I have stood in the well of this chamber dozens of times. And each time I do I draw inspiration from the spirit and example of Arkansas heroes who paved the way for me. People like Max Howell and Knox Nelson, who taught me how to get along with the legislative branch. And legends like Senator William Fulbright, Senator Dale Bumpers, and Senator David Pryor. They taught me to aspire to greatness – not only for myself, but for this great state that we all love.

But mostly I came here today to say thank you – to the people who believed in me when no one else did; and who have always stood by me, through storm and sunshine. That list starts with my mother, who stood with me when I was first sworn in as Governor – and who stands with me today in spirit. It's the lessons I learned from her and my grandparents about life, about hope, about racial equality that have the building blocks of my career and my life. I also want to thank my wife Hillary – Senator Clinton – for getting in that old car, driving cross country to join me in this wonderful ride. Some of my fondest memories are of our life together here with Chelsea.

And of course I want to thank the people of Arkansas, for electing me Governor four times – and for sending me to Washington to carry the lessons we learned and the progress we made to the rest of America. Everything I have done as President has its roots here in Arkansas – from education reform ... to economic policy and development ... to welfare and health care ... to building One America.

In my first Inaugural Address as Governor, I said that “We must be mindful that higher quality education will not come from money alone. The money must be but part of a plan that includes better accountability and assessment for teachers and students.” That's what we did here, with investments and innovations in early childhood learning through efforts like our HIPPY program; and higher standards for teachers, students, and schools. And it paid off. Our high school graduation rates were the highest in the region; and, with higher salaries, we began to pay our teachers what they deserved.

We brought that simple strategy to our national education policy, by investing and demanding more from school districts across the nation. We more than doubled investment in our schools; expanded and improved Head Start; provided afterschool and summer school to 1.3 million children; and helped schools hire more highly-trained teachers to reduce class size in the early grades. Now, reading and math scores are going up, with some of the biggest gains in some of our most disadvantaged schools. SAT scores are rising even as more students from more diverse backgrounds are taking the test. And more high school graduates are going to college than ever before, thanks to the biggest expansion in college opportunity since the GI Bill.

One of the most important lessons I learned as Governor was the importance of investing in human capital, so that the people of Arkansas could take advantage of the vast new opportunities of the new economy. That's why we worked so hard to bring high tech and manufacturing jobs to our state, to support job training programs, and expand small and minority business opportunities. And as a result, manufacturing jobs in Arkansas grew at ten times the national average.

In 1992, when I came to office, we knew we had to make the same investments in America's future. Back then, ten million of our fellow citizens were out of work, and most of those with jobs were working harder for less. Interest rates were high. The deficit was $290 billion and rising, imposing a crushing burden on our economy and our children.

Just look how far we've come since then. Right here in Arkansas, the unemployment rate was 6.7 percent in 1993. Today it's 4.2 percent. And nationwide it has dropped from 7.5 percent in 1992 to 4 percent today – the lowest unemployment rate in 30 years. Nationwide, we've created 22 ½ million new jobs, and more than 200,000 of them right here in Arkansas. We've turned decades of deficits into the biggest back-to-back surpluses in history. And we're well on our way to making America debt-free by the end of this decade.

We have the lowest Hispanic and African American unemployment on record, and the highest homeownership ever. And for the first time in decades, wages are rising across all levels. Since 1993, the yearly income of the typical family is up $6,300 and hourly wages are up by more than 9 percent. The rising tide of our economy really is lifting all boats.

When I was Governor, we also made special efforts to lift up our most hard-pressed communities, through efforts like the Arkansas Certified Development Corporation and the Lower Mississippi Delta Development Commission, which helped bring jobs and opportunity to the region. We made great progress then, and, as President, with Secretary Slater's help, we've continued to fight for the economic revitalization of the Delta. In my last budget, we secured more than $20 million to create and fund a new Delta Regional Authority, which will infuse new resources for economic development and assistance from federal agencies to help improve the lives of those living in that region. We also received funding for our New Markets Initiative, which gives businesses the same incentives to invest in our hardest-pressed communities here at home that we give them to invest developing nations around the world.

As Governor, I also learned that the key to improving people's lives was giving them the tools to make the most of their God-given potential. That meant reforming Arkansas' welfare system, to reward work and demand personal responsibility. Those tools also included efforts to improve the health of young children, through pre-natal care, immunization, and expanded health care coverage for low-income families.

We've taken that same approach in Washington. We passed welfare reform, which requires work and rewards it. As a result, we've cut the welfare rolls by nearly 60 percent, and millions have moved from welfare to work. We've also insisted that those who go to work get the job training, child care and transportation they need, and that their children don't go hungry or lose their health insurance when they do. And we've rewarded work by raising the minimum wage and nearly doubling the number of families lifted out of poverty by the Earned Income Tax Credit. Today, we have the lowest poverty rate in two decades.

We also created our Children's Health Insurance Program, which has now provided health coverage to 3.3 million previously uninsured children of low-income parents. Now, for the first time in 12 years, the number of Americans without health insurance is going down. And for the first time in our history, more than 90 percent of our children have been immunized against serious childhood diseases.

Finally, one of the biggest lessons I learned in Arkansas, dating back to my childhood, is that everybody counts, everybody deserves a chance, and we all do better when we help each other. From the crisis in Little Rock in 1957, through the civil rights struggles in the 1960s, racial and ethnic reconciliation have been the driving motivation of my life. Just this Monday, on Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday, I issued a set of challenges to Congress to complete the unfinished business of building One America – from ending racial profiling ... to closing disparities in health ... to giving back the right to vote to ex-offenders, which is something we did here Arkansas ... to ensuring that in every neighborhood, every vote counts, and every vote is counted. I know we can count on you to make sure these challenges are met.

I have spent my lifetime working on these issues, and I will continue to do so after I leave the White House. The focal point of much of that work will be right here in Little Rock. We've always been an incubator for new ideas – and I know that with the Clinton Library, School and Center in Little Rock we will continue to be in the years ahead. At the Center, we will continue to work for racial, religious and ethnic reconciliation both within and beyond our borders. The new University of Arkansas Clinton School Public Policy will be a place where young people can come and study and, I hope, be inspired to enter public service.

In 1979, the day I was first sworn in as Governor, I said, "The people of Arkansas have two emotions in great abundance: hope and pride ... Without it, there is no such thing as the quality of life. With it, there is nothing we cannot achieve." As I go on to the most important job of all – the job of citizen – I am more convinced than ever that with hope and pride our best days lie ahead.

Thank you and God bless you all.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP 8:30am
 Subject: Remarks - Joint Session of AK Legislature

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☒	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☒	☐	STREETT	☒	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	L. Cutler	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	J. Kearney	☒	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	B. Lindsey	☒	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	N. Hernandez	☒	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐		☐	☐
LANE	☐	☐		☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to Gotthelmer 62554

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 1/16/01 7:30pm
Edmonds/Gottheimer

01 JAN 15 2001

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS TO JOINT SESSION OF ARKANSAS LEGISLATURE
LITTLE ROCK, AR
January 17, 2001

Ack. Sen. Pryor. Rep. Snyder. Rep. Ross. Sec. Slater. Sec. Gober. Admin. James Lee Witt. Mack McLarty (former state legislator); Gloria Cabe (former state legislator). State Rep. Mary Ann Salmon.

In the last days of my presidency, there's no place I'd rather be than here in Arkansas, and here in this august chamber, where it all began for me. I remember the first time I spoke here. It's seems like just yesterday. I was a 28 years old candidate for Congress, and I came here to ask for the support of the House. I lost that election – but I won a passion for public service. And I haven't been able to shake it ever since.

Since then, I have stood in the well of this chamber dozens of times. And each time I do I draw inspiration from the spirit and example of Arkansas heroes who paved the way for me. People like Max Howell and Knox Nelson, who taught me how to get along with the legislative branch. And legends like Senator William Fulbright, Senator Dale Bumpers, and Senator David Pryor. They taught me to aspire to greatness – not only for myself, but for this great state that we all love.

But mostly I came here today to say thank you – to the people who believed in me when no one else did; and who have always stood by me, through storm and sunshine. That list starts with my mother, who stood with me when I was first sworn in as Governor – and who stands with me today in spirit. It's the lessons I learned from her and my grandparents about life, about hope, about racial equality that have the building blocks of my career and my life. I also want to thank my wife Hillary – Senator Clinton – for getting in that old car, driving cross country to join me in this wonderful ride. Some of my fondest memories are of our life together here with Chelsea.

And of course I want to thank the people of Arkansas, for electing me Governor four times – and for sending me to Washington to carry the lessons we learned and the progress we made to the rest of America. Everything I have done as President has its roots here in Arkansas – from education reform ... to economic policy and development ... to welfare and health care ... to building One America.

In my first Inaugural Address as Governor, I said that "We must be mindful that higher quality education will not come from money alone. The money must be but part of a plan that includes better accountability and assessment for teachers and students." That's what we did here, with investments and innovations in early childhood learning through efforts like our HIPPY program; and higher standards for teachers, students, and schools. And it paid off. Our high school graduation rates were the highest in the region; and, with higher salaries, we began to pay our teachers what they deserved.

We brought that simple strategy to our national education policy, by investing and demanding more from school districts across the nation. We more than doubled investment in our schools; expanded and improved Head Start; provided afterschool and summer school to 1.3 million children; and helped schools hire more highly-trained teachers to reduce class size in the early grades. Now, reading and math scores are going up, with some of the biggest gains in some of our most disadvantaged schools. SAT scores are rising even as more students from more diverse backgrounds are taking the test. And more high school graduates are going to college than ever before, thanks to the biggest expansion in college opportunity since the GI Bill.

One of the most important lessons I learned as Governor was the importance of investing in human capital, so that the people of Arkansas could take advantage of the vast new opportunities of the new economy. That's why we worked so hard to bring high tech and manufacturing jobs to our state, to support job training programs, and expand small and minority business opportunities. And as a result, manufacturing jobs in Arkansas grew at ten times the national average.

In 1992, when I came to office, we knew we had to make the same investments in America's future. Back then, ten million of our fellow citizens were out of work, and most of those with jobs were working harder for less. Interest rates were high. The deficit was $290 billion and rising, imposing a crushing burden on our economy and our children.

Just look how far we've come since then. Right here in Arkansas, the unemployment rate was 6.7 percent in 1993. Today it's 4.2 percent. And nationwide it has dropped from 7.5 percent in 1992 to 4 percent today – the lowest unemployment rate in 30 years. Nationwide, we've created 22 ½ million new jobs, and more than 200,000 of them right here in Arkansas. We've turned decades of deficits into the biggest back-to-back surpluses in history. And we're well on our way to making America debt-free by the end of this decade.

We have the lowest Hispanic and African American unemployment on record, and the highest homeownership ever. And for the first time in decades, wages are rising across all levels. Since 1993, the yearly income of the typical family is up $6,300 and hourly wages are up by more than 9 percent. The rising tide of our economy really is lifting all boats.

When I was Governor, we also made special efforts to lift up our most hard-pressed communities, through efforts like the Arkansas Certified Development Corporation and the Lower Mississippi Delta Development Commission, which helped bring jobs and opportunity to the region. We made great progress then, and, as President, with Secretary Slater's help, we've continued to fight for the economic revitalization of the Delta. In my last budget, we secured more than $20 million to create and fund a new Delta Regional Authority, which will infuse new resources for economic development and assistance from federal agencies to help improve the lives of those living in that region. We also received funding for our New Markets Initiative, which gives businesses the same incentives to invest in our hardest-pressed communities here at home that we give them to invest developing nations around the world.

As Governor, I also learned that the key to improving people's lives was giving them the tools to make the most of their God-given potential. That meant reforming Arkansas' welfare system, to reward work and demand personal responsibility. Those tools also included efforts to improve the health of young children, through pre-natal care, immunization, and expanded health care coverage for low-income families.

We've taken that same approach in Washington. We passed welfare reform, which requires work and rewards it. As a result, we've cut the welfare rolls by nearly 60 percent, and millions have moved from welfare to work. We've also insisted that those who go to work get the job training, child care and transportation they need, and that their children don't go hungry or lose their health insurance when they do. And we've rewarded work by raising the minimum wage and nearly doubling the number of families lifted out of poverty by the Earned Income Tax Credit. Today, we have the lowest poverty rate in two decades.

We also created our Children's Health Insurance Program, which has now provided health coverage to 3.3 million previously uninsured children of low-income parents. Now, for the first time in 12 years, the number of Americans without health insurance is going down. And for the first time in our history, more than 90 percent of our children have been immunized against serious childhood diseases.

Finally, one of the biggest lessons I learned in Arkansas, dating back to my childhood, is that everybody counts, everybody deserves a chance, and we all do better when we help each other. From the crisis in Little Rock in 1957, through the civil rights struggles in the 1960s, racial and ethnic reconciliation have been the driving motivation of my life. Just this Monday, on Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday, I issued a set of challenges to Congress to complete the unfinished business of building One America – from ending racial profiling ... to closing disparities in health ... to giving back the right to vote to ex-offenders, which is something we did here Arkansas ... to ensuring that in every neighborhood, every vote counts, and every vote is counted. I know we can count on you to make sure these challenges are met.

I have spent my lifetime working on these issues, and I will continue to do so after I leave the White House. The focal point of much of that work will be right here in Little Rock. We've always been an incubator for new ideas – and I know that with the Clinton Library, School and Center in Little Rock we will continue to be in the years head. At the Center, we will continue to work for racial, religious and ethnic reconciliation both within and beyond our borders. The new University of Arkansas Clinton School Public Policy will be a place where young people can come and study and, I hope, be inspired to enter public service.

In 1979, the day I was first sworn in as Governor, I said, "The people of Arkansas have two emotions in great abundance: hope and pride ... Without it, there is no such thing as the quality of life. With it, there is nothing we cannot achieve." As I go on to the most important job of all – the job of citizen – I am more convinced than ever that with hope and pride our best days lie ahead.

Thank you and God bless you all.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP 8:30 AM
 Subject: Remarks - Joint Session of AK Legislature

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI 	☒	☐	NASH	☒	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☒	☐	STREETT	☒	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	L. Cutler	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	J. Kearny	☒	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	B. Lindsey	☒	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	N. Hernandez	☒	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐		☒	☐
LANE	☐	☐		☐	☐

REMARKS:

Comments to Gotthelmer 62554

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS TO JOINT SESSION OF ARKANSAS LEGISLATURE
LITTLE ROCK, AR
January 17, 2001

Ack. Sen. Pryor. Rep. Snyder. Rep. Ross. Sec. Slater. Sec. Gober. Admin. James Lee Witt. Mack McLarty (former state legislator); Gloria Cabe (former state legislator). State Rep. Mary Ann Salmon.

In the last days of my presidency, there's no place I'd rather be than here in Arkansas, and here in this august chamber, where it all began for me. I remember the first time I spoke here. It's seems like just yesterday. I was a 28 years old candidate for Congress, and I came here to ask for the support of the House. I lost that election – but I won a passion for public service. And I haven't been able to shake it ever since.

Since then, I have stood in the well of this chamber dozens of times. And each time I do I draw inspiration from the spirit and example of Arkansas heroes who paved the way for me. People like Max Howell and Knox Nelson, who taught me how to get along with the legislative branch. And legends like Senator William Fulbright, Senator Dale Bumpers, and Senator David Pryor. They taught me to aspire to greatness – not only for myself, but for this great state that we all love.

But mostly I came here today to say thank you – to the people who believed in me when no one else did; and who have always stood by me, through storm and sunshine. That list starts with my mother, who stood with me when I was first sworn in as Governor – and who stands with me today in spirit. It's the lessons I learned from her and my grandparents about life, about hope, about racial equality that have the building blocks of my career and my life. I also want to thank my wife Hillary – Senator Clinton – for getting in that old car, driving cross country to join me in this wonderful ride. Some of my fondest memories are of our life together here with Chelsea.

And of course I want to thank the people of Arkansas, for electing me Governor four times – and for sending me to Washington to carry the lessons we learned and the progress we made to the rest of America. Everything I have done as President has its roots here in Arkansas – from education reform ... to economic policy and development ... to welfare and health care ... to building One America.

In my first Inaugural Address as Governor, I said that “We must be mindful that higher quality education will not come from money alone. The money must be but part of a plan that includes better accountability and assessment for teachers and students.” That's what we did here, with investments and innovations in early childhood learning through efforts like our HIPPY program; and higher standards for teachers, students, and schools. And it paid off. Our high school graduation rates were the highest in the region; and, with higher salaries, we began to pay our teachers what they deserved.

We brought that simple strategy to our national education policy, by investing and demanding more from school districts across the nation. We more than doubled investment in our schools; expanded and improved Head Start; provided afterschool and summer school to 1.3 million children; and helped schools hire more highly-trained teachers to reduce class size in the early grades. Now, reading and math scores are going up, with some of the biggest gains in some of our most disadvantaged schools. SAT scores are rising even as more students from more diverse backgrounds are taking the test. And more high school graduates are going to college than ever before, thanks to the biggest expansion in college opportunity since the GI Bill.

One of the most important lessons I learned as Governor was the importance of investing in human capital, so that the people of Arkansas could take advantage of the vast new opportunities of the new economy. That's why we worked so hard to bring high tech and manufacturing jobs to our state, to support job training programs, and expand small and minority business opportunities. And as a result, manufacturing jobs in Arkansas grew at ten times the national average.

In 1992, when I came to office, we knew we had to make the same investments in America's future. Back then, ten million of our fellow citizens were out of work, and most of those with jobs were working harder for less. Interest rates were high. The deficit was $290 billion and rising, imposing a crushing burden on our economy and our children.

Just look how far we've come since then. Right here in Arkansas, the unemployment rate was 6.7 percent in 1993. Today it's 4.2 percent. And nationwide it has dropped from 7.5 percent in 1992 to 4 percent today – the lowest unemployment rate in 30 years. Nationwide, we've created 22 ½ million new jobs, and more than 200,000 of them right here in Arkansas. We've turned decades of deficits into the biggest back-to-back surpluses in history. And we're well on our way to making America debt-free by the end of this decade.

We have the lowest Hispanic and African American unemployment on record, and the highest homeownership ever. And for the first time in decades, wages are rising across all levels. Since 1993, the yearly income of the typical family is up $6,300 and hourly wages are up by more than 9 percent. The rising tide of our economy really is lifting all boats.

When I was Governor, we also made special efforts to lift up our most hard-pressed communities, through efforts like the Arkansas Certified Development Corporation and the Lower Mississippi Delta Development Commission, which helped bring jobs and opportunity to the region. We made great progress then, and, as President, with Secretary Slater's help, we've continued to fight for the economic revitalization of the Delta. In my last budget, we secured more than $20 million to create and fund a new Delta Regional Authority, which will infuse new resources for economic development and assistance from federal agencies to help improve the lives of those living in that region. We also received funding for our New Markets Initiative, which gives businesses the same incentives to invest in our hardest-pressed communities here at home that we give them to invest developing nations around the world.

As Governor, I also learned that the key to improving people's lives was giving them the tools to make the most of their God-given potential. That meant reforming Arkansas' welfare system, to reward work and demand personal responsibility. Those tools also included efforts to improve the health of young children, through pre-natal care, immunization, and expanded health care coverage for low-income families.

We've taken that same approach in Washington. We passed welfare reform, which requires work and rewards it. As a result, we've cut the welfare rolls by nearly 60 percent, and millions have moved from welfare to work. We've also insisted that those who go to work get the job training, child care and transportation they need, and that their children don't go hungry or lose their health insurance when they do. And we've rewarded work by raising the minimum wage and nearly doubling the number of families lifted out of poverty by the Earned Income Tax Credit. Today, we have the lowest poverty rate in two decades.

We also created our Children's Health Insurance Program, which has now provided health coverage to 3.3 million previously uninsured children of low-income parents. Now, for the first time in 12 years, the number of Americans without health insurance is going down. And for the first time in our history, more than 90 percent of our children have been immunized against serious childhood diseases.

Finally, one of the biggest lessons I learned in Arkansas, dating back to my childhood, is that everybody counts, everybody deserves a chance, and we all do better when we help each other. From the crisis in Little Rock in 1957, through the civil rights struggles in the 1960s, racial and ethnic reconciliation have been the driving motivation of my life. Just this Monday, on Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday, I issued a set of challenges to Congress to complete the unfinished business of building One America – from ending racial profiling ... to closing disparities in health ... to giving back the right to vote to ex-offenders, which is something we did here Arkansas ... to ensuring that in every neighborhood, every vote counts, and every vote is counted. I know we can count on you to make sure these challenges are met.

I have spent my lifetime working on these issues, and I will continue to do so after I leave the White House. The focal point of much of that work will be right here in Little Rock. We've always been an incubator for new ideas – and I know that with the Clinton Library, School and Center in Little Rock we will continue to be in the years ahead. At the Center, we will continue to work for racial, religious and ethnic reconciliation both within and beyond our borders. The new University of Arkansas Clinton School Public Policy will be a place where young people can come and study and, I hope, be inspired to enter public service.

In 1979, the day I was first sworn in as Governor, I said, "The people of Arkansas have two emotions in great abundance: hope and pride ... Without it, there is no such thing as the quality of life. With it, there is nothing we cannot achieve." As I go on to the most important job of all – the job of citizen – I am more convinced than ever that with hope and pride our best days lie ahead.

Thank you and God bless you all.

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP 8:30 PM
 Subject: Remarks - Joint Session of AK Legislature

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☒	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☒	☐	STREETT	☒	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	L. Cutler	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	J. Kearney	☒	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	B. Lindsey	☒	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	N. Hemmick	☒	☐
JOHNSON, J.	☒	☐		☒	☐
LANE	☐	☐		☐	☐

REMARKS: Comments to Gotthelmer 62554

RESPONSE:

Office of the Staff Secretary

Draft 1/16/01 7:30pm
Edmonds/Gottheimer

PRESIDENT WILLIAM J. CLINTON
REMARKS TO JOINT SESSION OF ARKANSAS LEGISLATURE
LITTLE ROCK, AR
January 17, 2001

Ack. Sen. Pryor. Rep. Snyder. Rep. Ross. Sec. Slater. Sec. Gober. Admin. James Lee Witt. Mack McLarty (former state legislator); Gloria Cabe (former state legislator). State Rep. Mary Ann Salmon.

In the last days of my presidency, there's no place I'd rather be than here in Arkansas, and here in this august chamber, where it all began for me. I remember the first time I spoke here. It's seems like just yesterday. I was a 28 years old candidate for Congress, and I came here to ask for the support of the House. I lost that election – but I won a passion for public service. And I haven't been able to shake it ever since.

Since then, I have stood in the well of this chamber dozens of times. And each time I do I draw inspiration from the spirit and example of Arkansas heroes who paved the way for me. People like Max Howell and Knox Nelson, who taught me how to get along with the legislative branch. And legends like Senator William Fulbright, Senator Dale Bumpers, and Senator David Pryor. They taught me to aspire to greatness – not only for myself, but for this great state that we all love.

But mostly I came here today to say thank you – to the people who believed in me when no one else did; and who have always stood by me, through storm and sunshine. That list starts with my mother, who stood with me when I was first sworn in as Governor – and who stands with me today in spirit. It's the lessons I learned from her and my grandparents about life, about hope, about racial equality that have the building blocks of my career and my life. I also want to thank my wife Hillary – Senator Clinton – for getting in that old car, driving cross country to join me in this wonderful ride. Some of my fondest memories are of our life together here with Chelsea.

And of course I want to thank the people of Arkansas, for electing me Governor four times – and for sending me to Washington to carry the lessons we learned and the progress we made to the rest of America. Everything I have done as President has its roots here in Arkansas – from education reform ... to economic policy and development ... to welfare and health care ... to building One America.

In my first Inaugural Address as Governor, I said that "We must be mindful that higher quality education will not come from money alone. The money must be but part of a plan that includes better accountability and assessment for teachers and students." That's what we did here, with investments and innovations in early childhood learning through efforts like our HIPPY program; and higher standards for teachers, students, and schools. And it paid off. Our high school graduation rates were the highest in the region; and, with higher salaries, we began to pay our teachers what they deserved.

We brought that simple strategy to our national education policy, by investing and demanding more from school districts across the nation. We more than doubled investment in our schools; expanded and improved Head Start; provided afterschool and summer school to 1.3 million children; and helped schools hire more highly-trained teachers to reduce class size in the early grades. Now, reading and math scores are going up, with some of the biggest gains in some of our most disadvantaged schools. SAT scores are rising even as more students from more diverse backgrounds are taking the test. And more high school graduates are going to college than ever before, thanks to the biggest expansion in college opportunity since the GI Bill.

One of the most important lessons I learned as Governor was the importance of investing in human capital, so that the people of Arkansas could take advantage of the vast new opportunities of the new economy. That's why we worked so hard to bring high tech and manufacturing jobs to our state, to support job training programs, and expand small and minority business opportunities. And as a result, manufacturing jobs in Arkansas grew at ten times the national average.

In 1992, when I came to office, we knew we had to make the same investments in America's future. Back then, ten million of our fellow citizens were out of work, and most of those with jobs were working harder for less. Interest rates were high. The deficit was $290 billion and rising, imposing a crushing burden on our economy and our children.

Just look how far we've come since then. Right here in Arkansas, the unemployment rate was 6.7 percent in 1993. Today it's 4.2 percent. And nationwide it has dropped from 7.5 percent in 1992 to 4 percent today – the lowest unemployment rate in 30 years. Nationwide, we've created 22 ½ million new jobs, and more than 200,000 of them right here in Arkansas. We've turned decades of deficits into the biggest back-to-back surpluses in history. And we're well on our way to making America debt-free by the end of this decade.

We have the lowest Hispanic and African American unemployment on record, and the highest homeownership ever. And for the first time in decades, wages are rising across all levels. Since 1993, the yearly income of the typical family is up $6,300 and hourly wages are up by more than 9 percent. The rising tide of our economy really is lifting all boats.

When I was Governor, we also made special efforts to lift up our most hard-pressed communities, through efforts like the Arkansas Certified Development Corporation and the Lower Mississippi Delta Development Commission, which helped bring jobs and opportunity to the region. We made great progress then, and, as President, with Secretary Slater's help, we've continued to fight for the economic revitalization of the Delta. In my last budget, we secured more than $20 million to create and fund a new Delta Regional Authority, which will infuse new resources for economic development and assistance from federal agencies to help improve the lives of those living in that region. We also received funding for our New Markets Initiative, which gives businesses the same incentives to invest in our hardest-pressed communities here at home that we give them to invest developing nations around the world.

As Governor, I also learned that the key to improving people's lives was giving them the tools to make the most of their God-given potential. That meant reforming Arkansas' welfare system, to reward work and demand personal responsibility. Those tools also included efforts to improve the health of young children, through pre-natal care, immunization, and expanded health care coverage for low-income families.

We've taken that same approach in Washington. We passed welfare reform, which requires work and rewards it. As a result, we've cut the welfare rolls by nearly 60 percent, and millions have moved from welfare to work. We've also insisted that those who go to work get the job training, child care and transportation they need, and that their children don't go hungry or lose their health insurance when they do. And we've rewarded work by raising the minimum wage and nearly doubling the number of families lifted out of poverty by the Earned Income Tax Credit. Today, we have the lowest poverty rate in two decades.

We also created our Children's Health Insurance Program, which has now provided health coverage to 3.3 million previously uninsured children of low-income parents. Now, for the first time in 12 years, the number of Americans without health insurance is going down. And for the first time in our history, more than 90 percent of our children have been immunized against serious childhood diseases.

Finally, one of the biggest lessons I learned in Arkansas, dating back to my childhood, is that everybody counts, everybody deserves a chance, and we all do better when we help each other. From the crisis in Little Rock in 1957, through the civil rights struggles in the 1960s, racial and ethnic reconciliation have been the driving motivation of my life. Just this Monday, on Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday, I issued a set of challenges to Congress to complete the unfinished business of building One America – from ending racial profiling ... to closing disparities in health ... to giving back the right to vote to ex-offenders, which is something we did here Arkansas ... to ensuring that in every neighborhood, every vote counts, and every vote is counted. I know we can count on you to make sure these challenges are met.

I have spent my lifetime working on these issues, and I will continue to do so after I leave the White House. The focal point of much of that work will be right here in Little Rock. We've always been an incubator for new ideas – and I know that with the Clinton Library, School and Center in Little Rock we will continue to be in the years head. At the Center, we will continue to work for racial, religious and ethnic reconciliation both within and beyond our borders. The new University of Arkansas Clinton School Public Policy will be a place where young people can come and study and, I hope, be inspired to enter public service.

In 1979, the day I was first sworn in as Governor, I said, "The people of Arkansas have two emotions in great abundance: hope and pride ... Without it, there is no such thing as the quality of life. With it, there is nothing we cannot achieve." As I go on to the most important job of all – the job of citizen – I am more convinced than ever that with hope and pride our best days lie ahead.

Thank you and God bless you all.

  ERROR TX REPORT ***

TX FUNCTION WAS NOT COMPLETED

TX/RX NO 2519
 CONNECTION TEL 62505
 CONNECTION ID
 ST. TIME 01/16 21:22
 USAGE T 00'00
 PGS. SENT 0
 RESULT NG #018

Document No. _____

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP 8:30 PM

Subject: Remarks - Joint Session of AK Legislature

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☒	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☒	☐	STREETT	☒	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	L. Cutler	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	J. Kearney	☒	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	B. Lindsey	☒	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	N. Hemmrich	☒	☐

  TX REPORT ***

TRANSMISSION OK

TX/RX NO	2521
CONNECTION TEL		62259
CONNECTION ID	OPP WHO
ST. TIME	01/16 21:33
USAGE T	01'40
PGS. SENT	4
RESULT	OK

Document No. _____

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP 8:30 PM
 Subject: Remarks - Joint Session of AK Legislature

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☒	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☒	☐	STREETT	☒	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	L. Cutler	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	J. Kearney	☒	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	B. Linden	☒	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	N. Hemmick	☒	☐

  TX REPORT ***

TRANSMISSION OK

TX/RX NO 2525
 CONNECTION TEL 62889
 CONNECTION ID ADMIN
 ST. TIME 01/16 21:44
 USAGE T 01'40
 PGS. SENT 4
 RESULT OK

Document No. _____

WHITE HOUSE STAFFING MEMORANDUM

Date: 1-16-01 ACTION / CONCURRENCE / COMMENT DUE BY: ASAP 8:30pm
 Subject: Remarks - Joint Session of AK legislature

	ACTION	FYI		ACTION	FYI
VICE PRESIDENT	☒	☐	SIEWERT	☐	☒
PODESTA	☒	☐	MARSHALL	☐	☐
ECHAVESTE	☒	☐	MOORE	☐	☐
RICCHETTI	☒	☐	NASH	☒	☐
LEW	☐	☐	NOLAN	☐	☐
BAILY	☐	☐	REED	☒	☐
BERGER	☐	☐	SPERLING	☒	☐
BLUMENTHAL	☒	☐	STREETT	☒	☐
BRAIN	☐	☐	TRAMONTANO	☒	☐
BURSON	☐	☐	UCELLI	☒	☐
CAHILL	☐	☐	VERVEER	☐	☐
EDMONDS	☒	☐	L. Cutler	☒	☐
FRAMPTON	☐	☐	J. Kearney	☒	☐
IBARRA	☒	☐	B. Lindley	☒	☐
JOHNSON, B.	☐	☐	N. Hernandez	☒	☐

- Green Leaf Senior Center
AmeriCorps Pledge

THE PRESIDENT HAS SEEN

1-17-01

[Note: the AmeriCorps members will recite each line after you.]

I will get things done for America - to make our people safer, smarter, and healthier.

I will bring Americans together to strengthen our communities.

Faced with apathy, I will take action.

Faced with conflict, I will seek common ground.

Faced with adversity, I will persevere.

I will carry this commitment with me this year and beyond.

I am an AmeriCorps Member.

[And I'm going to get things done.]
