PRESIDENT Bill Clinton

1600 Pennsylvania Avenue
Washington, DC 20500-2000

Mr. President,

The Sandusky family has sold over 450 cotton gins and has been in business for 40 years. Located at Manila, Arkansas, we export to Mexico, Greece, Paraguay and have made contacts all over the world.

Africa has been close to my heart for development. Land and human resource is abundant. Cotton can produce economic impact at a grass root level, touching the poorest in areas where aide is needed. However to start, cotton gins must be built first. Diesel power will allow gins to be located places where there is no electricity.

Larry Wallace and Harold Gist are assisting me in representing ARKANSAS in AFRICA. I'm asking if you will help by allowing me to be part of your partnership initiative for Africa. It would be an honor to work with you reaching our common goal.

Respectfully yours,

Timothy Sandusky

Dear Handon:

Thank you for your letter and your wonderful artwork. I appreciate knowing your thoughts, and I'm impressed by your creativity.

I understand that it is difficult for your family when your father needs to be away on duty, but you can be very proud of his service to our country. The United States depends on brave citizens like your father to protect America's interests, and we will do all we can to keep him safe as he defends the peace in Kosovo and around the world.

You and your family are in my prayers.

GUATEMALA

Dear Samuel:

I enjoyed my visit to Guatemala City and I was pleased to learn of your interest in attending the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's camp. I have passed along your request to NASA's staff for review. They should be contacting you shortly.

I encourage you to learn as much about science as you can. We live in a world of astounding complexity, and studying science lets us begin to make sense out of our surroundings -- from the intricacies of molecules to the vast reaches of outer space. Science also affects our daily lives and the decisions we make. Scientists are working to protect the environment, develop cures for diseases, build computers, and engineer new systems for our future. As we move toward an increasingly technology-based 21st century, your generation must prepare for the time when you will be the leaders and doers. A good background in science will help you succeed.

I hope that you will always set high goals for yourself and work hard to reach them. With determination, effort, and imagination, you can achieve your dreams.

Sincerely,

BILL CLINTON

Dear Tony:

I have received your letter of May 12, and it is with regret that I accept your resignation as Co-Chairman of the U.S. Census Monitoring Board.

Our democracy is built on the premise that every person in America counts. You can be proud that your dedicated efforts have helped to ensure that Census 2000 -- the largest undertaking in history to record the demographics of our nation and the diversity of our people -- will be a success and that every American will be counted. Your leadership and professionalism have played an important role in guiding the Monitoring Board over the past year and have moved us closer to our goal of promoting a fair, accurate, and complete census. On behalf of all those who have benefited from your service, I thank you for a job well done.

Best wishes.

Dear Mr. President:

Due to my appointment as General Chairman of Gore 2000, I believe it is appropriate to tender my resignation as Co-Chairman of the bipartisan Census Monitoring Board.

I am very grateful to you for the opportunity to have served as Presidential Co-Chair over the past year. I believe all eight of the Board's members and the staff have made many positive contributions to the Census Bureau's preparations for the 2000 decennial, as I am sure they will do in the future. Equally important, I have found the career professionals at the Census Bureau to be among the most dedicated public servants in all of government, and I know they are committed to achieving the most accurate, fair and complete count possible when the census takes place next year.

Thank you again for appointing me as Presidential Co-Chair.

Dear Mr. President:

I have received from Chris Edley an initial draft of your report in response to the findings of our Advisory Board on Race.

This promises to be one of the most significant statements ever made in this country on this complex subject, and we are all grateful to you for putting it before the American people.

I believe that the release of this report needs to be done in a way that will somehow overcome the skepticism with which the media has responded to so much of the work of our Initiative on Race. One of the most favorably received and reported meetings of our Advisory Board was the one last March in Oxford, Mississippi, where almost a thousand people of all races gathered on the campus at Ole Miss for a highly acclaimed and very constructive dialogue. Dr. Franklin thought it was probably the best meeting that we had all year.

Let me suggest that you give consideration to making this the setting for your presentation of your Report on Race. Coming to Ole Miss to do this would be as dramatic as going to Central High School. I can assure you of a warm and hospitable reception. And besides you are overdue for a visit to Mississippi.

President Bill Clinton
The White House
Washington, D.C.

Dear President Clinton,

I want to thank you for taking the time to greet my family at the Fairmont Hotel. Speaking with you again meant so much to all of us. At one moment I thought "here is the most important man in the world, and he is just being a regular guy, spending some time with my family." I know how privileged my children feel to have your recognition. You do have a unique way of making people feel special.

I hope that we can come to the White House some day soon. It seems like there is always some kind of reason for not coming. Work, elderly parents and young children will always fill up a mother's calendar! Nevertheless, we hope to visit before the end of this year. Once again, thank you for inviting Isaac and Ben to the Oval office.

Joe told me that you like the lightweight leather jacket which was waiting for you at the hotel. Enjoy wearing it. Ofcourse, this was made here at Golden Bear. Unfortunately, we have had to take some of our production to China. We could no longer compete with other importers/manufacturers who produce overseas. This is a very big problem for American manufacturers. The imported items are priced so low that the enduser does not seem to care about where and how it was made. This really saddens me. After twenty-seven years of working at Golden Bear, I have never experienced such a decline sales due to offshore competition. Perhaps, this to shall pass.

We wish you all the best in all of your endeavors.

Sincerely,

Shirley Zisman

I was honored to welcome you and the other tribal leaders to the White House in May, and I'm glad we had the opportunity to discuss some of the serious challenges facing the Indian Tribes of the Northern High Plains. It's important that I know the views of the tribal leaders, and I've asked my staff to carefully examine the issues that were raised.

As we continue working to fulfill our country's promise to all its people, I'm glad to know I can count on your help.

SOVEREIGN TRIBAL NATIONS SUPPORT OF PRESIDENT CLINTON'S POLICY ON GENOCIDE

*By the Great Plains & Rocky Mountain
Tribal Leaders*

A Proclamation

The United States has traditionally been the haven for oppressed people of the world. At the gateway to our country stands the Statue of Liberty with the inscription - give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free . . .

The United States is one of the wealthiest countries in the world and reflects diverse populations and cultures from all over the world.

Many people who are citizens of the United States experience racism here at home.

The history of our people over the past 200 years has been a struggle to survive and retain our various cultures. We have survived "discovery", diseases, indifference, racism, religion, reservations, relocation, termination and a veiled ethnic cleansing through the federal program of assimilation.

As sovereign tribal nations, our people know first hand the horrors of ethnic cleansing and have experienced and survived an ethnic cleansing that is still part of our lives today.

President Clinton, by his recognition of the people of Kosovo and his policy against the genocide being perpetuated by the government of Yugoslavia has taken a strong stand against ethnic cleansing.

NOW, THEREFORE, WE THE GREAT PLAINS AND ROCKY MOUNTAIN TRIBAL LEADERS, do hereby proclaim our support of President Clinton and his policy against the genocide being perpetuated toward the people of Kosovo.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, we set our hands this 12th day of May in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety nine.

Signed:

Sisseton - Mahpeton Sioux Tribe

This small prayer

Oh Great Spirit also you who are Our Father always forever you are always looking down upon us, hear me as I send my voice.

To you I am making my small prayer. For your helper, your servant, your friend Bill Clinton, who is also pitiful, who is also our president. You will bestow blessings of peace, health, understanding, upon him, also to his family, friends relatives and to his daughter and his wife.

Upon this earth, your people everywhere especially it is your Dakota (Indian) people who are pitiful and poor. It is our President who watches and takes care of us. Oh Great Spirit, Our Father, continue to help him. Father it is you who have created all of us.

Before you, we are also pitiful, poor in spirit. We as Leaders of Indian Nations have come way over here, to a big town in the East. (Washington D.C.) With heart felt thoughts, prayers, we think of how the President will help take care of a pitiful, poor Dakota (Indian). How will he do this? Oh Great Spirit, Our Father, It is through you alone, who makes everything possible for us.

To the Four Directions, I send my voice to the heavens and the earth, I respect you always take care of us.

For this is me.

Dear Linda:

Thank you for writing regarding the 36-month time limitation for Medicare coverage of immunosuppressive medications. I'm sorry I was unable to respond sooner.

I have asked my health care team to review the possibility of extending Medicare coverage for immunosuppressive drugs beyond the current three-year limit. I am aware of the difficulties individuals with preexisting conditions face in finding affordable coverage, and I do not believe that people should be forced to choose between devoting their income to offsetting the costs of needed medication and leaving their jobs in order to become eligible for Medicaid. I am working to address this situation and have requested that the Department of Health and Human Services determine the feasibility of and the cost associated with expanding coverage in this area. I am also reviewing new options to include a prescription drug benefit for all Medicare recipients.

As we continue our efforts to ensure that our nation does not turn its back on the health and well-being of our citizens, I'm glad to know I can count on your help.

Sincerely, BILL CLINTON

Dear President Clinton:

As a volunteer with the National Kidney Foundation of Arkansas I would like to inform you of a critical public policy initiative that I hope your administration will consider supporting. I'm asking for the administration to support legislation that would eliminate the 36-month time limitation for Medicare coverage of immunosuppressive (anti-rejection) medications for certain transplant recipients.

In 1986 Congress directed Medicare to cover anti-rejection medications for the first year post-transplant. The benefit was extended to a three-year period by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993. The Balanced Budget Act of 1997 calls for a study by the National Academy of Sciences of the cost/benefit of eliminating any time limitation for coverage of immunosuppressive drugs for transplant patients.

For transplant recipients who do not have private health insurance benefits that cover immunosuppressive drugs, paying for the medications can be very difficult when Medicare benefits for these drugs terminate. The average annual cost of these medications is more than $11,000. Many transplant recipients are forced to ration their immunosuppressive medications, increasing the risk of organ rejection. Many dialysis patients do not even consider having a kidney transplant because of their inability to pay for their immunosuppressive medications after three years.

Medicare covers the cost of a transplant and it does not make sense to risk that healthcare investment. First year expenses associated with a kidney transplant average more than $100,000 including follow-up care. Eliminating the time limitation for immunosuppressive coverage is a protection of Medicare's investment.

For many patients with irreversible kidney failure (End Stage Renal Disease or ESRD), transplantation is the treatment option of choice. Transplant recipients do not have the burden of dialyzing three times a week and have less morbidity than dialysis patients. Furthermore, while the transplant operation itself is expensive, in the long run a successful transplant is less costly than recurring dialysis treatments. Moreover, transplant recipients are more likely to be employed taxpayers than their dialysis counterparts. (Almost 50% of kidney transplant recipients are working full time, three years after they receive a kidney transplant.) Finally, since extending coverage could reduce the number of patients who need a second transplant, the supply of organs available for a first transplant will be increased and potential living organ donors may be more likely to if they know their gift will be preserved.

Thank you for your support and please contact me at 501-336-1592 if you have any questions.

Sincerely,

Linda S. Tyler

ADDRESS

EDDIE ALBERT
51st Annual Convention
NATIONAL FARMERS UNION
San Diego, California
March 1, 1983

There was once a strong farm policy. It developed during the other Depression -- the thirties.

A lot of thought went on to figure out what went wrong -- why, how, when, and where.

Some of the thinkers wanted to prevent another depression. Others had in mind making money out of it.

There were some good farm programs proposed, but there were some strong forces lined up opposing their adoption.

Although in 1941 the depression still continued, there was a war coming on, and there were a few intelligent Congressmen who realized that if we were to win this war, we must have a strong economic base.

Early in 1942, the Banking and Currency Committee adopted the concept of "Parity." Congress then passed the Steagall Amendment, which provided for 100 percent of parity for all raw materials, and the amendment was attached to the "Defense Act of WW II."

Hitler had already done the same thing. Germany had been destitute and, gearing up for war, Hitler established a fair price floor for all raw materials. Within a year, Germany was on the road to recovery.

Our recovery started in 1942, the year of the Steagall Amendment, but the war got the credit.

From 1943 to 1952, we had the Stearns Amendment and economic stability. Farm raw materials were supported at 100 percent of parity. It provided a steady flow of earned income to buy government bonds to finance the war and post-war conversion to peacetime.

There was a sound dollar, no inflation.

There was a solvent commercial banking system, low interest.

There was approximate full employment.

Now, these circumstances didn't just evolve as the natural consequences of "supply side" economics or "demand side" economics. They evolved as the result of some careful thought by some very intelligent people which resulted in laws and regulations enacted by Congress and certain wartime powers delegated to the President of the United States.

They included the Stearns Amendment, wage and price controls, the temporary abandonment of the gold standard, and other measures, plus the dedication of a proud and loyal citizenry determined to win the war and also to win the peace. And they worked!

However, as I said, some folks didn't like this. They didn't like restriction on their actions, their investment return, the growing political power of farmers and their friendship with labor. That bothered them.

They are powerful people, well organized.

After the war, in 1952, (the Stearns Amendment) was allowed to expire, after ten years of economic stability.

In 1953, the "Farm Act" of 1953 took its place with "sliding parity, 60 to 90 percent." The bad guys won. You and I know which of those figures its going to "slide" toward.

That was their first important step.

02/27/1955 04.04 3127311700 WILLIE NELSON 200

What these folks had decided was they had to have ownership of the land. That would eliminate government interference and they knew something about making money during shortages.

The shortages in the 20's and 30's will be mainly in food. Ownership of the land is where the power lies, political and dollar power. Land is collateral. Ownership controls wages, people, production, marketing, reserves, shortages, surpluses. Ask the South American farmers. This has been true for centuries.

So, their goal, very clearly, was to get hold of the land, and they decided to do this by moving 2 million farmers off the land into the cities and replace them with a small number of superfarms, corporate-owned, a few large family-managed operations, and several million small farms, financed primarily by off-farm income.

These plans were spelled out in literally dozens of reports, policy recommendations, and studies that are available in almost any land-grant college library, or the Library of Congress.

And so, the Committee for Economic Development was born. Let me give you some actual quotes from its papers. Its approach was:

"removal of excess resources (farmers) to be utilized in other sectors of the economy, to generate capital returns on investments." (Excess resources--farmers--were measured by returns on investment).

"The movement of people has not been fast enough to take full advantage of the opportunities that improving farm technologies, thus increasing capital, create." (You are not moving fast enough, they have a plan).

Their plan, which was called "The Adaptive Approach," was almost identical with Russia's first five-year plan," 28-33. We, too, were to move millions of farmers and ranchers into the cities for the advantage of industry. Never mind the city problems.

"The Adaptive Approach utilizes positive government action to facilitate and promote the movement of labor and capital where they will be most productive and will earn the most income."

"The support of prices has delayed the movement out of agriculture."

And, how about this?

"If the farm labor force were to be, five years hence, no more than two-thirds as large as its present size of approximately 5.5 millions, the program would involve moving off the farm about two million of the present labor force, plus a number equal to a large part of the new entrants, who would otherwise join the farm labor force in the five years."

There go your kids.

They recommend:

"...the price supports for wheat, cotton, rice, feed grains, and related crops, now under price supports, be reduced immediately." (3 cents a lb. on rice, 22 cents a lb. on cotton). Never mind the market, the demand, your costs.

"The importance of such price adjustments would discourage further commitments of new productive resources to those crops unless it appeared profitable at lower prices." Profitable at lower prices? Whose?

The corporate presidents and academics who make up the CERD recommended the elimination of one-third of the farm population within five years by enforcing low parity pricing. As they stated, the primary benefits of their recommendations would be:

1. Increased return on corporate investment in agriculture.
2. Over two million farmers and families entering the urban labor pool, which would tend to depress wages.
3. Lower prices of agricultural products which would both increase foreign trade and provide cheaper raw materials for domestic food and fiber processors.

4. "...invest in projects that break up village life by drawing people to centers of employment away from the village... because village life is a major source of opposition to change."

"Where there are religious obstacles to modern economic progress, the religion may have to be taken less seriously or its character altered."

Eight years later, they issued a report:

"The desired result -- one-third fewer farmers -- was achieved."

Two million farmers were moved off their family farms--by suppressing supports--were moved into the cities to look for employment, housing, depress labor's wages, bankrupt some cities, bankrupt their rural towns and communities, close their schools, over-crowd the city schools, hospitals. Over 200 years to build the greatest nation in human history, and in only five years, shattering our delicate economic balance by tampering with farm prices and bringing on our greatest and most painful and dangerous depression.

Back to the report --

Their evaluation was that their analysis and recommendations were fundamentally correct and that the government had faithfully implemented their recommended policies.

"We do not mean to overlook the poverty that still persists among many small farmers and other rural Americans."

One-third of U.S. families are rural, and 40 percent of these live in poverty.

"Farmers who can neither attain a decent standard of living nor find an adequate non-farm job represent a strong case for direct income support. ...Assistance to low-income farmers should be contingent, not upon farm production or a presumption that low farm prices are the cause of an adequate income, but upon need. We believe...development of adequate federal welfare programs." Not a fair price for production, but welfare.

02/27/1955 84.84 3127511788 WILHELM REESON 200

Although the strategies and tactics of the CED are carefully spelled out, it is never hinted until the very end what their underlying goals and motivations might be. "A recurrence of agricultural instability" must be kept in mind so as to maintain "an atmosphere relatively free of the political pressures from farmers in the past."

Minimizing farmers' power was crucial to the corporations for several reasons.

Farmers had historically aligned themselves with trade unions and urban workers, including the formation of Farmer-Labor parties, which held political power in a dozen Midwest and Southwest states. The men who developed these specific programs to accomplish the aims of lenders and large corporations were mostly hired economists who were then placed in the necessary positions of power within the government (USDA), to bring into being their recommended programs.

Now, do you still believe that your problems result from what the economists call "supply and demand" and that nothing can be done about the surplus but lower the price even further?

Why did I stress all raw materials, and especially farm income? Is there something different, something we haven't discussed?

Let me go back for a moment to those ten successful, stable years of parity, from '43 to '52, and the Steagall Amendment.

What did we learn from those ten years? What lessons?

A economist named Kuznets, later a Nobel Prize winner, noticed that there seemed to be six most important sectors that dominated our economy. They were:

1. Farm income
2. Wages
3. Interest income
4. Small businesses and professionals
5. Rentals
6. Corporations

Hubert Humphrey expressed it even shorter: "A 3-legged stool -- capital, raw materials, and labor. You change any one of those three legs and the stool falls over." He was talking of balance.

Go back to the six sectors. Kennedy states that to provide a healthy economy, they, too, must exist in a reasonably precise balance in relations to our national income. For example, (1) farm income, which they intended to suppress, should share in about six to 8 percent of our national income; (2) wages, labor, etc. about 46 or 47 percent; (3) interest income 1.2 percent; (4) small business 10.5 percent; (5) rents 3.8 percent; (6) corporations 12.6 percent.

Those were roughly the shares of those sectors of our national income during our prosperous base period, '43-'52.

For example, 40 years of statistics show that (1) if farm income falls one percent, then unemployment for labor rises one percent; and (2) if farm income rises one percent, then unemployment falls one percent. All six sectors are connected. Touch one, and you affect the other five.

They intended to suppress farm income to achieve their plan. Now, to tamper with farm income, raw materials, is foolish and dangerous.

Unlike the other five sectors, farm products are "raw materials." Raw materials--grain, oil, minerals, coal, timber, fish, etc., etc.--they are the base of our economy, the foundation. When they are harvested, dug up, cut down, whatever, they are new wealth for our nation, something that did not exist before. In the case of farm products, they are new every year, are perishable, non-storable, are consumed every year--unlike metals, for example--and farm products are 70 percent of all our raw materials.

I'm indebted for this information, by the way, to the Raw Materials National Council and the National Organization of Raw Materials. ...

Back to raw materials--grain, oil, iron ore, coal, minerals, cotton, wool, tobacco, are raw materials.

As I said, new raw materials are the base of our new growth each year, our prosperity. A factory doesn't start until some fellow drives up in a truck, up to the factory door, unloads some raw materials, gets a receipt, and drives off.

Only then can the processing start. Labor takes over. Oil is turned into gasoline, plastics, fertilizer, energy. Grain is turned into bread and Twinkies. Iron ore into steel, used into cars, planes, skyscrapers, concrete into highways and all the prosperity wages for consumers. And let us not forget that although nothing happens until the truck empties its load of raw materials at the factory, nothing happens to the raw materials until labor gets her or his hands on it and starts the raw materials up the processing ladder.

The raw materials rise in value as they are improved, worked upon, transformed, creating jobs for labor, wages turning workers into consumers with money in their pockets, enabling them to buy the farmer's produce and surplus, and enabling the farmer to have money to buy industry's production of tools, trucks, combines, etc.

Now, what is of equal importance and cannot be exaggerated, these raw materials must have a price, not only a fair price to the producer, but a correct price, to carry out that balance correctly--neither too high nor too low.

By the time those raw materials reach the top of the processing ladder, those base price dollars for the raw materials will multiply themselves five times, all the way up to contribute five to one to our nation's annual income, and that raw material processing and national income figure represents our strength, our health, our wealth, our security, our livelihood, our democracy, our freedom, our civilization.

Another bit of good news. Raw materials multiply five-to-one. But, agricultural raw materials multiply seven-to-one.

This is known as the "multiplier effect." It is also known as the lever. I'll tell you why.

02/27/1955 84.84 5127511788 WILHELM REESON 100

Let's say the base price is $3 a bushel. Multiply that by 7. That's $21. But, you multiply $21 by 12 billion bushels and you get $252 billion.

That's serious money, but the lever works both ways.

Suppose the price is suppressed to $2. Two times 7 is only 14, not 21. Fourteen times 12 billion bushels equals $168 billion. By dropping the farm price $1, we have robbed the national income, jobs, wages, and consumption by $84 billion in one harvest.

Farm production is 70 percent of all raw materials and, unlike the other five sectors of the economy, multiplies itself seven-to-one. You can't short-change a lever like this without causing a depression. And, don't forget, farmers have been short-changed in the past 30 years--$2, $3, $4 a bushel. Using the average figures from our '43-'52 base as a fair yardstick, and noting that the farm sector's 6.6 percent share of the national income in '43-'52 was pushed downward for 30 years until today it is no longer 6.6 percent but 8/10th of one percent, multiply that loss per bushel times seven times 12 billion bushels, times 30 years, and you are talking very serious money, like around $5 trillion--maybe more--lost forever to the people of the U.S.

Imagine--$5 trillion held back from the economic processing ladder, held back from creating jobs, wages, construction, consumption taxes, our world leadership actually--because a few clever fellows decided they would rip off the farmers.

If you start chopping away at the roots of a tree, you have no right to be surprised when you see the leaves and branches wither and die. And, if the leaves die, the roots are not fed and must die.

They don't realize that 12 million workers are idle, out of jobs, because the farmer has not been getting enough money to buy the industrial tools those workers had been making. The plants were closed down and workers were put out on the street. Idle. Now the shoe is on the other foot. Those 12 million idle, hungry American workers have no money to buy the farmer's food--his grain, bread, cereals, corn, beef--so the farmer has a surplus.

Debt. Easy credit. Land is going up. Remember "Get Big or Get Out? Remember Butz? Open up marginal land. Seventy million acres. Plant fence row to fence row right up to the doorstep. Debt.

After 30 years of this, our public and private debt is over $6 trillion. Who knows? Some say over $11 trillion. What's the annual interest on that? How, who will pay it? Our national deficit this year is around $200 billion, and growing. And next year, worse!

Two hundred billion dollars is your farm loan this year. Interest, say $20 billion. But did I hear correctly? Your income is around $19 billion?

Six trillion; 11 trillion. Nobody seems to know. A debt has to be paid and will be paid, either by the borrowers, or the lenders, or the taxpayers.

Who pays it? My new granddaughter? Yours? Our grandchildren? Our great, great, great grandchildren? How?

What have we done with this last great experiment in democracy? Is it over?

What have we done with this rich continent that God gave us, free? These beautiful United States of America. What have we done?

What are we going to do?

Thank you.

Dear Gray:

Congratulations on the results of the recent special session of the California State Legislature and on signing into law your four initiatives to reform the California public education system. This is a significant step toward increasing accountability in our schools, improving our children's reading abilities, maintaining high standards for our teachers, and ensuring that all high school graduates earn their diplomas. I applaud your commitment to improving schools and increasing educational opportunity for all of California's children.

Secretary Riley, the Vice President, and I look forward to working with you as we continue our efforts to promote excellence in education. Congratulations on a great start as Governor and best wishes for much continued success.

Warm greetings to everyone gathered in Oneonta, New York, for the opening and dedication ceremony of the National Soccer Museum and Hall of Fame.

Soccer has grown into one of our nation's best-loved sports. Whether played in backyards, school yards, or state-of-the-art arenas, it is a dynamic game that highlights both individual excellence and the importance of teamwork. With its rich history and broad international following, soccer has linked our nation to the world and has brought Americans together across barriers of race, age, and culture.

The National Soccer Museum and Hall of Fame will serve as a fitting tribute to the history of soccer in America and to the athletes who have triumphed in the sport. With a wide array of action-oriented exhibits, it will entertain visitors while increasing their interest in and knowledge about the sport.

I commend all those whose vision and hard work have brought this new facility to reality, and Hillary joins me in extending best wishes for a wonderful ceremony and every success in the years to come.

Dear Mr. President and First Lady:

I would like to thank you for selecting me to serve on your White House Delegation to last year's World Cup in France. It was an honor and an experience I will never forget.

At that time our museum building was still a dream. However, with the aid of an extremely dedicated team, we raised the funds and broke ground in November. On June 12th, one week before the Women's World Cup kicks off in the USA, we officially open and dedicate the National Soccer Museum and Hall of Fame in Oneonta, NY. We invite you to be our guests of honor to cut the ribbon and officially open the museum. The dedication is at 2pm.

We have invested $7.5 million to date in our soccer campus which is a ten year, $30 million project. The museum facility is designed to pay homage to the little known yet exciting history of soccer in the USA, educate and engage America's youth. The National Soccer Hall of Fame has been called a "diamond" for New York State. I have enclosed background information. We will take care of your needs, transportation (Albany is only 65 minutes away, Cooperstown 25 minutes), meals and/or accommodations.

It is going to be a major event (more so with your presence) and an exciting day. We hope you will be able to accept this invitation to be our guests of honor.

Dear Phillip:

It was great to speak to you today. I was initially embarrassed, then delighted that I was getting a soccer update from you. It was a sign of progress for the sport! (I was in isolation with my family on Chincoteague Island, VA trying to get away from everything for a few days. Apparently I succeeded).

As I mentioned we broke ground in November and on June 12th we officially open the first National Soccer Museum and Hall of Fame - a $5.5 million project. It is going to be an exciting day and we hope you will join us. You will receive an "official" invitation soon.

I also appreciate your passing on the enclosed invitation to the first family. I realize that the President has a speaking engagement on June 12th but hope that Mrs. Clinton's schedule may allow her to be our guest of honor and cut the ribbon (maybe kick the ball)!

Thanks again. If you are able to make the dedication or can visit anytime, please know that you and your family are my personal guests and that you must let me know when you are coming.

Sincerely,

Will Lunn

Thank you for allowing Mrs. Theola Poole to give you a copy of my book, and for spending your valuable time to consider it. I hope you can find time between your daily responsibilities to scan the material at your earliest convenience. The purpose of this letter is to suggest a few reasons why the book can be of value to you and many other Americans. B

First, God's Love Bank is not just a book, it is a psycho-spiritual framework for thinking, a program for living, and a curriculum for teaching people how to live with New Self-Love and New Self-Purpose. In short, God's Love Bank is a goal oriented, systematic program for individuals, families, churches, businesses, and organizations. It teaches people how to value the everwidening realization of the dignity and worth of every individual, not only in theory, but also in fact, not only in premise, but also in practice.

Second, God's Love Bank is a generic, faith based, character building, educational curriculum which can work wonderfully with the Work Opportunity And Personal Responsibility Act of 1996. [Please see brochure about Love Bank Program and Curriculum] I believe the Love Bank curriculum can help eradicate many of the multi-generational problems which have plagued the soul of Americans in particular, and people in general, for years. It helps people take personal responsibility for such problems as homelessness, drug and alcohol abuse, family violence, divorce, poverty, racism, quality education, education in American schools, valuing the dignity and worth of every individual, and other challenges and struggles of the human heart and soul.

Third, God's Love Bank is a fresh, but not new approach to old problems! To quote you Sir, in one of the best speeches I've ever heard you give, though I cannot recall the exact occasion, but I took notes so I remember your points quite vividly, " The challenges of our past remains the challenges of our future. Problems which once seemed to powerful to embark, now bend to our consistent efforts of work done in faith, hope, and love. As time changes, we have had to change, as time continues to change, we must continue to change." I guess what I am trying to say, Mr. President, is that God's Love Bank can be a powerful tool in helping to bring about change and to cope with the inevitable change you have identified.

Thank you so much for taking the time to read God's Love Bank, especially with the busy schedule of the President of United States. I would like very much to know what you think about it. Please write me or call me and let me know what you think. May God continue to fulfill His purpose in your life and in the life of your wonderful family!

Dear Mr. President:

As I plan to depart the Administration next month, I thought it would be an appropriate time to thank you for the opportunity to serve our country over the past six and one-half years. Indeed, I feel privileged to have worked for you and to have done my best to make a positive contribution to the vitally important work of the Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS).

As you may recall, we first met in 1990 in the Capitol Office of former Senator David Pryor, for whom I then served as legal counsel. As always, Senator Pryor was prescient: at the time, he told me you would be president someday.

Needless to say, in the summer of 1991, I was thrilled to have the opportunity to prepare memoranda on organizing campaign issues around the theme of "Reclaiming the American Dream" for Frank Greer and other advisors working on your presidential exploratory efforts. This led to my taking leave from Senator Pryor's office in the fall to gather and analyze targeting data for David Wilhelm and the staff he was assembling in Little Rock.

In January 1992, I was asked to move to Arkansas and began working with Craig Smith and Michael Whouley to oversee our field operations in the primary states. For the general election, I returned to Washington where I joined Rahm Emanuel and Harold Ickes at the Democratic National Committee and helped manage and fund State coordinated campaigns.

By election night in 1992, I shared with so many others who worked for you on that amazing campaign a deep personal feeling of accomplishment and pride, as well as the powerful sense of possibility that your victory held for the country.

As exciting as the 1992 campaign turned out to be, nothing has compared with the extraordinary opportunity I have had to participate in the policymaking process under Donna Shalala's leadership at DHHS. I believe Secretary Shalala has brought incomparable intellect, integrity, and savvy to managing a huge, sometimes unwieldy, public agency. Through the development of the Administration's health and welfare reform proposals, the budget battles of 1995-1996, and particularly the Department's review of States' Medicaid and AFDC waiver applications, my four years as Director of Intergovernmental Affairs at HHS gave me an exceptional vantage point from which to observe and contribute to the development of low-income health and welfare policies. For the last two years, I have served as the Principal Deputy Assistant Secretary for Children and Families and have had the chance to manage a number of crucial programs serving poor families with children, including child support enforcement, community action, individual development accounts, refugee resettlement and TANF.

As I look back at almost eight years of working for you, I am very proud of the Administration's overall legacy for our country. Your two election victories have shown that a Democratic message and a Democratic governing philosophy can reshape the nation's debate on important public policy issues. Your success at the polls also made it possible to articulate publicly the case that government can have a positive impact on people's lives, offering a powerful rejoinder to the "government is the problem" philosophy that has dominated our national dialogue since 1980.

For low-income Americans, which are the focus of HHS programs, the booming economy and Administration policies have made a real difference in many families' lives. Moreover, many of the changes in low-income programs championed by this Administration, from welfare reform and improved child support enforcement to the expanded earned income tax credit and broader health coverage for children, hold out the promise of even greater opportunities to impact positively poor people's lives for years to come.

In closing, let me say again how honored I have been to serve you and this Administration. It has been a special opportunity to make a contribution to our country and to programs I care deeply about. For this, I will always be grateful.

Sincerely yours,

Warm greetings to everyone gathered in our nation's capital for the annual awards dinner of the Center for the Study of the Presidency. I am delighted to join you in paying tribute to two exceptional Americans -- former Senate Majority Leader and White House Chief of Staff Howard Baker, and my good friend and outstanding Secretary of the Treasury Bob Rubin -- as they are honored with the 1999 Distinguished Public Service Award. This award is a fitting recognition of their extraordinary contributions to the life of our nation.

At Gettysburg in 1863, President Abraham Lincoln described ours as a "government of the people, by the people, for the people." All Americans share the gift of democracy, but with this gift comes great responsibility -- to understand our form of government, to take an interest in the affairs of our nation, and to actively participate in the democratic process.

For more than three decades, the Center for the Study of the Presidency has played a vital leadership role in educating young Americans about the responsibilities of citizenship in a democracy. Through books, lectures, symposia, and research materials, you have reached out to young people across our nation, teaching them about the history of the Presidency and about the people, issues, and institutions that have shaped our national experience. I thank you for inspiring a new generation of Americans to make their own contributions to the life and future of our democracy.

Best wishes to all for a memorable evening and continued success in the years to come.

Dear Betty,

I am very happy to inform you that the Board of Directors of the Center for the Study of the Presidency has awarded the 1999 Distinguished Public Service Award to Treasury Secretary Robert E. Rubin. Further, Secretary Rubin has agreed to accept it in person at our Annual Awards Dinner on June 8, 1999 at the Willard Hotel.

Needless to say, we couldn't be more delighted. What a wonderful job he has done for this country, and for the world.

Secretary Rubin joins a very distinguished list of previous recipients, including Vice President Gore, Alan Greenspan, Mack McLarty, Senator Moynihan, General Shalikashvili and Colin Powell.

To make this award to Secretary Rubin a very special and memorable occasion, wouldn't it be a great tribute to his outstanding service to this country, if the President himself were able to present the award? It would be a most deserved honor for the Secretary, but it would also offer the President a unique opportunity to address an appreciative audience of more than 200 leading Presidential scholars from universities around the country.

Is this enough information for you to give us a preliminary reading of the President's interest and potential availability? Knowing how difficult it is to commit the President in advance, we had thought of perhaps making his attendance a total surprise for the Secretary - and, of course, for everyone in the audience.

As always, Betty, I look forward to hearing from you. I also look forward to an opportunity, one of these days, to show you around our new offices.

Warm regards,

Sincerely,

Gilbert A. Robinson

Dear Ginny:

I have received your letter of May 25, and it is with deep regret that I accept your resignation as Assistant to the President for Management and Administration.

You have my sincere thanks for your many contributions to my Administration and our nation. Both as Associate Deputy Secretary of Labor and in your current capacity, you have set a standard of excellence and hard work that are an inspiration to those around you. Whether managing budgets, overseeing facilities, or resolving personnel and security issues, you have worked with energy and commitment to ensure that the Executive Office of the President meets the highest standards of effectiveness and efficiency.

I am also grateful for your kind words regarding my Administration's efforts to combat discrimination against gays and lesbians. With your help and the help of Americans across our country, we have begun to bridge the divides among our people and focus more on what unites us than on what divides us. I'm glad to know that you will continue your important work on behalf of gay and lesbian Americans as the first Virginia Apuzzo Chair for Leadership in Public Policy at the Policy Institute of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force.

Hillary joins me in wishing you and Barbara every happiness and continued success.

Dear Mr. President,

It is with great appreciation for the opportunity to help you serve the American people, mixed with a touch of sadness, that I respectfully submit my resignation as Assistant to the President for Management and Administration.

I have been assisted in my work by a very talented staff. They are professionals who are dedicated to continuing a high level of service to your Presidency. I commend them to you for their outstanding performance.

Twelve years ago, my place was outside the White House fence, being led away by police as I protested an Administration that was willfully indifferent to the lives and deaths of hundreds of thousands of Americans. You not only provided a place inside the White House for me, but you sent an important message to all those Americans who, like me, were eager to know that their talent and energy was wanted by, and belonged to, an America that we share as fellow citizens. This is a message that bears repeating, since it continues to compete against the shrillness of those who would exclude lesbian and gay Americans from full citizenship and full participation.

For every Matthew Shepherd whose name we have come to know, there are hundreds whose names we never knew. For every job opportunity such as the one you extended to me, there are thousands of jobs where lesbian and gay workers are on perpetual parole, subject to the whim of prejudice that could revoke their right to employment at any time.

Beyond the quality of life, your Administration came into office at a critical time for the fact of life itself. Within the lesbian and gay community, we know the tremendous cost of brothers and sisters lost in a war that past Administrations refused to fight. The majority of Americans will never know what the cost has been to this nation. I believe that, because of those you knew and lost, such as Dan Bradley, this is a lesson that you learned firsthand.

Honorable William J. Clinton

Page Two

You are the first President to ever recognize that these issues are important, and that we need to set a national goal to conquer the last frontier of space---the space between what we are as a nation, and what we must summon ourselves to become as a people.

I honor you for the many accomplishments of your Administration. However, I am most deeply moved by the simple fact that when we speak, you have tried to hear. Beyond that, in many cases, you have given voice to the effort to bridge differences.

For my part, I have tried to bring to the Administration, on behalf of my community, the understanding that there are not lesbian and gay "issues," but lesbian and gay Americans. The concerns that we bring to government do not represent a laundry list of political markers, but rather the reality of our lives and the manner in which government affects our lives. You have given us the opportunity to participate in the decisions that impact our lives. We are now engaged in a process that can and must continue.

Please accept my deepest appreciation for the privilege of serving the American people and being a part of your Administration. I am, and will remain, a steady friend to you and to the goals that we share.

Sincerely,

Dear Mr. President:

'99 MAR 23 PM 4:25

Blanche and I moved from Fort Smith four years ago and retired in Diamond City on Bull Shoals Lake. My father and Judge John Miller introduced me to this area over fifty years ago and I have loved fishing here since that time. This was one of the top fishing lakes in the world at one time.

The building of Table Rock Lake was very detrimental to our lake. Table Rock is an earthen dam and homes are built close to the lake, therefore, the water levels of Table Rock can not vary greatly. The level of Bull Shoals will fluctuate about 30 to 40 feet per year. The greatest of this variance seems to occur during spawning season, thus creating a shortage of fish, primarily Crappie.

I approached the Corps of Engineers and the Arkansas Game and Fish Commission in mid-summer last year, requesting Crappie Hatcheries to be built on Bull Shoals and Norfolk Lakes. The agencies were very cooperative. They found land that the public would donate and gave estimated costs for the project in our area. The Corps advised they would not have funding for this project until 2001. Several of the citizens wrote their congressman for help and received discouraging letters in return. Evidently he felt that the "Judicial persecution" was more important than serving his constituents. I feel that if Dale had not retired, he would have helped.

As a result of the above, our city has almost become a disaster area. Some of our citizens encouraged me to run for Mayor (non-paying job). I was elected and took office January 1, and I believe I can make a difference. But naturally, I need your help. Our local grocery store, bank, laundrymat, one restaurant and our only Marine service has closed because of the lack of business. This community of retired people evolved because of the excellent fishing on this lake.

Mr. B. J. McCoy, of HUD in Little Rock, helped us obtain a Section 8 Grant for 14 units of elderly housing for which we are most grateful. Construction on this will begin next week.

We are also in need of any available funding for water, streets, sewer and youth programs. Please advise me of any agencies or persons to contact to get help for our community. I am willing to come to Washington to meet with you or any one that you think advisable.

Blanche and I are very pleased with your accomplishments in office and will certainly continue our support.

Sincerely,

In the Fall of 1997 I made a presentation on this topic to the Highlands Forum. You can find my presentation slides at:

Question: If I am powering my life with electricity produced by fuel cells I own, in my basement and in my car, and/or with additional power I am buying from my neighbors, should I be asked to pay utility taxes? Should the local utility pay taxes on the power it buys from me?

What lies on the other side of the imagination bottle neck concerning the coming era of fuel cells?

Lastly, I suggest that the new solutions to electricity and telephony, driven by smart edges and the distributed nature of the internet, will deeply influence the ways we organize or society and thus the ways politics works. I do not think either party understands this yet. The first party to shift and adapt to these new realities, and their profound consequences, will do very well indeed.

SUBJECT: Fuel Cell Question

On a recent e-mail from Jock Gill regarding the potential use of fuel cells in homes to provide electricity, you asked whether we should be promoting such technology.

* The short answer is that we are. Our revised $3.6 billion climate change tax package for this year's budget includes a 20% tax credit for fuel cells as small as 5 kW, assuming they meet a certain efficiency standard. Five kilowatts would cover home-sized fuel cells.

VIA EMAIL

Dear Mr. President,

Here are two emails which make a key point: The conflicting approaches to environmental change preferred by the business community on the one hand, carrots, and the environmentalist on the other, punishment, is an obstacle. David Reed's work with options may suggest a very constructive solution. I hope you enjoy the two email messages below.

Best regards,

Jock

Ed Kern writes:

David:

Thank you for your clear presentation of the differences between developing good technology and good policy. I spent yesterday in Washington with folks [including Todd Stern] trying to figure out how to implement a policy to give incentives for early voluntary actions to reduce Green House gas emissions. Here again environmental and business groups that want to encourage "first movers" have competing approaches. What I liked most about your review is applying your thoughts to the split between business and environmental groups in our "First Mover" discussions:

Business groups: wants flexibility; will engage many seeking to innovate solutions; cannot guarantee results; want government to reward successes; regrettably some companies will game the system; need to be seen as making sound long term investments by stockholders; wants government to use offer a "carrot" approach to begin reducing emissions; recognizes fixed cap and trade limits as ultimately necessary assuming (probably correctly) that voluntary programs will not be sufficient.

Environmental groups: want guaranteed results; will likely focus on problem, emitting facilities and worst emitting industries; want government to punish failures; need to be seen as catalysts to maintain their base of support; believes government will have to use a regulatory "stick" approach to get anything moving.

David's point about some risk taking is right on; we must allow for some failures to find some successes. In my view the best solutions and approaches will surface with the business approach.

David P. Reed writes:

What is worth pointing out, however, is that the "tax" answer proposed by the article [It's Getting Late to Switch to a Viable World Economy - (International Herald Tribune; 01/19/99)] is only one of several approaches to regulating environmental impact that are enabled in an essential way by information technology.

There are two components of any process that seeks change. First, creating a system that effectively motivates change in the right direction. The "tax" approach is motivation (negative). Another motivation centered approach is economic "reward" - such as is granted by systems like liquid property rights in things like "intellectual property". The trick here is to get motivations structured so that we avoid tragedies of the commons, etc. which are problems of perverse effects of motivation aspects of the problem.

But the second component of change/innovation is alternative generation - figuring out what can be done, sorting out what is feasible, trying experiments, etc. Here there is a huge deficiency. The politics of this field involve premature judgment, short-term thinking, and intellectual fratricide among alternatives. There is no room in most advocates minds for failure and iteration, the most effective way I know of to solve problems of the complexity and uncertainty that surround environmental science. Politicians and advocates are fooled by analogies to the precision of particle physics into thinking that ecologists and climatologists have precise models that we can apply to predict and optimize the future. Precision may not be possible, but lack of precision is no excuse for inaction. But lack of precision calls for a very different style of action than our command-and-control politics is comfortable with. Tolerance of ambiguity is essential, but not inaction in the face of ambiguity.

In my opinion, this is where the real difficulty lies. We need tools for facilitating our taking action in the face of uncertainty. We are way too conservative in our investments against future risks, and that is a bigger risk to our world than the risk of a project not turning out as well as we hope. We need to encourage more "risk-taking" in the service of fixing the world, because _no_ one has a monopoly on knowing the right thing to do_, and waiting until someone does, incontrovertibly, is too late. This is why the "conservatives" will kill us. It is why "go slow" is not always the "safe" thing, why driving at 5 miles per hour on a freeway is a way to get your passengers killed.

There are some tools of this sort being developed in the business world, to handle areas where uncertainty and change are the norm, but where action must be taken in any sense. These tools come under the rubric called "Real Options" - an adaptation of the theory of contingent claims or financial options to situations outside the financial markets. These tools can help figure out how to invest effort against uncertain futures, how to invest effort in support of making choices and decisions that will be grounded in future knowledge unavailable to the present.

These tools are information-based, and in particular based on the notion of the time-value of information generation. They work a lot better in a networked world, in one where collaboration leads to creation of collective value while still enabling competition and incentives and disincentives of the economic sort.

We need to be building some Real Options for the future. These Real Options can be assigned economic value in a way that recognizes uncertainty explicitly (especially since the value and desirability of investment in projects structured as Real Options increases directly with uncertainty of their future value). The reason options are crucial is that they create future opportunities to invest or not invest when you know more. Our current environmental investments are based on the "put all your eggs in one basket" theory, which works only when you know the future with certainty. We need more exploration, more risk taking.

Unfortunately, this is not going to be popular with the left or the right, who depend on ideology and black-white splitting to "win". But "winning" is losing for all of us.

Subject: Fuel cells for residential use

December 10, 1998

VIA EMAIL

Dear Mr. President,

As you may remember, I wrote to you last winter, after the very bad ice storms in the North East, about fuel cells for residential use, an internet like distributed power generation paradigm. Here is an update on the idea from the Financial Post Toronto; 11/14/98.

It sure would have been very useful to have had a fuel cell in our basement when the lights went off during Hillary's visit to our house last Saturday. Keeping the lights on would have made the USSS a LOT happier. The candle light was romantic, and as Hillary said, we all do look better in candle light! It was great to see Hillary again. She was wonderful at Massachusetts College of Art. It would be good to see you again too.

I hope you will find this of interest.

I send you are best wishes for success on your Mid East trip.

Season's Greetings,

Jock

Home power plants stand on threshold of practicality Three-year cost recovery;

Technological advances drive down fuel cell prices
(Financial Post Toronto; 11/14/98)

Miniature home power plants may soon join the list of once-futuristic ideas, like electric cars and solar batteries, made commonplace by advances in the rapidly evolving electricity industry.

The machines use fuel cells, which have low operating costs, require little maintenance and are highly efficient.

"On-site, gas-fired facilities have a substantial role to play in the deregulated electricity market," Tony Prophet, chief executive of AlliedSignal Power Systems Inc., said at a recent presentation to reporters.

>> "We can create electricity at a price that's cheaper than the grid." <<

The AlliedSignal Inc. subsidiary estimated the potential global market for the small-scale generating units, usually fueled by natural gas, at $1- trillion (US).

The company now sells units able to power a fast-food restaurant or supermarket for $50,000 (US) each. As production ramps up, that is expected to drop to $30,000 (US), a cost that would be recovered over two to three years of lower power bills.

Spurred by both the opportunity and threat created by deregulation, the long-staid electric utility industry has revved up efforts to develop new products and services in order to limit customer defections and boost revenue.

Fuel-cell technology has been around for years, but it was only recently that advances in materials and design made the cells economical and reliable enough for everyday use.

Growing environmental worries are also spurring innovation in the industry. The U.S. relies on coal, one of the dirtiest fuels, to meet more than half of its power needs.

Fuel cells use hydrogen-based fuels to generate power electrochemically without combustion and produce only heat and water as byproducts. The systems recycle heat, which is often treated as a waste product in traditional power plants, to regulate room temperature and heat water.

"Our fuel cell has less impact on the environment than a centralized power plant. It also eliminates the bottlenecks you have with a transmission and distribution infrastructure," said Kim Zentz, president of Avista Labs.

Avista Labs, an unregulated unit of Washington Water Power Co., which also owns the Spokane-based electric utility of the same name, is another of the growing number of companies looking to capitalize on the so-called distributed power market.

Avista has come up with a prototype fuel cell power generation system - about the size of an air-conditioning unit - that it hopes will become a source for primary or backup power supply to homes and small businesses.

The company said it will first target commercial and industrial applications, but believes the technology's greatest potential is in homes and small businesses.

The company expects to have a limited production run next year of fuel cells that use processed hydrogen rather than natural gas.

The Washington-based firm plans to team up eventually with a retailer, such as Sears or Wal-Mart, that would handle marketing, manufacturing and distribution of a home fuel cell appliance. It expects that to happen in another 5-10 years.

At the conclusion of the 1997 Presidents' Summit for America's Future, which you helped host in Philadelphia, America's Promise was launched as the organization that would carry forward the mandate of the summit. For the past two years, I have been proud to chair America's Promise and to help mobilize individuals, groups and organizations from every part of American life to find ways to build and strengthen the character and competence of our youth.

Our achievements have been many and our progress very satisfying in an effort to point our children in the right direction. I want to share our results thus far with you in the enclosed Report to the Nation 1999. I hope you will agree that we are making the proper headway in our crusade.

Dear Jon:

Thank you very much for your kind letter informing me of your departure from the White House.

You have served our country well as a White House Fellow -- acting as a liaison to Cabinet agencies and working on important Administration initiative such as Hate Crimes legislation and other critical crime bills. As we continue building on the substantial progress we have made, I'm glad to know that you will remain a part of our team as Acting Assistant Attorney General for Legislative Affairs at the Department of Justice. Dear Mr. President:

Today is my last day at the White House and I did not want it to pass without expressing my sincere appreciation to you for this wonderful opportunity to serve. Needless to say it has been a great honor for me to work for you, the Vice President and the First Lady. For someone who had memorized the presidents when I was five years of age, working at the White House and playing a small part in the last year and a half has truly been one of the highlights of my life.

I have taken a position as Acting Assistant Attorney General for Legislative Affairs at the Department of Justice. Not bad for a former basketball coach! I begin my new responsibilities on April 19. I decided to take this position with the hope that I can play a role in getting critical legislation, such as our Hate Crimes bill and our new Crime bill, passed. I am very excited about the challenges ahead, but sad to be leaving this incredible experience. I hope to return to the White House next year after my stint at the Justice Department to finish the administration.

As I have mentioned to you in the past, I am inspired to continue my pursuit of a public career dedicated to the issues I care about so deeply by seeking public office in the future. Much of my inspiration to pursue this vocation is because of you. Your dedication to the betterment of our fellow citizens and to the public debate of ideas has profoundly affected my decision to pursue a career in what I believe to be an honorable profession.

Please know that if you should need me for anything, I am only a few blocks away. I look forward to seeing you again soon. Please know I am eternally proud and honored to serve in your administration.

Sincerely,

Jon P. Jennings

Warm greetings to everyone gathered in Los Angeles as the downtown campus of the Gateways Hospital and Mental Health Center is rededicated in honor of the Ziskind family. I am pleased to join you in paying tribute to Lou Ziskind as he is honored for his pioneering role in providing community-based health services for the mentally ill.

Many Americans have felt the impact of mental illness and emotional disorders, either in their own lives or in the lives of loved ones. The consequences of untreated mental illnesses are staggering in both human and economic costs. Thanks to innovations in care and the compassion of all those affiliated with organizations like Gateways, our society has made great progress in diagnosing and treating mental and emotional disorders and in helping people living with these disorders to make their own contributions to society.

As we strive to create a health care system that meets the needs of all our people, it is appropriate for us to recognize the vision and direction provided by the hardworking staff of your facility for more than four decades. You can take pride in your leadership in providing mental health services to the Los Angeles community and in your capacity to grow and evolve to meet the changing needs of consumers. You reflect the spirit of compassion, commitment, and responsibility that defines American health care at its best.

Best wishes for a memorable ceremony and continued success in your efforts.

Dear President Clinton:

We feel most privileged to have the opportunity to write to you about the Gateways Hospital Rededication honoring the Ziskind family, founders of Gateways Hospital and Mental Health Center. We have set the date for Sunday, June 6, 1999 at 11:00 AM. We would very much appreciate receiving a Proclamation or letter from you to be presented to Lou Ziskind that day.

Gateways Hospital and Mental Health Center, a constituent agency of the Jewish Federation of Greater Los Angeles and a United Way agency, is a non-profit behavioral health care agency providing comprehensive services designed to restore health and well-being to the emotionally and mentally ill. Gateways opened its doors in 1961. Eleanor Roosevelt dedicated the hospital at that time. Enclosed are photos of this special moment. Gateways was founded by Lou Ziskind, a Licensed Clinical Social Worker who is recognized as a pioneer in community based treatment of the mentally ill, his brother Dr. Eugene Ziskind (a well known Psychiatrist), Dave Ziskind, Lou's brother and a prominent attorney, and Gene's wife, Dr. Esther Sommerfeld (also a Psychiatrist). Lou Ziskind has just turned 90, and we very much want to honor him and this outstanding family for their commitment to mental health, the community and those less fortunate. Appropriately, we are dedicating the main campus of the hospital in downtown Los Angeles as the "The Ziskind Family Campus" of Gateways Hospital and Mental Health Center.

In 1953 at a time when mental illness was not a topic talked about Lou Ziskind went into the community to find support for mental health and the first Gateways opened its doors on Hoover Street. In the late 50's the hospital was able to expand to its present 5 1/2 acre location in Echo Park thanks to federal Hill-Burton funds and generous contributions from the Los Angeles Jewish community. Today we operate 6 sites - Gateways Hospital, Gateways Beit T'Shuvah, Gateways

Westside Geriatric Center, Gateways Forensic Programs which includes Gateways Mentally Ill Offenders Program, Gateways Community Correction Center, and Gateways Conditional Release Programs. Together these sites offer a range of behavioral health services to the medically indigent, Medi-Cal and Medi-Care populations. Most of our caseload comes to us through contracts with the Federal Bureau of Prisons, the Los Angeles County Department of Mental Health, and the State Conditional Release Program.

The Ziskind family's desire to bring high quality, low cost mental health care to those lacking resources, dates back to the 1940's. The Ziskind family name is regaled throughout the mental health and criminal justice community in the U.S. and other parts of the world. Gateways was also among the first organizations to use psychotropic medication. Today we continue to honor the tradition of providing compassionate high quality, low cost behavioral health services that was the guiding principle of our founding first family. In 1998 Lou received a lifetime achievement award from the Jewish Federation for his efforts in founding Gateways.

You would greatly honor Gateways by allowing us to place your name on the Honorary Committee. We await your early positive response so that we can properly prepare this Rededication memorializing an outstanding family.

Thank you for your consideration.

"How Would You Like A Quarter Of A Million Dollars?..."

Gateways Hospital did not happen all at once.

It took years of devotion to a plan, hard work by dedicated men and women engaged in activities of the Jewish Committee for Personal Service before $10,000 had been raised to purchase a 50-foot lot at 437 North Hoover Street and construct a 10-bed hospital.

It was revolutionary for 1953.

Men and women were housed in the same building. There were no locked doors. Beds folded out of sight during the day and doubled as sitting and reading rooms. The dining area was also the recreation room.

Within two years, Gateways Hospital was bursting at the seams. It had grown to 27 beds and into two small adjoining bungalows and rented apartments in an apartment house next door, and administrators were looking around for the means to future growth.

Over lunch, John Factor asked Louis Ziskind, then executive director and now Gateways' vice president emeritus, "How would you like a quarter of a million dollars gift for the building of a new hospital?"

Inspired by this act of generosity, Gateways' board of directors launched a fund-raising drive under the direction of George Olincy. Other memorable leaders of the Jewish community who supported the effort included an omnipresent JCPS "founding angel," Rabbi Edgar F. Magnin, Victor M. Carter, Ben Heller, Tilden Norton, Virginia Olincy, Rella Factor, Andrew Norman, and Leo J. Seidenberg.

Some $1,500,000 was raised, sufficient to purchase four acres of land in the Echo Park-Elysian Park area and build the 55,000 square foot complex dedicated by Eleanor Roosevelt on October 15, 1961.

Those who crowded in to hear the remarkable widow of the late President Franklin Delano Roosevelt remember her remarks, delivered under a blazing 107 degree sun, as "stirring" and "inspirational."

Gateways Hospital comprised two major buildings, with the main T-shaped structure housing 64 beds in two wings and the administrative units in its two-level stem. The second building was a two-story activities center comprising offices for out-patient services, an auditorium, gymnasium, snack bar, chapel, and recreation patio. Also on the grounds: a dozen sheltered residential cottages, basically an "open" unit suited to the care of voluntary patients.

From the onset, there has been no age, sex, race, religious or residential barrier to admission. Patients are limited to those requiring hospitalization or able to profit by a short stay in an open or restricted setting. A non-profit agency, any fees or special charges are based on a patient's ability to pay.

Lou Ziskind has recalled, "We selected the Effie Street location because it was centrally located to the entire community via the freeway systems...but mostly because it was available at a price we could afford."

What happens next in the unfolding saga of a hospital determined to provide expanded service to the community in the years ahead?

There's a Year 2000 plan that offers clues to that future.

And, hopefully, prayerfully, others like John Factor wondering if...

Gateways Hospital and Mental Health Center is a member of the Federation of Greater Los Angeles and a United Way "D" designated behavioral health care agency providing comprehensive services designed to restore health and well-being to the emotionally and mentally ill. Gateways opened its doors in 1961. Eleanor Roosevelt dedicated the hospital at that time.
Enclosed are photos of this special moment. Gateways was founded by Lou Ziskind, a Licensed Clinical Social Worker who is recognized as a pioneer in community based treatment of the mentally ill, his brother Dr. Eugene Ziskind (a well known Psychiatrist), Dave Ziskind, Lou's brother and a prominent attorney, and Gene's wife, Dr. Esther Sommerfeld (also a Psychiatrist). Lou Ziskind has just turned 90, and we very much want to honor him and this outstanding family for their commitment to mental health, the community and those less fortunate.
Appropriately, we are dedicating the main campus of the hospital in downtown
Los Angeles as the "The Ziskind Family Campus" of Gateways Hospital and Mental Health Center.

In 1953 at a time when mental illness was not a topic talked about Lou Ziskind went into the community to find support for mental health and the first Gateways opened its doors on Hoover Street. In the late 50's the hospital was able to expand to its present 5 1/2 acre location in Echo Park thanks to federal Hill-Burton funds and generous contributions from the Los Angeles Jewish community. Today we operate 6 sites - Gateways Hospital, Gateways Beit T'Shuvah, Gateways

Dear Susan:

Thanks for your kind letter regarding my remarks on gun control legislation. Your support means a lot to me. I've enclosed a copy of my speech for you.

I have passed along your suggestions for a radio address to members of my staff in the Communications Office. I like your ideas. By bringing the critical issues of guns and violence among our nation's young people to the attention of all Americans, we can help ensure the safety of our schools and our children. I'm glad to know I can count on your help.

Hillary and I hope you and your family are well, and we send our best.

Sincerely,

BILL CLINTON

Dear Mr President:

I happened to turn on C-Span last night and was utterly mesmerized by your gun speech. You were fabulous, and only you could do it. What struck me most was how important it is to reach out to the NRA, as opposed to just taking them on. The audience for your speech was, in some respects, all wrong; NRA members don't trust those people, with reason, many of them would like to ban all handguns, and to demonize gun owners. I came to have a different view than theirs in my years on talk radio, when I had lots of regular callers who were decent people and also gun owners, you understand where the suspicion comes from. But your respect for the decency of people who go to gun shows, and hunt, and don't see guns as inherently evil, shined through. I kept thinking how important a part of your legacy this could be, how more people needed to hear and see your message, NRA members and their families, in particular. I think Littleton struck a gaping chord -- both on the gun issue and on the culture of violence -- and that you and the First Lady are about as well positioned to reach out to both worlds, guns and Hollywood, as anyone could be, not to take them on, but to invite them to join in addressing the issues, saving lives ..

It filled me with all kinds of ideas. of you doing a radio address for the NRA members on Saturday, and let the rest of us listen to how you talk to them, appeal to their kids, and wives, and husbands, of you and Hillary doing a White House talk to the nation, reaching out to gun owners and Hollywood, going beyond the usual politics to save lives; of you in a black church (you sounded almost religious yesterday; and those are the children who are disproportionately dying) . .

Anyway, I just wanted to tell you how wonderful you were, and how blown away I was, once again, watching you. We're excited to be coming back Monday to the State Dinner, the Vice President and I are friends again (boy, are they beating up on him), and I really look forward to seeing you

Sincerely,

Susan
