... a remarkable night with the president saying goodbye to an adoring party after eight eventful White House years, and Mrs. Clinton emerging from her own tumultuous tenure as first lady and wronged wife to propel herself into a high-profile political career of her own.

When Maryland Senator Barbara Mikulski introduced Mrs. Clinton as the next senator from New York, a great roar filled the Staples Center and delegates waved a blue sea of "Hillary!" signs to the refrain of "New York, New York." As Mrs. Clinton began her remarks, the crowd interrupted her with the noisy chant of "Hillary, Hillary, Hillary!"

"Don't let anyone tell you this election doesn't matter," said Mrs. Clinton, who is locked in a tight race to succeed retiring Democratic Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York. "The stakes in November are the biggest for those who are the littlest among us."

Applause from the New Yorkers was sustained but not enthusiastic as Mrs. Clinton thanked the delegates for their support and promised to "hit the ground running."

... Los Angeles. Dozens of "Hillary ambassadors" from New York have been organized by her campaign to raise money, distribute literature, and promote Mrs. Clinton's candidacy here through Thursday. Fund-raising house parties were scheduled across New York last night.

Judith Hope, the state chairman, called Mrs. Clinton's campaigning here "one more step in her bonding with the New York Democratic Party.

"It is important for this trip to be a transition where the Clintons are closing one door and opening another door and handing the baton to the vice president," Hope said. "Mrs. Clinton understands that and is very supportive.
