... conclusions about the Whitewater investigation a few weeks before New York voters go to the polls to choose between Hillary Rodham Clinton and Rep. Rick Lazio, her Republican opponent for the U.S. Senate.

Ray, whose office has investigated President and Hillary Clinton on a range of issues for more than four years, also said in an interview that he would announce his decision shortly ...

... two reports, one essentially clearing the Clintons in the collection of confidential FBI files about Republicans and another critical of Hillary Clinton's role in the dismissal of longtime employees in the White House travel office.

... an interview and in comments through a spokesman, Ray also discussed some considerations about the timing. Any criticism of Hillary Clinton from Ray in the final weeks of her campaign could turn into a political issue.

But Howard Wolfson, Clinton's campaign spokesman, ...

... long been known there will be no recommendation of any criminal indictment, the statement is almost certain to discuss how his findings compare to Hillary Clinton's assertions to investigators and to the public about her role as a lawyer in connection with several real estate dealings in Arkansas.

... scheme. Ray concluded that the improper acquisition was a bureaucratic foul-up involving mid-level White House officials and that Hillary Clinton had no involvement, as she had asserted.

But in his second statement of findings and conclusions, issued in June, about whether Hillary Clinton played a role in the firing of seven longtime White House travel office employees, Ray was far more critical of her sworn statements.

He made a point of saying that despite Hillary Clinton's strong denials, he concluded that she had played a substantial role in causing the employees to be dismissed.

The Whitewater report may well follow that model, as it is expected to explore what Hillary Clinton did as a lawyer for various Arkansas clients and contentions that she tried to conceal or minimize her role.

For example, one issue is a 1985 telephone call Hillary Clinton made on behalf of a client, Madison Guaranty and Trust, to a senior Arkansas official who worked for her ...

Hillary Clinton told investigators that she did not remember whom she spoke with at the agency. She also said she had only been trying to find out the appropriate official for ...

... not discussed the issue.

But the regulator recalled the conversation in detail when she testified before the Senate Whitewater committee. She said that Hillary Clinton had spoken with her and discussed the substance of the proposal. And Massey testified he had already known whom to contact.
