HOLIDAYS AT THE WHITE HOUSE 1997

HEADLINE: CLINTONS HAVE A WHITE HOUSEFUL AT CHRISTMAS;
FROM GENERALS TO REPORTERS, EVERYONE WANTS IN ON THE FUN. IT'S A TEST OF THE FIRST COUPLE'S HOLIDAY METTLE.

BYLINE: GERALDINE BAUM, TIMES STAFF WRITER

DATELINE: WASHINGTON

BODY:

If President Clinton's hair looks a tad grayer during the State of the Union address next month and his wife's that much lighter, perhaps it's because they've been blanched by flash bulbs.

In the last three weeks, the Clintons have hosted no less than 16 holiday receptions, shaken 7,500 hands and had their picture snapped with every person attached to one of those hands.

Meantime, more than 160,000 people have passed through the White House on tours, taking in the elaborate Christmas decorations and, if they're lucky, catching a glimpse of the first family.

The White House parties include everyone from generals to Cabinet members and from wealthy fund-raisers to White House telephone operators, reporters and just-plain-folks who plead for an invitation. The ropes are yanked off even the best antiques and an open bar is set up in the East Room while a buffet anchors the State Dining Room on the west side of the executive mansion.

While guests inhale jumbo shrimp, baby lamb chops and eggnog spiked with cognac, bourbon and rum, the Clintons spend all their time on the receiving line in the ground-floor Diplomatic Reception Room, never mingling with the rest of their party.

During their first year in Washington, the Clintons followed previous administrations and greeted people in front of the Blue Room. But aides found that this inhibited guests' use of the Red, Blue and Green parlors on the first floor, so the Clintons have stationed themselves out of the way. Also, so guests don't have to waste time standing around, they now receive a card stating precisely when they are to go downstairs for their snapshot with the Clintons.

" The Clintons don't get to go upstairs and enjoy the party aspect of these events," says Capricia Marshall, First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton's closest aide in her new job as social secretary.

It is never more apparent than at this time of year that there is a uniquely Washington gap between official reality and intuitive reality, with spokespersons and spinners caught smack in the middle.

So, for example, Marshall, like others before her, insists that the Clintons do not tire of the relentless grin-and-grip of December. "You're going to find it unbelievable and hokey, but they love it, they get excited," Marshall says. "It's a chance to catch up with old friends."

Indeed, at two separate holiday receptions last week, the president demonstrated his skill at connecting in a blink as guests filed by conveyor-belt-like for a handshake and snapshot. A bon mot here, a remembrance of an earlier meeting there, thank-yous all around--Bill Clinton was in high form.

But surely even he, on those nights when there were two receptions back to back, became sore-faced from all that smiling?

"Not really," Marshall says the morning after the Clintons greeted 850 members of the Secret Service and White House staff in an hour and 50 minutes--a new hand every 7.8 seconds. "They were both invigorated."

Depending on who's taking notice, the Clintons are either the most hospitable people to occupy 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue in recent years or the most opportunistic.

Between tours of public rooms, dinners in the grand halls, coffees in the Map Room and overnight stays in the Lincoln Bedroom, the Clintons, who haven't owned their own home since the early years of their marriage, have used this one to its fullest--particularly in December and during high political seasons. During Christmases past, they have thrown as many as 25 holiday parties for more than 10,000 people.

Even during the eight-year Reagan reign, Christmas was never so frenetic, according to Sheila Tate, who served a stint as Nancy Reagan's spokeswoman. The Reagans had the usual half-dozen Christmas events for children, staff and media, feeding them roast beef and pasta. (Who could forget the year Nancy stood in the receiving lines with a sign around her neck reading, "I Have Laryngitis. Merry Christmas"?)

"The entire social apparatus was more lively closer to an election, but the Reagans had a pretty strong tradition around Christmas," Tate says. "They had a few parties and they were well-defined."

The Reagans also sent out about 60,000 Christmas cards, paid for by the Republican National Committee. This year the Clintons have sent out 300,000 Christmas cards, paid for by the Democratic National Committee.

Unlike the RNC, the DNC also picks up the tab for all the Christmas receptions, except for the congressional ball. "We pay because we invite Democratic activists and people who have supported the party," says Melissa Bonney, a DNC spokeswoman.

Indeed, Johnny Chien Chuen Chung, one such supporter, alleges that he was hit up for $ 50,000 by a White House aide to help defray the cost of Christmas parties in 1994. And he claims that after attending a Christmas reception the following year, he was solicited for another $ 25,000 donation for a pro-Clinton group.

The White House vehemently denies any aide put the squeeze on Chung to pay for a holiday party. Needless to say, the Torrance businessman did not make the Clintons' party list this year.

But then again, some 7,000 people were dropped from the 1997 list.

With the DNC $ 13.5 million in debt, party leaders this year decided to tighten the holiday belt, demanding that party costs be held to $ 300,000, well under the $ 430,000 spent last year. And so for several reasons, including scheduling problems, the Clintons trimmed the number of receptions. Instead of last year's 22, they've had only 16 this year, which means three sit-down dinners had to be compressed into one for 330 of the Clintons' closest advisors, campaign supporters and, as always, a few celebrities, such as Whoopi Goldberg and John Cusack.

Social Secretary Marshall says there were plenty of reasons other than financial ones to review all the party lists: "We were sending out invitations to people who were dead," she says.

Marshall had 14 volunteers in the East Wing social office--young people of college age--fielding angry calls from people whose invitations had not arrived and probably never would.

How do they maintain their Christmas spirit?

"It's a good thing I'm Jewish!" says one woman, demanding anonymity.

Of course, members of the press grumbled the loudest. In a column the weekend before the receptions, New York Times columnist William Safire announced that he and his fellow opinion writer Maureen Dowd, widely read critics of the Clintons, did not receive invitations to the White House press parties.

Michael Kelly, former editor of the New Republic and now a senior writer for the National Journal, also was not invited. But he says he quit attending these parties a few years ago because "I felt it was no longer fair of me to inflict my personal presence on the Clintons. If they didn't cut me now, what kind of cutting operation did they have?" he chuckles.

Ultimately, Kelly says he finds the whole party scene "instructive."

"You realize the true horror of the political life," he says. "There you are, president of the United States, which is a pretty good life, but you have to stand there for four hours posing for photos with people you don't like and who you strongly suspect don't like you."

The evening of the media parties, White House Press Secretary Michael McCurry, standing just off the Grand Foyer in front of a portrait of Ronald Reagan, insisted that unflattering writing about the Clintons was not a factor in whether or not an invitation was issued. In fact, he said, the White House was just trying to make some sense out of what was intended as an invitation to people who actually toil at the White House.

When pressed about whether the Clintons were developing some kind of enemy list, McCurry finally grabbed passerby Paul Bedard, a ferociously right-wing White House correspondent for the Washington Times. "No! no! Here's the proof!" he screamed.

There were several more items in the press that week about late invitations and long waits to get through the White House gates. And that's after journalists consumed 700 pounds of shrimp, 150 pounds of grilled salmon and 60 pounds of smoked salmon.

Walter Scheib, the White House chef, says parties for members of the media are "the most challenging." Apparently, they eat more than anyone else invited to the White House--and at quite a brisk pace.

In other words, they're pigs?

"Oh, no," says the Clintons' chef. "I take it as a compliment."

There are people who attend White House Christmas parties every year and still find it an honor and the setting a thrill--the 23 grand trees inside the house, many decorated with gold balls and burgundy ribbons, the hand-carved wood and terra cotta creche with 47 figures and a giant gingerbread house this year depicting Santa on a cell phone to the president asking permission for Socks the cat to help distribute gifts.

On the evening of the party for Secret Service agents, military aides, White House operators and other staff members working in the Old and New Executive Office buildings, the women all looked to be wearing their dressiest outfits. There were long, backless velvet dresses and glittering jackets and satin skirts. The military men and women were in full regalia.

Lottie Graham, a White House telephone operator for 14 years, was talking about the parties while waiting to sit on Santa's lap in front of the official tree, a 18-foot Fraser fir. "This is just a little something the president does for us," she says, explaining that the operators deserve "a little something," considering how much grief they put up with from rude callers.

"They call about everything and anything in the news," she says. December, she adds, was the month of "the dog," Clinton's new chocolate Labrador retriever. " 'Name him Fido,' they all said," Graham reports. Clinton chose to name the dog Buddy instead.

On the other side of the tree, Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Henry H. Shelton is shaking hands with several military aides. Tom Wiley, a supervisor in the Secret Service for 25 years, and his wife are looking out the window at the Christmas tree twinkling on the Ellipse and at the Washington Memorial.

And in the next room, with a Marine band playing jazzed-up versions of Christmas tunes, two of the five military aides who accompany President Clinton carrying the "football"--the bag containing codes to launch nuclear arms--are drinking freely from the open bar, joking with their wives and talking about their seemingly glamorous jobs.

"We see a lot of kitchens, hallways and backs of offices going around with the president," says Air Force Lt. Col. Buzz Patterson.

"Oh, he's lying," says Nicole Patterson, his wife of less than a year. "He once called me from a castle."

Meantime, Chelsea Clinton, wearing blue jeans and a shy smile, briefly stops by the Grand Foyer with a friend to hear a choral group from Stanford University, where she is a freshman this year.

By tonight, the Clintons' Christmas marathon should be winding down and they are expected to be in their private quarters decorating still another Christmas tree--their own.

"It's important to Chelsea for her dad to get up on a ladder," Marshall says.

But the partying is not quite over.

On Christmas Day, the Clintons will have to summon up whatever shreds of holiday spirit they may have left to host one more event, a Christmas lunch with dishes--all top secret--drawn from the Clinton and Rodham family traditions. But this is not to be an intimate affair. They're expecting 30 of their nearest and dearest.

Washington - Rochelle Weissberg thought she was prepared for her visit to the White House eight days ago. "I thought I had seen it all," the Dix Hills woman said, recalling her walk through the festive hallways and the staterooms and parlors of the presidential mansion draped with pine boughs, ribbons and thousands of Christmas lights.

Then she stepped into the Blue Room and saw the official White House Christmas tree, a 20-foot fraser fir covered with hundreds of handcrafted glass ornaments, fashion designer capes and outfits and needlepoint toys. Then came the jolt: "There was my ornament hanging on the tree, right at the top," she said, a teddy-bear Santa, wearing a scarf with a bell on its cap. "I didn't think beforehand that I was going to get so excited," she said. "It was wonderful."

If tension and travail over independent counsels, Iraqi salvos and tax reform dominate the executive offices in the West Wing of the White House, the East Wing, with its parlors and formal banquet halls, has been transformed by hundreds of artisans and dozens of volunteers into a Christmas wonderland. With a congressional ball, 15 parties and three days of post-Christmas candlelight tours, the season's social calendar is also in full swing, an annual ritual dating to New Year's Day, 1801.

It was then that President John Adams, the first president to live in the White House, and his wife, Abigail, stood in the same oval room and greeted invited guests and anyone else who stopped by. Candles and fireplaces blazed, men wore swords and powdered wigs, and women wore elaborate gowns. According to Janet Whitney, one Adams biographer, the Adamses "gave Washington its first sensation of being a society."

Dolley Madison hosted the first Christmas party in the State Dining Room, a Christmas evening dinner attended by Henry Clay, then-Secretary of State James Monroe and writer Washington Irving, among others. After a toast by Monroe, the women retired to the Blue Room, and a great punch bowl was carried into the dining room for serious libation by the men.

From that the tradition grew. Dolley Madison introduced eggnog in 1815. For most of the 19th Century and until the administration of Calvin Coolidge the president and his wife greeted guests in the Blue Room. The first Christmas tree was decorated in 1889, and the number of parties began to grow after Mamie Eisenhower held one for the children of White House staff and a holiday tea for newspaperwomen.

Jacqueline Kennedy imported a lavish, 18th-Century Neopolitan creche still displayed in the East Room and expanded parties for local reporters, and Lady Bird Johnson held the first party for the children of Washington-based diplomats. In 1974 Betty Ford changed the congressional reception into a formal ball.

Rep. Peter King (R-Seaford) and his wife have been to the past five balls. "Even if the voters made a mistake, it's a chance to step back get some business done, and it helps bring about some bipartisanship," King said. More than 1,000 attend the ball, including members of Congress and the cabinet.

Decorations became steadily more elaborate. In 1844 President John Tyler's wife, Julia Gardiner of the East Hampton and Gardiner's Island family, took charge of what became known as "Julia's Court." In her diary that year she wrote, "We commenced the day with eggnog and concluded with apple toddy." But the party was remembered for the greenery - the halls and dining rooms and even the portrait of George Washington were covered with evergreen wreaths and holly garlands.

The decorations sparkle even more this year. That's where Rochelle Weissberg and her sister, Marilyn Binder of Wading River, Marion Bernholz of Mount Sinai, and another 300 needlepoint artists, dozens of glass artists and more than 100 fashion designers, including Oscar de la Renta, come in.

In July, after Hillary Rodham Clinton picked this year's Santa's Workshop theme, they were invited to design ornaments for the White House tree.

Weissberg designed the Santa bear, and Binder stitched it. Bernholz stitched a star-shaped Santa with a plaid shirt and striped pants, displayed at waist-level on the northwest side of the tree. But when the Long Islanders received invitations to attend the Dec. 12 White House party for the artists, only Weissberg could attend. Her sister was in Texas, and Bernholz was attending to shoppers' needs in her needlework store in North Patchogue. "I own two shops," she said. "This is not the season to be gallivanting to the White House." Briefly CEASEFIRE. There will be no return fire, but Rep. Peter King (R-Seaford) and Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) scored direct hits on each other in a congressional recess crossfire.

A weekly newspaper profile of McCain's unsuccessful effort to overhaul campaign finance included King's remark that McCain was more interested in publicity than in passing a bill, a sentiment often heard among Republicans who, unlike King, won't be quoted.

McCain replied with a blistering letter to the paper, The Hill: "His accusation of grandstanding is laughable, given that there is little in Mr. King's singularly unimpressive legislative record to suggest that he is motivated by anything other than a compulsion to utter provocative sound bites."

"Obviously I hit a sensitive nerve," King said. "But the point I was making was that I don't like a person being so self-righteous, as if he were the only honest man in politics, when he has his own baggage."

But, King said, he would let the issue drop. "Look, I respect him," King said. McCain, a two-term senator who is starting a thinly masked presidential campaign, spent five years in a North Vietnamese prison camp. "He's a genuine American hero," King said.

NEW CONTROLLING AUTHORITY. North Woodmere native and Hewlett High School alumnus Lawrence Haas, communications director at the Office of Management and Budget for three years, steps into the hot seat early next year when he becomes communications director for Vice President Al Gore.

Haas faces no small challenge trying to burnish the stiff butbrainy image of his new boss as he gears up for his all-but-announced 2000 presidential campaign. "I'm greatly looking forward to this," Haas said.

WASHINGTON -- 'Twas the week before Christmas, and all through the White House, not a creature was stirring.

Where was Buddy?

"Is my dog here?" President Clinton asked when he arrived in the holiday-bedecked East Room Thursday, echoing the question shouted by waiting children. For the fifth year, he was set to read a famous Christmas poem and sing Christmas carols.

"My dog is here at the White House," he offered, but the chocolate Labrador was nowhere in sight. No sign of Socks, either.

That wasn't the only time the 60 first, second and third graders from local schools managed to stump the president and Hillary Rodham Clinton.

What about the name of Santa Claus' cat, spied in the picture book the president was displaying?

"That's a good question," Hillary Clinton replied, unable to answer.

And when one child asked to sing The Twelve Days of Christmas, both Clintons turned to humming around Day Nine, straining to remember the song's string of Christmas gifts. They were better prepared for Jingle Bells and Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer.

The Clintons sat on a red bench as the president read A Visit From St. Nicholas to the children, gathered on a rug next to one of the room's six Christmas trees.

Clinton got his audience to participate in retelling the 1822 classic by Clement Clarke Moore.

" 'Twas the night before Christmas, and all through the house, not a creature was stirring, not even a . . ." he said, pausing expectantly.

"Mouse!" the children shouted.

HEADLINE: A Celebration of Reading; Clintons Entertain 60 D.C. Schoolchildren at White House Party

BYLINE: Hamil R. Harris, Washington Post Staff Writer

BODY:

The White House was decked out perfectly -- giant Christmas trees, Frosty the Snowman and Rudolph's flashing red nose -- as President Clinton and first lady Hillary Rodham Clinton entertained a group of Washington schoolchildren yesterday at a holiday "reading" party.

"Welcome to the White House. We are glad that you're here," the first lady said as she and the president greeted 60 children from Brightwood, Bancroft and Cleveland elementary schools. But before the first couple settled on a red leather bench in the East Room, the young visitors wanted to know about the first pets.

"Where's Buddy?" several asked. "Is Socks here?" others inquired.

"My dog is here," Clinton said, laughing. "Socks is here, too." Then he opened a huge book and began reading " 'Twas the Night Before Christmas."

Assistant Press Secretary Nanda Chitre said feting District children at Christmas is a White House tradition, an "opportunity for the president and the first lady to share the spirit of Christmas."

Anne Mair, Cleveland's principal, said she was shocked when she was called last Friday and invited to bring 20 students to the White House. "We asked our children to read 25 books between September and December, so I selected the children who did."

"This was fantastic," said Stacey Martinez, 8, of Northwest Washington, who read 26 books.

The president had the services of the U.S. Army Chorale, dressed in Victorian outfits, for the well-scripted event. But he was caught off guard when Cleveland student April Barnes, 8, wanted to sing "The Twelve Days of Christmas."

Clinton did just fine with the first eight days but had to turn to the chorale director, Army Capt. Dwayne S. Milburne, for help remembering the "nine ladies dancing." By the time the group made it to 12, even the Secret Service detail seemed to be giggling a bit.

Jelani Irby, 7, a second-grader at Brightwood, sat next to the president during the party, and Brightwood Principal Dekontee Johnson said the child will never forget the day. "We will be asking the youngsters to write about their experiences of having met the president and the first lady," Johnson said.

"This was a once-in-a-lifetime dream come true," said Carrie Henderson, a guidance counselor at Bancroft, as her children were led into the Blue Room to pose for pictures with the president under a 25-foot Christmas tree.

Before leaving the East Room, Bancroft third-grader Odetta Bondking, 8, took a last look at the six "pretty" Christmas trees adorned with red ribbons and soccer ball-size gold ornaments.

The children left the party with a bag of gingerbread cookies, a box of M&M's autographed by the president and a picture of Socks. "This was exciting," said April as she left the executive mansion. "This was my first time at the White House."

HEADLINE: Christmas at the White House ... All the President's Gingerbread Men; Tarts & Truffles & Tales of Baking 80,000 Sweets

BYLINE: Candy Sagon, Washington Post Staff Writer

BODY:

Remember wa-a-ay back in June, when most people were buying bathing suits and stocking up on suntan lotion? That's when White House pastry chef Roland Mesnier began baking for Christmas.

That's right, June. As First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton explained at the unveiling of the White House Christmas tree earlier this month, one of the biggest shocks of her first year in the White House was learning how early Christmas preparations must begin.

Chief Usher "Gary Walters came to me in mid-June and said it was getting very late for planning Christmas. I couldn't believe it," she recalled.

Believe it. Although this year a cost-conscious White House has cut back by a third on the number of holiday parties and receptions it is hosting, Mesnier and his longtime assistant, Franette McCulloch, still must bake for nearly six months to provide the 80,000 nibble-size pieces of cake and cookies for the hordes of guests invited to the president's house this month. (And that's in addition to the hundreds of gallons of eggnog, thousands of boiled shrimp and dozens and dozens of platters of grilled vegetable torte, steamed buns with red curried chicken, sushi rolls and other canapes from chef Walter Scheib.)

So how do Mesnier and McCulloch keep up the Christmas spirit for six months? Like this:

Ho ho ho, 250 fruitcakes into the refrigerator by July.

On, Donner! On, Blitzen! On 2,500 gingerbread cookies by the dog days of August.

Better not pout, better just keep baking those 20,000 brownies, macaroons, pecan diamonds, hazelnut butter crescents, sables, German leckerle, linzer cookies and fruit bars by September.

Yes, Virginia, there are 70 loaves of panettone; 180 pumpkin, applesauce and passionfruit cakes; 100 coconut sheet cakes; 250 three-foot buche de Noel logs; mountains of chocolate truffles; and literally thousands of tiny raspberry tartlets, mini-savarins, baby blackberry- and raspberry-mousse cakes and petits fours glazed with fondant or frangipane buttercream with hand-piped icing wreaths or candles by November.

Plus, 11 lords a-leaping, the 80 pounds of gingerbread and 40 pounds of chocolate, icing and marzipan needed for the annual White House gingerbread house, unveiled two weeks ago.

Oh, and a bunch of fresh fruit platters in a pear tree.

And remember -- this is an easy year. A piece of cake, as it were. Says Mesnier, "Last year, we made 120,000 pieces."

But what's 40,000 goodies one way or another when you've done this 18 times? And Mesnier has. He was hired in 1979 after just one interview with former First Lady Rosalyn Carter and has remained the White House's sultan of sweets through four presidents. Obviously, he's skilled at more than just pastry.

Says one chef who often helps Mesnier during state occasions, "Roland's famous for anticipating his employer's needs. His antennas are always out. Even before Clinton was nominated the first time -- when it just looked like he might be the next president -- Roland was already trying to find out what he liked to eat."

Many, both inside and outside 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, consider the stocky 52-year-old Frenchman a national treasure, as much for his show-stopping desserts as for his obliging nature and infectious enthusiasm.

"He's always calm, never flustered, never loses his temper," says well-known D.C. pastry chef Ann Amernick, who worked with Mesnier in 1980 and 1981. Amernick, who now makes desserts for Cashion's Eat Place in Adams-Morgan, calls her time with him "an experience of a lifetime.

"He's a perfectionist. A job isn't over until it's done right. We worked very hard, but he's also very funny. We had a lot of fun," Amernick remembers.

"He's like a big kid," agrees McCulloch, glancing at him fondly during an interview in the cramped White House pastry kitchen. He's so enthusiastic, she adds, that she has to caution him against revealing ahead of time the secret theme to this year's gingerbread house.

"See," says Mesnier with a mischievous grin, holding up a marzipan Santa Claus, "here is Santa Claus talking on his cell phone -- we call it a sleigh phone -- to a very important person. But I can't tell you who," he adds coyly.

A week later Mrs. Clinton reveals to a crowd of 300 reporters that the house's secret theme is Santa's workshop, and Mesnier, happy as a kid showing off a new toy, explains that the Cell Phone Santa perched on the roof of the workshop is talking to President Clinton, "asking his permission to take Socks with him on his rounds." A marzipan Socks peeks out of Santa's bag of gifts. (Later on Mesnier jokes that next year he may have to add a chocolate dog to the house in honor of the president's new chocolate-colored Labrador puppy.)

Anyone who doubts Mesnier's charm should watch the effect his French accent, big smile and good-natured jokes have on a room full of jaded reporters, all of whom can't help but laugh when he describes the "six months of fun" he and

McCulloch had cutting 80 pounds of gingerbread with a band saw (really) and mortaring the slabs together with "chocolate insulation."

Despite his lightheartedness, Mesnier is nothing but serious when it comes to the details of his art.

For the gingerbread house, for instance, he's adamant that everything on it be completely natural. "We don't cheat and use cardboard or a wood frame," he stresses. He draws up blueprints for the house, calculating its weight and the support the pieces will need, and then he makes gingerbread shims and supports to hold it all upright, with chocolate to cement the pieces in place.

"Roland has a good mind for engineering," explains McCulloch, who calls herself the aesthetic one. "I say 'I don't like that color' and he changes it."

The two of them have worked together for the past 15 years, since McCulloch took one of Mesnier's pastry classes at L'Academie de Cuisine in Bethesda.

Slender, with blue eyes and a penchant for bright pink nail polish, McCulloch admits that before the class she wasn't all that interested in pastry. Now she's passionate about it.

"To come up with a delicious recipe, you have to be a dreamer," she says, gesturing with her hands for emphasis. "You have to daydream and visualize what it should look like. It's not uncommon for me to wake up in the middle of the night and have solved the problem of making some dessert."

Together, Mesnier and McCulloch have made such dreamy desserts as miniature pulled-sugar produce crates painted with food coloring to resemble wood and filled with green and white "asparagus" made from sherbet, designed for a dinner this past spring honoring the president of Chile. They've also gone whimsical with a pink hot-rod birthday cake for Chelsea Clinton's 16th birthday, complete with a marzipan replica of her driver's license.

And although they've single-handedly produced the thousands of Christmas goodies the White House has served for almost two decades, it's by no means become rote for the pair.

"We're always adding things, even at the last minute," Mesnier says.

New this year is a passionfruit cake with caramelized apple slices that he developed for dessert buffets. He also tinkered with the flavors of the chocolate truffles (raspberry this season) and the buche de Noel (last year it had sour cherries, this year it's raspberries).

Not surprisingly for a man who started as a baker's apprentice at 14 and was the first pastry chef in the U.S. to be awarded France's coveted Pastry Chef of the Year award, Mesnier is obsessed with getting every detail correct.

For instance, it wasn't enough that the fresh cherries on the fruit platters be pitted for guests' convenience; Mesnier made a special cherry pitter from cork and a wire that allows him to quickly remove the pit without damaging the appearance of the cherry.

Despite this perfectionism, former colleagues say Mesnier is a dream to work with and a gifted teacher.

"In 20 years, I've never heard him raise his voice," says close friend Francois Dionot, director of L'Academie de Cuisine in Bethesda, who hired Mesnier to start the area's first professional pastry program at the school shortly after he started at the White House.

For 10 years, until his duties at the White House grew too demanding, Mesnier taught twice-weekly classes at L'Academie. "He brought in so many students, just through word of mouth, that we were able to afford our first expansion," recalls Dionot.

"He just has this magic technique, always helping you to learn, always being supportive," adds Mark Ramsdell, a former economist who took Mesnier's pastry course and was so enamored that he switched careers. Today he's in charge of the Academie pastry program begun by Mesnier and occasionally helps out at the White House kitchen.

Other colleagues remember how Mesnier loves to tease, to poke fun at himself, to play gentle practical jokes on others. One friend remembers the time Mesnier yelled "catch!" and tossed a fake egg to a White House staffer leading a tour through the kitchen.

And since his tiny pastry kitchen is just a few steps from the elevator, he's also a favorite with hungry White House staffers looking for a snack.

Mesnier's biggest asset, however, and one that has undoubtedly endeared him to each succeeding administration, says former White House chef Frank Ruta, is his openness to new ideas and to change.

"Not too many people realize how much research he does, looking for new ideas," says Ruta, who cooked for the First Family from 1979 to 1987 and counts Mesnier as a mentor. "He and Franette put in a tremendous amount of research to make sure everything they do makes sense, is appropriate and shows off the First Family. That's why he's so successful. He gets the big picture."

A RECIPE FROM THE WHITE HOUSE KITCHEN

SPICED FRUIT BARS

(Makes 90 bars)

Here's baking in the age of the Internet: This holiday treat is one of half a dozen recipes currently featured on the White House Web site (www.whitehouse.gov).

1 pound sugar

6 1/2 ounces (1 1/2 sticks plus 1 tablespoon) unsalted butter, at room temperature

3/4 cup molasses

Pinch of salt

1 teaspoon lemon rind
1 teaspoon mace

1 1/2 teaspoons cinnamon

1 tablespoon baking soda dissolved in 1/3 cup water

4 eggs

6 cups bread flour

1 scant cup sliced almonds

3 ounces currants

2 ounces candied lemon peel

2 ounces candied orange peel

4 1/2 ounces semisweet chocolate

Nonpareils or other cookie sugar for garnish

In a mixing bowl, cream together the sugar and butter, then add the molasses, salt, lemon rind, mace and cinnamon and combine thoroughly. Add the dissolved baking soda and the eggs. Gradually mix in the bread flour. Stir in the almonds, currants and candied lemon and orange peels. Cover and refrigerate overnight.

Preheat the oven to 350 degrees.

Shape 6 logs (about 13 inches long by 1 1/2 inches wide) and place them on cooking parchment, 4 inches apart. Bake at 350 degrees until firm (about 25 to 30 minutes). Allow to cool.

Melt the chocolate in a double boiler or microwave, then brush it over the top of each spiced fruit loaf. Let cool briefly then decorate with nonpareils while the chocolate is still sticky. Allow to dry, then cut each log into 15 slices.

SHARING A FEW WHITE HOUSE SECRETS

Unlike the White House pastry chefs, few home cooks are going to be whipping up 80,000 treats for holiday guests, and few have such cool labor-saving devices as a machine that rolls out cookie dough.

But Roland Mesnier and Franette McCulloch still have to cut out cookies one at a time, just like the rest of the us. As a result, they offer these tips on how to make your holiday baking process more efficient:

* Freeze cut-out unbaked sugar cookies on parchment-lined cookie sheets in the freezer. (Or freeze them flat on parchment paper in large air-tight plastic boxes.) Bake the day you need them.

* Make the sturdiest things first (like dried fruit bars or sugar cookies); save the most delicate things, like butter cookies that can go rancid, for last. Make them no more than a week ahead of when you need them.

* Always line your baking sheets with baking parchment. The cookies won't stick, the parchment will last for several batches, and you won't have to clean your baking sheets between batches.

THERE ARE NO FRUITCAKE JOKES AT THE WHITE HOUSE

Memo to the Russians: Send back our loaf pans.

White House pastry chef Roland Mesnier is very proud of the fruitcake he and assistant chef Franette McCulloch make each year for the thousands of Christmas visitors to the presidential homestead, but they say it would be even better if they had the heavy old-fashioned metal loaf pans they used to use.

The pans, which were a special size that's no longer available, were sent to Russia for a special dinner attended by President George Bush, "and the pans are still there," says Mesnier sadly.

"Now we have to use the disposable kind, and they heat unevenly. The outside [of the fruitcake] gets too brown too fast," he complains.

Even with the disposable pans, however, Mesnier's fruitcake just may make a believer out of diehard fruitcake haters.

"Ours is different," Mesnier stresses. "We use the best fruit in the world -- dried cherries, dried figs, fabulous candied pineapple. None of that green and red stuff."

"Those who have been at the White House fight for pieces of our fruit cake," McCulloch adds. And, indeed, their fruitcake is moist, fruity and -- thank goodness -- completely devoid of that treacly sweet "green and red stuff."

The White House fruitcake recipe is a work-in-progress, they note. Each year they discuss which new dried fruits to try. So far it's "yes" to dried apricots and pears, "no" to dried blueberries. "They tasted like sand," McCulloch grumbles.

The secret to good fruitcake, adds Mesnier, is to refrigerate the cake, covered, for its six months of aging. "Never freeze it and none of that put-it-in-the-closet stuff," he scolds. And forget using cheesecloth. It's not necessary, he says.

He also says it doesn't matter which liquor you pour over the cake as long as it's of good quality. He's tried Scotch, brandy and sherry and likes them all.

"But only Roland gets to pour them," McCulloch adds with a laugh. "He says it's all in the position of the thumb over the opening."

Two artists who created ornaments for the White House Christmas tree won't see their work on its branches.

The White House might have heeded the postal service's admonishment to mail early.

Because it didn't, an honor of a lifetime for at least two Tampa artists is also one of their biggest let-downs.

Diana Drake of Lutz and Susan Gott of Seminole Heights were among eight Tampa Bay area artists whose creations were chosen to hang on the White House Christmas tree. Invitations received in August announced their selection as official presidential tree decorators.

Drake, 39, blew a cobalt blue glass ball with delicate brass filigree. Gott, 38, designed a bright red-and-white striped glass ball with a "loop-de-loop" pleated pattern.

Earlier this week, their pride was compounded by a second invitation: a holiday tour of Bill and Hillary Clinton's home on Saturday.

But the short notice effectively grounded the two artists.

Drake can't imagine turning down such an invite, but she and her husband, also an artist, can't afford to go.

Air fare is costly during holidays, especially on such short notice, and a long train trip would be too much for her 10-month-old baby.

"We are struggling like everyone else," she said. "I hate to pass it up, though. It would be such a dream."

Drake is hoping a Santa, in the form of a travel agency or business, will

Gott was equally thrilled by the prospect of seeing her work inside the White House as part of the permanent Christmas collection.

"This administration supports artists so much," she said. "It would mean a great deal to get that recognition personally."

But with the short notice, she can't afford the trip, either.

Social Office intern Suzy Harrington said tour invitations are usually sent late. And like everyone else's mail this time of year, even invitations from the White House take longer.

White House officials expect a hefty crowd for the tours and plan to serve 18,000 shrimps and 250 gallons of eggnog. The artists who make it will see 2,352 one-of-a-kind ornaments adorning an 18+-foot Fraser fir in the Blue Room.

Interior designer Valerie Hill of Tampa is already on her way to Washington, D.C., said longtime friend Roberta Zamore. Zamore helped Hill and two other Tampa stitchers needlepoint a brightly wrapped gift featuring Socks, the first cat.

Zamore didn't get an invite since she wasn't the ornament designer, but she wouldn't have gone anyway.

"I don't like crowds."

Other area artists whose work will adorn the White House tree include needle-pointers Susan Fuxan and Pamela Cantley of Tampa and Laura Militzer Bryant and Kanella George of St. Petersburg; and glass artist Chuck Boux of St. Petersburg.

Anyone interested in helping Drake may call her at (813) 949-7076 or Gott at (813) 237-3473.

The invitation for last week's holiday happening at the White House came tied to a Corelle plate handpainted "For Santa" and piled with gingerbread cookies handmade in the White House kitchen plus a carton of lowfat milk. It was a hint at this year's theme of White House Christmas decorations: Santa's Workshop.

"We wanted to show Christmas through the eyes of a child," First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton told reporters at the press preview. Inside the White House itself, 23 trees, 486 feet of garland, 224 wreaths and at least 1,464 bows in burgundy and gold stand at attention after 60 volunteers spent four days festooning the president's house.

This year's official White House Christmas Tree, an 18 1/2-foot Fraser fir located in the Blue Room, is laden with 2,352 ornaments, including needlepoint and glass. This year's glitzy baubles by big-name fashion designers were whipped up by the likes of Oscar de la Renta, who made a handsome red jacket with matching scarf, and the firm of Joan & David, which included a pair of mini-boots for Santa.

More than 160,000 people are expected to view the decorations before they come down beginning Dec. 30. The least crowded time to see them is during the standard tours Tuesday to Saturday mornings, for which free tickets are required, a spokesman says. For specific tour information during the holiday season and on the annual (extremely crowded) candlelight tours offered Dec. 26, 27 and 29 from 5 p.m. to 7 p.m., call the White House Visitors Office 24-hour information line recording at 202-456-7041 or visit the White House Web site at www.whitehouse.gov and click on "Tour Information."

FIRST PAIR, STAFF ELVES OUTDO SELVES IN DEVOTION TO A CLAUS

WASHINGTON AND YOU think you have a lot of holiday chores.

How would you like to have to decorate 36 Christmas trees, untangle 47,950 lights, string 1,348 feet of pine garland, tie 1,464 bows, hang 244 wreaths, bake 80,000 pieces of cake and cookies, whip up 250 gallons of eggnog and address 300,000 cards?

Welcome to Santa's workshop south. Address: 1600 Pennsylvania Ave.

"I love Christmas. It's a great time of year," First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton enthused Wednesday, as she led reporters on the annual press preview of White House Christmas decorations.

Behind her, a corps of White House staffers and volunteers, looking a bit worse for wear after a week of nearly round-the-clock trimming, smiled. Once again, they had pulled off their annual bit of holiday magic.

The East Room, where President Clinton holds his press conferences, is a forest of Christmas trees aglow with burgundy ribbons and oversize gold balls. Fireplace mantels are topped with New York designer Christopher Radko's miniatures of Santa and his elves, getting ready for the big day.

It's hard to say which is the piece de resistance. Is it the 80-pound gingerbread house that White House pastry chef Roland Mesnier used blueprints to build and 10 pounds of chocolate goo to cement together? Or is it the spectacular Blue Room tree, topped with a "Socks in the Box" in honor of the First Cat and hung with 103 tiny, new Mr. and Mrs. Claus outfits that the First Lady commissioned from top designers?

"Some of them are a bit over the top," Hillary Clinton acknowledged.

Did she mean that plaid Bill Blass suit? James Purcell's orange satin number lined in fuschia? Oscar de la Renta's red plaid hunting jacket with toggle buttons and shearling collar? Richard Tyler's silver lizard skin suit?

Hillary who showed up for her tour in a seasonal but sensible emerald green tunic accented by a glittery Christmas tree brooch wasn't saying.

As for the red-velvet underwire bikini top and matching high-cut panty designed for Santa's wife by Los Angeles' Robin Piccone, the First Lady promised: "Mrs. Claus is going to start her diet right after Christmas."

Hillary said holiday preparations were launched last June, when volunteers nationwide began to create bows, ornaments and needlepoint designs for the White House.

But the Christmas chores are not quite wrapped up for the Clintons, who enjoy decorating their private residence themselves. This year, they'll wait for their daughter, Chelsea, a freshman at California's Stanford University, to return.

"Having her home will be special," Hillary said. "We will do some Christmas shopping and see some friends."

The President has a ritual of unwrapping ornaments with the First Daughter and quibbling about their placement on the tree, she said.

"Then my family starts coming in, and they help. It's something we like to do as a family," Hillary added.

But before the Clintons welcome their daughter, they will greet about 7,500 partygoers mostly Washington insiders and political donors expected to attend 15 White House soirees this holiday season.

On the menu: 18,000 pieces of shrimp, 250 gallons of potent eggnog, fruitcake, baby lamb chops and an assortment of homemade cookies, chocolate truffles, fruit tarts, and petits fours.

"We love parties" Hillary said. "Who's counting" the number of gatherings? she asked.

The Democratic National Committee is counting. The group, which finances the festivities, cut the number of celebrations from 22 to 15 and whittled the budget by $ 100,000 from last year.

Still, the $ 300,000 the cash-strapped DNC is coughing up for parties hardly qualifies as an austerity budget, especially when compared with Christmases past.

The first Christmas at the White House was celebrated by John Adams, who had just lost the 1800 election, and his family amid the wet plaster walls and half-open roof of the unfinished mansion.

And as recently as Dwight Eisenhower's administration, according to the National Trust for Historic Preservation's book "White House Christmas," Presidents had to cadge booze for their holiday parties from the U.S. Treasury Department's caches of confiscated bootleg liquor.

In the early days of the nation, White House Christmas celebrations were relatively intimate affairs for Pres>idents and their families.

But in recent years, the White House has become a holiday showcase. Between the private parties and the beefed-up schedule of public tours, chief usher Gary Walters estimated 160,000 people will see the White House in its 1997 Christmas splendor.

It also offers a prime opportunity for hundreds of artists to display their creations. More than 500 needlepointers and glassblowers accepted the First Lady's invitation to provide ornaments for this year's Christmas trees.

"I still remember the day I received the letter in the mail from the White House," said Ernest Porcelli of Brooklyn, one of 195 glass artists who was commissioned to make ornaments for the Blue Room tree. "I was in shock. . . . I still am."

Porcelli said his two ornaments are 6 inches in diameter. One has gold and red dots with "1997" blown into it; the other has a snowflake theme.

He had to agree not to make duplicates of the ornaments he crafted for the First Tree, but Porcelli doesn't mind.

"When you are invited to do work for the White House, you just go with the flow," he said from his Union Street studio. "It's an honor to have my work on display at the White House."

WASHINGTON -- "We wanted to see Christmas through the eyes of a child," Hillary Rodham Clinton said Wednesday, explaining how a Santa theme was chosen for this White House Christmas.

This year, 60 volunteers decked the halls (and 36 trees) with 224 wreaths, 1,464 bows and 47,950 lights.

The fanciest tree is always in the Blue Room. This year it's decorated with ornaments made by needlepoint artists, glass blowers and fashion designers. The last were asked to create a mini-outfit for Mr. or Mrs. Claus.

Among those sewing the elf-size clothes: Oscar de la Renta, Isaac Mizrahi, Donna Karan, Tommy Hilfiger, Oleg Cassini and Bill Blass. The ensembles are "quite imaginative," Clinton laughed. "Some even a little over the top."

The best gift won't arrive until closer to the holiday. Chelsea "was home for Thanksgiving, and she'll be home again for Christmas," her mom said. "That's something we're very much looking forward to."
