THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

Dear Representative Lewis:

Thank you for your letter expressing concern about the role our troops are playing in Somalia. I could not be more proud of our American servicemen and women in Somalia. They are making an extraordinary humanitarian contribution in trying circumstances. I do not believe that they should be withdrawn at this time.

There are approximately 4,000 US troops in UNOSOM II out of a current total of 20,000. This is significantly down from the 28,000 US troops that were in Somalia in January. Most of the remaining US personnel are providing logistical support but there is also a US Quick Reaction Force available to assist other UNOSOM II troops, if necessary.

Our troops have been instrumental in bringing peace and hope to the vast majority of Somalis. American forces have been crucial to the increase in order and stability throughout the country, which has enabled the UN to continue and extend relief activities. As a result, there is greater calm and security in such important cities as Kismayo and Baidoa than at any time in recent months. In many places, the Somali people are also making significant progress in establishing representative political institutions.

Only in parts of Mogadishu has the security situation deteriorated. This is due to the violence directed by the brutal warlord Aideed. I do not believe that the appropriate response is to withdraw in the face of adversity. The UN has a vital humanitarian and peace-building mission to fulfill. We must not allow a self-aggrandizing warlord to flout the will of the international community and deny food and peace to the people of Somalia.

I appreciate your letter and hope we can continue our historic efforts to restore hope to the people of Somalia.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Tom Lewis

President William Clinton

Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President:

I am writing to express my concern over the recent events in Somalia, and to request that U.S. troops be removed from that region.

The original purpose of this mission has been completed. Food is no longer being used on a massive scale as a weapon against innocent Somalis, and international relief agencies have access to remote areas of Somalia.

Initially, many Americans had concerns that there were no vital U.S. interests at stake. While there was support for a short-term, well defined humanitarian mission, it has, unfortunately, become much more.

Mr. President, it has become clear that United States' military intervention has become counterproductive. Although cloaked in the guise of an international effort, it is primarily the United States military which has now become bogged down in an effort to "disarm Mogadishu", a mission which goes far beyond our original intent. As a result, the wrath of the Somali people falls squarely on the United States of America, and not on the United Nations, which is directing this ill-defined mission.

It is only a matter of time until American troops are killed while undertaking a mission which should be a matter for U.N. Peacekeeping forces. Allowing the United Nations, with its dubious record on endeavors such as this, to create a situation which puts U.S. troops in jeopardy is both dangerous and unwise.

Given these circumstances, it is frustrating to witness Somali demonstrators burn the American flag in contempt while the United Nations, which controls this effort, stands by idly. Therefore, I believe all American troops should be withdrawn from Somalia.

Sincerely,

Tom Lewis
Member of Congress

Disunity Hampering U.N. Somalia Effort

By DONATELLA LORCH

Special to The New York Times

MOGADISHU, Somalia, July 11 — Disarray in the United Nations military operation here is fueling instability in the city and hampering relief efforts, United Nations military officials say.

They say that troop contingents are following orders from their capitals and not from the United Nations Central Command, and that concern about casualties is making commanders reluctant to mount major operations in Mogadishu.

The officials say that in the last few weeks the authority of the United Nations military command has been undermined by an Italian general who has undertaken operations unilaterally, without informing United Nations officials, and who continues to negotiate with supporters of a fugitive Somali clan leader as the United Nations tries to isolate him.

A Share of Command

Italian military officials acknowledge that there have been disagreements arising from different nations' respective tactics. Tension has also grown as the Italians have asked for one of the top three military positions and insist that they will get it, but senior United Nations officials say they have been repeatedly refused. The overall military commander is Gen. Cevik Bir, a Turk. The deputy commander is an American and the chief of staff is a Pakistani.

Italian military officials have accused the United Nations command here of not cooperating with the Italian troops and have said the operation is run entirely by the United States military.

"We have a lot of national capitals calling shots," said a senior official.

Officials say many governments committed troops expecting the mission in Somalia to be solely a relief operation and are now unwilling to put their troops at risk in an enforcement mission. The deepening rifts and the increasing independence of each contingent is significantly slowing down military and humanitarian operations in the capital, United Nations and relief officials say.

Although United Nations soldiers have recently resumed limited patrols and checkpoints, security in Mogadishu continues to deteriorate. The patrols are the first highly visible military presence in Mogadishu since June 17, when the United Nations mounted a large ground operation to destroy the power base of a clan leader, Gen. Mohammed Farah Aidid, who has since gone into hiding.

U.N. troops take orders from their national capitals.

The United Nations says General Aidid is responsible for an ambush of Pakistani troops on June 5 in which 24 soldiers were killed.

But General Aidid's supporters still control areas of the city. In some neighborhoods today, Somalis were armed with assault rifles. Eight United Nations soldiers were wounded in two days, and Somali gunmen, occasionally using mortars, have besieged the United Nations headquarters.

Movement in and out of the compound is mostly limited to helicopters, and all United Nations soldiers are now required to wear their flak jackets within the compound.

Pakistani and Italian troops, about 5,000 soldiers, are the backbone of the security force and they have also suffered the heaviest casualties. Twenty-six Pakistanis and 3 Italians have been killed, and dozens wounded. The Pakistanis say they are waiting for armored cars and the Italians insist on negotiating with the Somalis before taking part in operations, officials say.

"The Pakistanis and the Italians won't go out there because someone in Islamabad and Rome said don't go out there and lose more troops," said Michael McDonough, head of the relief group Irish Concern. "There is no central command here. People are doing what their governments tell them to."

Stress on Negotiations

Italian officers say the only way to achieve peace and to continue the relief operation is to negotiate with Somalis like General Aidid's supporters: not to attack.

The United Nations will not negotiate with General Aidid's forces.

The Italian military officials say that because of their close ties to Somalia, a former Italian colony, they have a special understanding and relationship with Somalis.

Gen. Bruno Lol, the Italian commander, rarely comes to command meetings.

At times, the independence almost proved disastrous. On July 2, about 800 Italian soldiers were ambushed by Somalis just after they completed a weapons search. Three Italians were killed and 30 wounded.

Associated Press

An American and a Pakistani soldier searching for weapons yesterday in Mogadishu.

After two hours of heavy fighting, the Italian commander called for support from the Americans. Until then, the United Nations central command did not know of the Italian operation.

Relief officials say that the Italians are the only part of the United Nations force that is regularly communicating with Somali factions here, and that this is winning the trust of many Somalis who are suspicious of the United Nations.

And General Loi, unlike other United Nations commanders, is very visible.

When the general and his troops returned to where they had been ambushed, they were thronged by many jeering Somalis but also many who were cheering.

General Loi walked among the crowd, and then addressed the Somalis with a microphone in hand.

"Today, we've established the principle that we can negotiate," he said. "We need to make an effort of good will. It is necessary for both sides to stop shooting."

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

Dear Representative Roth:

Thank you for your letter expressing concern about our troops in Somalia.

As you know, there are approximately 4,000 US troops out of a current total of 20,000 in UNOSOM II. This is significantly down from the 28,000 US troops that were in Somalia in January. Most of these remaining US personnel are providing logistical support but there is also a US Quick Reaction Force available to assist other UNOSOM II troops, when necessary.

American forces have been instrumental in bringing about order and stability throughout the country, which has in turn enabled the UN to continue and extend relief activities. As a result, there is greater calm and security in such important cities as Kismayo and Baidoa than at any time in recent months. In many places, the Somali people are also making significant progress in establishing representative political institutions.

Only in parts of Mogadishu has the security situation deteriorated. This is due to the violence directed by the brutal warlord Aideed. I do not believe that the appropriate response is to withdraw in the face of adversity. The UN has a vital mission to fulfill. We must not allow a self aggrandizing warlord to flout the will of the international community and deny food and peace to the people of Somalia.

I appreciate receiving your letter and I share your concern for our servicemen and women in Somalia. They are making an extraordinary humanitarian contribution under sometimes trying circumstances. While I continue to believe that we should not withdraw our forces at this time, I will ensure that they have our full support as they continue their historic efforts to restore hope to the people of Somalia.

Sincerely,

The Honorable Toby Roth

The Honorable William J. Clinton
President of the United States
The White House
1600 Pennsylvania Avenue, NW
Washington, D.C. 20500

Dear Mr. President,

I share your sadness at the loss of our four servicemen in Somalia. They and their families have made the supreme sacrifice in the service of their country.

When President Bush, with your assent, sent our forces into Somalia, it was with noble intentions. At the very beginning, however, I questioned this open-ended commitment. We must have a certain date when we will bring our military commitment in Somalia to an end. This is the only formula for a rational policy.

Now our troops have become daily targets of the rogue factions present in Somalia. Rather than being seen as saviours, they have become symbols of intervention for use in the warlords' propaganda efforts.

I believe it is time to reassess our purpose in that nation. We have more than done our part, and it is time for the United Nations to assert its authority and take over all aspects of the operation. I encourage you to act quickly and bring home our troops before further lives are lost.

I look forward to your response to this critical situation.

Sincerely,
