North Carolina Rural Broadband Event - Draft April 20, 2000

Message points

- High-speed (broadband) Internet access is critical to the economic prosperity and quality of life in rural America. Broadband can bring economic development, distance learning, and telemedicine to the most isolated rural community.
- Today, broadband services are either not available in rural communities or are much more expensive than in urban areas.
- The President will highlight public and private commitments that will help accelerate the deployment of broadband networks to isolated rural communities.
- President is travelling to North Carolina because the state has made this one of their top issues for rural economic development, as part of the Rural Prosperity Task Force.

Sequence of events

- President does a tour of Remote Data Systems - a small, 11-person company that produces equipment used for environmental monitoring. Company has sales of just over $1 million. RDS is 3 miles outside of Whitesville.
 - Currently, the company only has a "narrowband" connection to the Internet because broadband is too expensive. If they had a broadband connection -- their engineers would take Web-based courses over the Internet as opposed to driving 2 hours to NC state, they would sell not only the environmental monitoring equipment but analyze the data for their customers, etc.
- President sees brief (5 -10 minute) demo of high-speed wireless technology, using Qualcomm equipment. Demo could be downloading a 3-D model of a part that RDS needs -- could have that side-by-side with a PC with a narrowband connection.
- President has roundtable with:
 - Governor Hunt
 - Erskine Bowles (moderator)
 - NC small businesses
 - CEOs and senior execs doing deliverables
 - Members of Congress
- President does speech in Whitesville.

Potential Deliverables

1. Rural Utility Service (part of U.S. Department of Agriculture) will expand its $670 million telecommunications loan program so that companies can use it to deploy broadband services. Currently, it is limited to companies that agree to provide basic voice service. Change will be made through regulation later this summer.
2. NSF will commit $10 million of its FY2001 funding for research into broadband technologies -- with an emphasis on the needs of rural America.
3. NTIA and RUS will release a report on broadband in rural America. Report was requested by 10 rural Senate Democrats last year.
4. Qualcomm will commit to providing wireless broadband in 8 rural communities (100 PCs in schools, libraries, community technology centers in each community)
5. MCI/Worldcom will commit to rolling out its broadband wireless service in 3 communities in the South.
6. Red Hat (a North Carolina-based Linux software company) will provide free training to 100 rural small businesses in the use of its software.
7. Skybridge -- provider of broadband 2-way satellite service -- is willing to provide 500 free connections to rural areas for one year worth $2 million -- but service will not be deployed until 2003.
8. Other possibilities as well.

Potential areas of controversy

- Everyone agrees that broadband is a good thing - but different views on how to do it, and complicated interest group politics.
- Governor Hunt's Task Force has called for tax on NC phone bills to help pay for high-speed access in poorest rural counties. NC local telephone companies (GTE, Bell South, Sprint) are arguing both that there is no problem -- and that the fund that Governor Hunt is proposing isn't big enough.

Dear Mr. President:

Last month, it was announced that, as part of the New Markets Initiatives, Chicago, Illinois is under consideration for the upcoming Digital Divide tour, scheduled for April 10, 2000. I would like to take this opportunity to recommend that you include the Williams Elementary School in the tour.

Williams Elementary School, a Chicago Public School, is located in the midst of several public housing projects - one of which is named after Harold Ickes, Sr. The school serves a 100 percent minority population, 97 percent of which falls below the national poverty line. Yet, despite the economic disadvantages, the school has made amazing strides toward integrating new technology into the school curriculum and the learning process. The school's technology coordinator estimates that fewer than 50 percent of the student population has telephone service at home, much less computer service or internet access.

In 1997, the State of Illinois awarded a Technology Learning Challenge Grant to create a technology community center in the school, which benefitted not only the students, but also the underserved families in the surrounding projects. In 1998, an e-rate grant for $683,000 was awarded to the school. The grant was used to wire every classroom for internet as well as interactive video (distance learning capabilities). Their home page has become the destination for information on Dr. Daniel Hale Williams, the school's namesake, and the African-American black heart surgeon. When principal White started at Williams in 1997, there were seven computers in the school to serve 900 students. Now there are six computers in every classroom and all are internet ready.

Williams is an e-rate success story and a perfect example of a school taking the initiative to integrate Technology within the classroom and to explore innovative public-private initiatives. Both Commonwealth Edison and the Chicago Board of Options donated computers to supplement the computers that grants have enabled them to purchase. Through a unique partnership with the University of Chicago and the Illinois Institute of Technology, a college intern is provided to help integrate and maintain the technology in the classrooms at no charge to the school.

Working in partnership with IIT and the Ada McKinley social service agency, Williams is creating two new computer labs (64 computers) with software, its own server and training resources in the school to be used for community job training before and after school hours.

Mr. President, a visit by you to the Williams Public School in Chicago, would serve to highlight the many efforts and innovations that have made Williams a success through the efforts of small businesses, unique local partnerships and community involvement.

As always, I appreciate your deep commitment to this nation's public schools and your interest in bridging the Digital Divide.

With kindest regards, I am

BY FACSIMILE

April 5, 2000

The Honorable Bobby L. Rush
Member of Congress, First District of Illinois
2416 Rayburn House Office Building
Washington, D. C. 20515

Dear Congressman Rush:

Thank you for hosting the recent visit of Federal Communications Commission Chairman William Kennard to the South Side of Chicago. As I noted during the Town Hall Meeting with Chairman Kennard, the Charles A. Hayes Family Investment Center is in the forefront of bridging the digital divide. Therefore, we believe it most fitting for President Bill Clinton to include a visit to the Hayes Center in his upcoming New Markets Tour segment in Chicago.

Since the Hayes Center's opening on Labor Day in 1998, we have successfully pursued our mission to open the new industrial frontier of information technology to both adults and youth from low-income families. There is no other institution in the Chicago metropolitan area and, I have learned, the entire country that offers the range of high tech educational and training opportunities provided at the Hayes Center for our society's least advantaged members.

We have truly taken to heart President Bill Clinton's observation that, "Technology is the engine of economic growth." The cornerstone of the Charles A. Hayes Family Investment Center is our Arsenia A. Randolph Technology Learning Center, named for a legendary community activist and long-time Chicago Housing Authority Board President. The Technology Learning Center (TLC) houses a 50-station computer laboratory, with all of the computers constructed by Chicago Housing Authority residents under direction of the Hayes Center staff. Training in computer construction, repair and maintenance is just one exemplary facet of the program at our center.

To assist in providing high quality technical training to community residents, we have forged successful partnerships with four established leaders in the computer industry: MicroEndeavors, Inc. (for Microsoft training); IDL Technologies and Cisco Systems (for network training); and WinStar (for Internet access and related telecommunications services). With our partner MicroEndeavors, the Hayes Center received a Microsoft Solutions Provider Award in October 1999.

The Technology Learning Center's regular program of instruction includes Basic Computer Operations; Microsoft Word, Excel, Access, and PowerPoint classes ranging from the basic to the advanced level; and TABE (Test of Adult Basic Education) and GED (General Equivalency Diploma) preparation using the Invest Destination 2.0 individualized learning program. Nearly 1,000 community residents received training through these programs in 1999.

It is most noteworthy that the Hayes Center is the site of the only community based Regional Cisco Systems Networking Academy in the Chicago metropolitan area. Completion of the four semester course results in a CCNA Certification (Cisco Certified Network Associate).

In October 1999, from a field of 750 applicants, the Hayes Center was selected as one of only 40 organizations in the nation to receive a three-year Community Technology Center Grant from the U.S. Department of Education to establish satellite technology centers at the Grand Boulevard Federation and at three Boys and Girls Clubs serving public housing residents: Robert Taylor, James Jordan (Homer Homes) and Eisenberg (ABLA Homes). Working in collaboration with the Chicago Consortium for Higher Education, we have secured funding from the Illinois Department of Commerce and Community Affairs to construct a state-of-the-art Distance Learning/Video Conferencing/Multi-Media Facility. We have also partnered with Chicago State University to provide computer training to participants in a $5 million U. S. Department of Labor welfare-to-work program for victims of domestic violence.

Of course, the full story of the Hayes Center can best be told in person. Our 30,200 square-foot, fully modernized facility includes a multi-purpose room that can seat 300 persons. Hosting special events is a major Hayes Center activity, and we welcome the opportunity to host the very special event of a visit by the President of the United States of America.

Thank you for your assistance in arranging President Clinton's tour of the Charles A. Hayes Family Investment Center. Please contact me should you require any additional information.

Sincerely,

Zenobia Johnson-Black
President and CEO

Subject: pipeline safety

The Administration's pipeline safety bill was introduced yesterday by Sens. Hollings and Sarbanes. It is S. 2409. Shuster and Oberstar may introduce it on the House side today.

According to DOT, Sen. McCain introduced his own pipeline safety bill yesterday, but I have not been able to find it myself.

Thanks.
