Boys and Girls Club at Central Ward Newark
with Ray Chambers

DATE:	August 12, 1993
TIME:	3:30 - 5:00
LOCATION:	Newark, NJ
From:	Susan Stroud

I. PURPOSE

You will visit two Boys and Girls Clubs that are part of the Newark Summer of Service program. The Broadway club will be your first stop. Ray Chambers and Jim Mustacchia, Newark SOS program director, will accompany you.

II. BACKGROUND

About 10 SOS participants are working at the Broadway and Central Ward Boys and Girls Clubs. Their activities include tutoring and teaching swimming and drama. At one of the clubs they have begun to develop a library. The visit will consist of watching the corps members in action. No "roundtable discussions" are planned (Susan suggested that it would be valuable for you to primarily focus on observing the participants).

III. PARTICIPANTS

SUGGESTED NATIONAL SERVICE INSERT
FLOOD RELIEF BILL SIGNING CEREMONY
AUGUST 12, 1993

[ASSUMES THAT NO HONOREES ARE FROM CONSERVATION CORPS, VISTA, ETC. and that no members from such groups are present in audience -- Josh King is now examining latter possibility; may later requiring some speech reference.]

As impressive as these individual stories are, they are also representative of thousands of other efforts in the face of this disaster. Together, they reflect our new commitment to the old values of national renewal and community change.

The pioneers of the national service movement have been critical to relief efforts: Even before this Bill became law, the Commission on National and Community Service made emergency relief grants to state and local service corps efforts in the various states effected by flooding.

Similarly, volunteers from VISTA and the Older American Volunteer Programs are coordinating the efforts of hundreds of temporary volunteers staffing emergency shelters and food distribution centers, sandbagging and now helping the clean-up efforts -- channelling the individual impulses to help out one's neighbors that we have honored today.

Now, through this Bill, these efforts will expand. A significant portion of our flood relief will flow through service activities, both federally-operated programs and local initiatives. They will represent models of the types of community assistance national service can provide.

That is why our national service program is so important. The Senate is scheduled to provide the program's final approval when they return from recess in a few weeks, finally unleashing the creative energy and talent of tens of thousands of Americans on the full range of challenges our country confronts.

This year, the Midwest faced devastating floods; last year, the Southeast was flattened by hurricanes. Nature's power challenges us all at regular intervals. And when it does, national service can help us rise to the challenge. I want to see a Rapid Relief Response Corps, perhaps jointly sponsored by the Red Cross, FEMA and a group of local fire departments. In quieter times, trained young people could help with hiker rescues in our parklands, or assist paramedics in our inner city emergency rooms, or support volunteer fire departments. And when a major disaster struck, they could rapidly be deployed at the site of trouble, to coordinate the efforts of less-trained but vitally needed volunteers.

Meeting with Ray Chambers

DATE: August 12, 1993
TIME: 5:00-6:00 pm
LOCATION: Newark, NJ
From: Susan Stroud

I. PURPOSE

The purpose of this meeting is to discuss several offers of assistance Ray has made regarding 1) creation of a trust for the Corporation, 2) developing a business plan, and 3) a marketing plan.

II. BACKGROUND

On the return trip from New Orleans, Ray had a long conversation with Susan Stroud about several of the business aspects of the Corporation. He offered to help in a variety of ways: 1) Ray is willing to look at any business plan produced and make suggestions; 2) He is excited about the endowment idea and believes that doing it as an "PRI" would "absolutely work." He also liked the idea of the national stamp and has some other ideas. He would bring in a "blue ribbon" team of investment managers to help us with it; 3) He also offered to help with the creation of a marketing strategy. He has brought onto his staff a "brilliant, creative" young guy who is bored doing a Proctor and Gamble account. He talked about being willing to lend him to us for a few months.

Generally, Ray is of the opinion that we should not try to do all of this thinking and planning internally - that we figure out what we need and then get the best possible people to help us out. Remember, this is the White House - we can and should get the best. This frees us to do more of the strategic planning, etc.
