"I challenge a new generation of young Americans to a season of service: to act on your idealism by helping troubled children, keeping company with those in need, reconnecting our torn communities."

PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON
JANUARY 20, 1993

"...That's why I want to make this summer a summer of service, when young people can not only serve their communities, but build a foundation for a new national effort... Some of them will tutor. Some will work on programs to immunize young children from preventable childhood diseases. Some will help to develop and run recreational centers or reclaim urban parks from dealers and debris. Some will counsel people a few years younger than themselves to keep them out of gangs and into good activities. And everyone will learn about serving our country and helping our communities."

" I challenge a new generation of young Americans to a season of service: to act on your idealism by helping troubled children, keeping company with those in need, reconnecting our torn communities."

President Bill Clinton
January 20, 1993

"...That's why I want to make this summer a summer of service, when young people can not only serve their communities, but build a foundation for a new national effort...Some of them will tutor. Some will work on programs to immunize young children from preventable childhood diseases. Some will help to develop and run recreational centers or reclaim urban parks from dealers and debris. Some will counsel people a few years younger than themselves to keep them out of gangs and into good activities. And everyone will learn about serving our country and helping our communities."

President Bill Clinton
March 1, 1993

The spirit of service moves Orah Fireman, a graduate of Wesleyan College. As a sophomore in high school, she worked with disadvantaged children in upstate New York. That experience changed her life. And during her high school and college years, she continued to work with children. And now that she is out of college, she has begun what will probably be a lifetime of service by working at a school for emotionally disturbed children in Boston. She wants other people to have the opportunity to serve, and she wrote this: Service work teaches responsibility and compassion. It fights alienation by proving to young people that they can make a difference. There is no lesson more important than that.

Well, there are stories like this in this room and all across America. And we're going to create thousands of more of them through national service. We'll work with groups with proven track records to serve their community, giving them the support they need. And if you have more good ideas, if you're entrepreneurs of national service, we'll let you compete for our form of venture capital -- develop new programs to serve your neighbors. That's how we want the national service program to grow every year -- rewarding results, building on success, and bubbling up from the grassroots energy and compassion and intellect of America.

I don't want service to wait while this potential is wasted. That's why I want to make this summer a summer of service, when young people can not only serve their communities, but build a foundation for a new national effort. I've asked Congress to invest in and I'm asking young people to participate in a special effort in national service and leadership training just this summer. We are going to recruit about 1,000 young people from every background -- from high school dropouts to college graduates, to send to an intensive leadership training program for national service at the beginning of the summer.

Then we'll ask them to work on one of our country's most urgent problems, helping our children who are in danger of losing their God-given potential. Some of them will tutor. Some will work on programs to immunize young children from preventable childhood diseases. Some will help to develop and run recreational centers or reclaim urban parks from dealers and debris. Some will counsel people a few years younger than themselves to keep them out of gangs and into good activities. And everyone will learn about serving our country and helping our communities.

At the end of this summer, we'll bring all these people together for several days of debriefing and training, and then they'll all join in a youth service summit. I will attend the meeting and I expect to listen a lot more than I talk. I'll ask leaders from Congress, from business, labor, religious, and community groups to attend the youth service summit, too. We'll give those who serve the honor they deserve, and we'll learn a lot more about how to build this national service program. And from the thousand pioneers of this summer, I want the national service to grow 100-fold in the next four years. (Applause.)

But even when hundreds of thousands are serving, I want to maintain the pioneer spirit of this first few months,

A Summer of Service

Programs to immunize over 5,000 children in Philadelphia, to build the self-esteem and academic skills of hundreds of middle schoolers in South Central Los Angeles, and to test for lead paint poisoning in thousands of low-income New York homes are a few of the programs chosen by the Commission as sites for America's first Summer of Service.

The Summer of Service program is President Clinton's first national service initiative and will involve nearly 1,500 young people in eight weeks of community service in sixteen programs around the country.

Summer of Service programs will run in Atlanta, Baltimore, Boston, Oakland/East Bay, Los Angeles, New Orleans, Newark, New York City, Philadelphia, Delaware (Ohio), and Red Lake (Minn.).

All programs will address needs of children, providing services in the areas of health, education, public safety and the environment.

In exchange for service, participants will receive minimum wage stipends and an education or job training award at the end of the program. Participants will include young people ages 17 - 25 from diverse ethnic, economic, and educational backgrounds.

The Summer of Service is being administered by the Commission in collaboration with the White House Office of National Service.

The sixteen programs are innovative partnerships that team universities with local government and community organizations, youth corps, public schools, health care groups, and environmental agencies.

The programs have been selected for their quality, their clearly defined and measurable effects in addressing important children's issues, and their potential to develop service leaders for the future.

In addition to meeting vital community service needs, the programs will serve as a foundation for an effective, high-quality network of national service.

The Summer of Service will kick off June 20, when all participants will gather at the Treasure Island Naval Base in the San Francisco Bay Area for a week of service and leadership training with leaders from the military and service programs such as the Peace Corps, Outward Bound, and Public Allies.

The training will provide participants with a foundation of skills and knowledge that will enhance their effectiveness in communities this summer and will inspire them for a lifetime of service. Participants will complement their training in leadership and community issues by engaging in community service projects benefiting the Bay Area.

For participants who wish to continue serving beyond the summer, the Commission will assist participants in finding year-round, full-time service placements. To build upon the enthusiasm and creativity of the summer programs, the Commission will award up to fifteen Service Entrepreneurial Awards for Change to participants with plans to develop new, innovative year-round service programs.

The Summer of Service was initiated by the White House Office of National Service and the Commission as the first step toward the President's vision for a national service program which builds the American community, expands educational opportunities, and rewards individual responsibility. ♦

While Summer of Service participants will be providing benefits for thousands of children, they also will be preparing themselves to become national service leaders for the future.

Summer of Service

Los Angeles, California "Building Up"

One of two Los Angeles programs, "Building Up" is a collaboration among five universities and colleges, twenty-eight community organizations, and twenty secondary and elementary schools. The program will place 150 young people in service to traditionally under-served Los Angeles neighborhoods in East and South Central L.A. and Koreatown.

Service activities include tutoring, reconstructing school yards and neighborhood lots, facilitating crime prevention and drug awareness programs, and conducting health education workshops.

Los Angeles, California "It's About Health"

Under the University of California at Los Angeles's School of Nursing, the "It's About Health" program will train 50 high school and college students to provide primary health care services to over 1,000 children and their families.

Participants will attend university classes in basic science and specialized health education and will deliver services in needy neighborhoods.

Services activities include conducting health assessments, surveying health care utilization, and leading workshops on personal health care and substance abuse prevention.

Oakland, California East Bay Conservation Corps

The East Bay Conservation Corps will collaborate with Stanford University's Haas Center for Public Service and the University of California at Berkeley to train and organize 250 young people to meet health and education needs of over 15,000 at-risk children in the East Bay Area.

Program participants will work with public schools and community nonprofit organizations to tutor and mentor children in Berkeley, Oakland and East Palo Alto. Participants also will serve with health outreach programs to provide immunization, patient support, health promotion, and disease prevention services for the children and their families.

Atlanta, Georgia Clark Atlanta University Greater Atlanta Conservation Corps

One of two Atlanta-area projects, this partnership between Clark Atlanta University and the Greater Atlanta Conservation Corps will involve 50 participants in addressing education needs of at-risk children.

Participants and an additional 200 volunteer middle and high school students will form "education crews" serving in summer schools and camps to lead hands-on learning projects, conduct conflict resolution workshops, and tutor refugee children in English as a second language.

Atlanta, Georgia Hands on Atlanta

Hands on Atlanta will engage a 50-member youth service corps to serve with the College Park Elementary School, a year-round school located in a low-income, inner-city neighborhood.

Corps members' activities include serving as teachers' assistants, rebuilding school grounds, and renovating an adjacent public housing authority complex which is home to most of College Park Elementary School's students.

New Orleans, Louisiana New Orleans Summerbridge

New Orleans Summerbridge will conduct an academic summer program to prepare at-risk sixth- and seventh-graders for middle school. One hundred participants will work with 360 New Orleans middle school students in activities designed to increase academic skills, self-esteem and confidence.

In addition to preparing young people for academic challenges, the program is designed to inspire participants to enter the professional fields of education and science.

Baltimore, Maryland MPOWER

MPOWER, a collaboration among the University of Maryland at College Park, the Maryland Service Learning Alliance, the local youth corps Civics Works, and dozens of community-based organizations, will involve 75 participants in services to at-risk children in Baltimore.

Services will include tutoring and mentoring, health education programs, renovation of school recreation centers, and education-focused day camps.

Boston, Massachusetts City Year

One of two Boston-area programs, the urban youth corps City Year will engage 75 corps members to lead summer education programs for hundreds of inner-city elementary students. Corps members also will tend to a neglected urban garden system in Roxbury.

In collaboration with the Boston Immunization Action Plan, the corps will conduct a health outreach campaign to increase the availability and access to vaccines for up to 3,000 families.

Boston, Medford and Roxbury, Massachusetts Tufts University

This grant will support a new Tufts University corps of undergraduate and graduate students and young people from the Medford, Boston and greater Roxbury communities.

Corps members will serve with the Boston Department of Health and Hospitals outreach program to encourage children and their families to use available community health services. Members also will tutor sixth-grade students in Boston public schools, restore school yards, and turn vacant lots into neighborhood parks.

Red Lake, Minnesota Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians

Elders of the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians will recruit 50 Summer of Service participants for this community-wide effort to meet educational and environmental needs of Chippewa youth.

Program activities will provide education in cultural history, environmental science, and natural resource management as participants build a hiking trail, restore a park and river shoreline, and develop a nature study area for local elementary schools. They also will coordinate a symposium for the entire community on such issues as employment opportunities, health care, law enforcement, and health services.

Newark, New Jersey Newark Summer of Service

This collaboration among four colleges, dozens of community agencies, the business sector, and local foundations will involve 200 participants serving side-by-side with over 650 volunteers. The program will provide thousands of hours in community services for over 14,000 children.

Participants will work with the Newark Police Department to disseminate anti-crime information; provide tutoring for at-risk children; restore housing; create parks and playgrounds; and assist local health clinics in addressing immunization and health education needs.

Harlem, New York Harlem Freedom Schools

One of three New York-area grants, the Harlem Freedom Schools Project will establish five one-room schoolhouses in Harlem and Williamsburg that will provide meals

COMMISSION ON NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE

National Service Demonstration Models

Subtitle D of the National and Community Service Act of 1990

Subtitle D of the National and Community Service Act was created to develop and support model national service programs that engage diverse citizens ages 17 and older in full- and part-time year-round service. The programs are diverse in geography, focus and design, ranging from crew- or team-based models concentrated in one community to individual placement models scattered throughout a multi-state region. All, however, are designed to meet locally identified human, educational, environmental or public safety needs that would otherwise go unaddressed. In short, the National Service Demonstration Models seek to demonstrate that diverse citizens can serve together to improve the quality of life for all Americans.

While a main objective is to deliver needed services that make a meaningful impact on communities, the models also seek to foster leadership skills and promote positive civic attitudes among the many, often intergenerational, participants who serve. In exchange for their full year, renewable commitment, full-time participants earn a modest living allowance and a $5,000 post-service scholarship (which may be applied for future educational or training expenses or to repay an existing federal student loan).

There are currently 15 programs operating or being developed in 18 states throughout the country. The following are brief descriptions of the models:

Models currently in operation:

• The Delta Service Corps Arkansas • Louisiana • Mississippi

The Delta Service Corps is a tri-state community development model operated by Arkansas, Louisiana and Mississippi. The Delta Corps will assign approximately 1000 full- and part-time participants (over a three year period) to a variety of community-based organizations, schools and public agencies in the lower Mississippi Delta counties and parishes to implement the recommendations developed by the citizens-based Lower Mississippi Delta Development Commission.

Participants of all ages and backgrounds are placed individually but gather regularly in county or parish teams to consult and coordinate their efforts and to develop and implement signature projects. Participants perform useful services in their communities, while developing the capacity of the communities to work together to address their own needs.

• The Peach Corps Georgia

The Georgia Peach Corps is a rural, crew-based and community-driven intergenerational corps that is operating in two Georgia counties. Both counties were identified on the basis of their participation in the Governor's "All Star" Community Betterment Program, in which they undertook a comprehensive community needs assessment. The 120 full-time participants are organized in 20 member teams, which rotate from education to human services to public works projects. Every Friday, the participants at each site gather together for leadership development, service learning and educational activities. All service projects are locally identified and selected by a community advisory board, composed of Peach Corps staff, participants and community members.

- Public Allies

Illinois

Public Allies will expand the spirit of service throughout the greater Chicago area by engaging diverse participants ages 17 to 30 in full-time national service. Participants--called "Allies"--will be individually placed in community based organizations focused on housing, health care, and youth development issues in the greater Chicago area. Participants will be organized into 10-member teams for leadership training and to develop and implement signature service projects. An innovative training program will result in an intensive leadership development experience for the Allies.

- The Kansas Health and Safety Extension Corps

Kansas

The State of Kansas will operate a public safety model that will address the shortage of critically needed emergency care in rural communities. Following extensive technical training, participants will be integrated into the existing emergency medical service (EMS) system as "EMS First Responders." They also will serve as community educators to train residents in CPR, First Aid and farm safety and to provide health and safety information to rural schools and public organizations.

- Volunteer Maryland!

Maryland

Volunteer Maryland is a state-wide "volunteer multiplier model". The project provides the link between the many people who want to volunteer but do not know how or where, with the many service organizations that lack the resources to recruit or manage volunteers successfully. Individually placed in Community based organizations, the participants develop and implement volunteer management structures, while recruiting volunteers to expand the service impact of their host site. Volunteer Maryland will revitalize the spirit of service throughout the state by engaging thousands of Marylanders in volunteering.

- City Year

Massachusetts

Boston's version of an "urban peace corps", City Year enlists young people of diverse backgrounds in a year of service to the city. While more than doubling in size, City Year has maintained high quality standards and has continued to have a major impact on civic spirit and citizen action throughout Boston. With Commission and private sector backing, City Year has undertaken innovations in program design by creating five mission-based divisions focusing on distinct service areas ranging from housing and homelessness to the needs of school-aged children.

- Health Careers Volunteer Program

Oklahoma

The State of Oklahoma has implemented a small career development/mentorship model that has matched up to 11 AFDC recipients with health care professionals in community-based health care organizations. Health care professionals provide training and mentoring aimed at helping the participants develop relevant educational and employment skills as they serve. The emphasis on mentorship, reflection and service-learning has resulted in participants gaining valuable insight into the health profession, while rendering much needed services to the community.

- The Pennsylvania Service Corps
Pennsylvania

The Pennsylvania Service Corps is something of a community service "officer corps." Engaging both full- and part-time participants, the program develops leadership skills through placements in community-based organizations to increase their service capacities while forging partnerships with other organizations with common interests. Participants, who are supported with an innovative training program known as the "Univesity in Dispersion," are assigned as coordinators of service-learning programs in schools, community service directors in post-secondary institutions, and similar posts in other community service programs.

- Language Link Service Project
Seneca Nation of Indians

In New York, the Seneca Nation of Indians, through their Language Link project, seeks to show how National Service can help to revitalize and preserve the Seneca language and culture. Tribal elders serve as mentors and teachers to young adult participants, who, in turn, provide needed health assistance and companionship. The model serves as a bridge between the generations, engaging both elders and youth in community building.

- Urban Schools Service Corps
New Jersey

In the spirit of creating "One New Jersey", the Commission will support the unification of cities and suburbs through the Urban Schools Service Corps. The model will integrate national service into the urban school reform efforts of New Jersey. Full-time participants will work in some of the state's poorest urban schools to help transform them into community centers, that will address the needs of both students and their families with activities that include after-school safe-havens and family literacy programs.

Models currently being developed:

- The Border Volunteer Corps
Arizona

With Commission support, the State of Arizona will plan and develop the Border Volunteer Corps (BVC), an environmental and community development initiative along the U.S.-Mexico border. In what planners call a "Border Peace Corps," the program will place participants in public and private non-profit community-based organizations devoted to improving the living conditions throughout the border region. The BVC plans to begin initial operations in Arizona next Spring and then eventually expand to include all four border states in a cooperative multi-state program.

- The Blackfeet Public Safety Corps
Blackfeet Tribe

The Blackfeet Tribe of Montana will develop a public safety model focused on emergency medical services and public safety education throughout the 1.5 million-acre Blackfeet reservation. Similar to the Kansas model, the program will integrate participants into the existing emergency medical system to provide needed emergency medical services and to provide public health and safety education.

- Michigan CARES
Michigan

With Commission support, the State of Michigan will further develop its regionally-based national service model, Michigan CARES (Communities Accessing Resources to Engage in Service). Regional teams of program developers will assist local community service action teams in developing service initiatives. Statewide coordination will ensure consistent quality standards, while community-based needs assessment and program planning will ensure local responsiveness and ownership.

- City Volunteer Corps
New York

With Commission support, New York's City Volunteer Corps will implement and evaluate a Community Leadership Program to supplement the existing corps program. Through an enhanced service learning curriculum, CVC will recruit and place a diverse cadre of young leaders on the front line of assessing community needs, identifying resources, planning projects, and providing services throughout the greater New York City area.

- Northwest Service Academy
Oregon/Washington

In an effort to address the needs of Pacific Northwest communities adversely affected by the declining timber industry, the states of Oregon and Washington, in partnership with the U.S. Forest Service will plan and implement the Northwest Service Academy (NWSA). The Academy will consist of a residential and non-residential leadership training program to engage diverse young people in addressing the needs of Northwest communities, ranging from environmental to school-based initiatives.

“I challenge a new generation of young Americans to a season of service: to act on your idealism by helping troubled children, keeping company with those in need, reconnecting our torn communities.”

PRESIDENT BILL CLINTON
JANUARY 20, 1993

“... That’s why I want to make this summer a summer of service, when young people can not only serve their communities, but build a foundation for a new national effort. . . . Some of them will tutor. Some will work on programs to immunize young children from preventable childhood diseases. Some will help to develop and run recreational centers or reclaim urban parks from dealers and debris. Some will counsel people a few years younger than themselves to keep them out of gangs and into good activities. And everyone will learn about serving our country and helping our communities.”
