Re: Havel's visit

Dear, Ms. Stanek:
Thank you for the invitation. ALA would like to have four individuals at the Sept. 16 event.

- Raits Eglitis, (b)(6) [008]
- Aivars Osvalds, (b)(6)
- Peteris Blumbergs, (b)(6)
- Ieva Bolsteins, (b)(6)

I understand that the number of guests is limited, so Mrs. Bolsteins is the first to delete from the list. Please call 301-340-8174 and let us know who can attend.

Sincerely,

Raits Eglitis

Re: Your list for state luncheon with President Havel; a few elected officials

Attached is a marked copy of the list you faxed me yesterday afternoon. Though I've written some numbers and corrected some spellings directly on the list, here is a summary of those changes and some additional names.

1. Captain Eugene Cernan
   The Cernan Corporation
   First Interstate Bank Building
   900 Town and Country Lane, Suite 300
   Houston, Tx 77024
   (713.827.9922)

2. Jan Novak (Jan is not a woman as your notes indicate!)
   300 N. Maple #12
   Oak Park, Ill 60302
   (708.383.2165)

3. Milos Forman won academy awards for Cuckoos Nest and Amadeus. Please note spelling of first name. Jan Novak co-wrote Forman's autobiography. He knows how to contact him. Forman is currently in California shooting a movie.

4. A couple of additions, since you were looking for Czech elected officials; don't know at what level you break these off.

   Mayor Ed Stachovic
   Mayor of Cedar Falls, Iowa (university community of appr. 35,000)
   City Hall
   220 Clay Street
   Cedar Falls, Iowa 50613
   (319.268.5118)

Subject: Havel

I have a couple of good lunch names:

1) Honorable Martha Layne Collins, former Governor in KY
she was and is a big Gore person!
She did alot for him in 88' and is the first and only woman Governor in KY; one of the few in the South

2) Barbara Blum
former CEO of Adams National Bank and a big Gore fan.....I think they would also consider Barbara a 'friend'.

Both of these are really great women. Martha Layne does alot of work now in international trade/commerce.

Barbara just sold her bank and is taking it easy for awhile.

Subject: State Visit by President Havel of the Czech Republic

THE WHITE HOUSE

Office of the Press Secretary
(Little Rock, Arkansas)

For Immediate Release July 17, 1998

STATEMENT BY THE PRESS SECRETARY

State Visit by President Havel of the Czech Republic

The White House is delighted to announce that President Vaclav Havel of the Czech Republic has accepted President Clinton's invitation to have a State Visit to Washington, September 15-18, 1998. This visit will recognize President Havel for his extraordinary contributions to the development of democracy and human rights in Central and Eastern Europe and throughout the world. We will also celebrate the Czech Republic's anticipated membership in NATO and the deepening of our ties as allies.

MEMORANDUM FOR CAPRICIA MARSHALL

FROM: GLYN T. DAVIES

SUBJECT: Guest List for State Dinner in Honor of Vaclav Havel, President of the Czech Republic

At Tab A is the NSC-proposed guest list for the State Dinner or other major social event in honor of President Vaclav Havel of the Czech Republic. This list assumes the possibility of a somewhat larger than normal State Visit event. We will be happy to trim it and differentiate among possible invitees once we have a better sense of your final plans.

PAVEL ŠTECHA

faith in the WORLD

The whole nature of our civilization might amount, simply, to the loss of God

BY VACLAV HAVEL

HUMANKIND TODAY IS WELL AWARE OF the spectrum of threats looming over its head. We know that the number of people living on our planet is growing at a soaring rate and that within a relatively short time we can expect it to total in the tens of billions. We know that it shall be almost impossible to feed so many people. We know that the already-deep abyss separating the planet's poor and rich could deepen further, and dangerously, because of this rapid population growth. We know how difficult it will be for people of various nationalities and cultures to coexist so crowded together. It is also commonly known that modern humankind has been destroying the environment on which its existence depends; that it is ever faster exhausting nonrenewable sources of energy and other riches of this planet; that its activities are contributing to global warming, to the buildup of the greenhouse effect and to the enlargement of holes in the ozone layer, and disturbing the balance of all ecosystems. We all know, too, about the danger into which humankind is heading by developing, producing and proliferating weapons of mass destruction. And finally, we know all about the current and expected future rise of social problems, crime, drug abuse and various forms of human alienation and frustration in the event of the further concentration of people in large agglomerations that destroy natural human communities and bonds.

Any one of us could certainly go on listing similar threats for a long time, describing them in more detail and in rich colors, explaining how deeply they are entwined. There is a paradox—a large one, yet typical for our era—in the fact that although contemporary humanity has been aware of these dangers, it does almost nothing to confront or avert them. I find it fascinating how preoccupied people are today with all kinds of catastrophic prognoses—is it not common, for example, that books containing impressive evidence of these disasters become bestsellers?—but how very little people take these into account in their everyday activities. Does not every schoolchild know today that the resources of this planet are limited and that if exhausted faster than recovered we are doomed? And still we continue in our ways and, moreover, do not even seem perturbed. Quite the contrary: Rising production is considered to be a state's main sign of success, not only in poor states where such sentiment could be justified, but also in wealthy ones, which are cutting the branch on which they sit with their ideology of indefinite and senseless growth.

It is not necessary to point out again the horrors that may be lying in wait if our global civilization does not change direction. Today, the most important thing we can do is to study the reasons why humankind does nothing to avert these threats and why it allows itself to be carried onward by some kind of perpetual motion, unaffected by self-awareness or a sense of future options. It would be unfair to ignore the existence of numerous projects for the aversion or limitation of this danger, or to deny that a lot has been done for the implementation of such projects. However, all attempts of this kind have one thing in common: They do not at all touch basic trends of development from which the threats I am speaking of sprout, but merely regulate the impact of those trends. (A typical example is legal acts, ordinances or international treaties stipulating how much toxic matter this or that product may contain or how much toxic waste this or that plant may discharge into the environment.) I am not criticizing these kinds of standards or safeguards; quite the opposite. I am glad that something like this is being done. I only claim that these are technical tricks that have no real effect on the substance of the matter.

What, then, is the substance of the matter? What indeed could change the tendencies of today's civilization? What could really halt the perpetual motion which we have not been able to control so far?

DO YOU SUPPOSE THERE MIGHT BE A WAY TO STOP THAT BLIND PERPETUAL MOTION DRAGGING US INTO hell?

It is my deep conviction that the only option is a change in the sphere of the spirit, in the sphere of human conscience, in the actual attitude of man toward the world. It is not enough to invent new machines, new regulations, or new institutions. We must understand differently and more perfectly the true purpose of our existence on this earth. Only such understanding will allow the development of new models of behavior, new scales of values and life objectives. In short: it appears to me that it would be better to start from the head rather than the tail.

WHENEVER I HAVE encountered any kind of deep problem with civilization anywhere in the world—be it the logging of rain forests, ethnic or religious intolerance or the brutal destruction of a cultural landscape that had taken centuries to develop—somewhere at the end of the long chain of events that gave rise to the problem at issue I have always found one and the same cause: a lack of accountability to and responsibility for the world.

There are countless types of responsibility, more or less pressing, which vary among individuals. We feel responsible to ourselves or for ourselves, for our health, our performance, our welfare; we feel responsible for our families, our companies, our communities, our professions, political parties, churches, regions, nations or countries; and somewhere in the background of all these feelings of responsibility there is, in every one of us, a small feeling of responsibility for the world as a whole and for its future. We know that the world does not end at the moment of our death and that it is wrong to act as if we do not care if the floods come after we are gone. But it seems to me that this last and deepest responsibility, responsibility for the world, has become a very low priority—dangerously low considering that the world today is a more interlinked place than ever before and that we are de facto living one global destiny.

At the same time, our world is dominated by several great religious systems, whose differences seem to be coming to the fore with increasing perspicuity and actually forming the background to many real or potential political and armed conflicts in the present and future. In my opinion this fact—which is attracting, understandably, the concerned attentions of all observers—conceals somewhat a considerably more substantial circumstance: that the contemporary global civilization inside which this religious tension is taking place is in essence a deeply atheistic one. Indeed, it is the first atheistic civilization in the history of humankind.

Could the fact that humanity thinks only within the limits of what lies in its field of vision and is incapable of remembering also what lies beyond, whether in the temporal or spatial sense, not be the result of a loss of metaphysical certitude? Could not the whole nature of the current civilization, with its shortsightedness, with its proud emphasis on the human individual as the crown of all creation—and its master—and with its boundless trust in humanity's ability to embrace the Universe by rational cognition, could it not all be only the natural manifestation of a phenomenon which, in simple terms, amounts to the loss of God? Or more specifically: the loss of respect for the order of existence of which we are not the creators but mere components. Could it not be that the issue is a crisis of respect for the moral order extended to us from above, or simply a crisis of respect for any kind of authority higher than our own earthly being, with its material and thoroughly ephemeral earthly interests? Could not the crisis of responsibility and accountability for the world as a whole and for its future be only the logical consequence of the modern conception of the world as a complex of phenomena controlled by certain scientifically identifiable laws, formulated for God-knows-what purpose—that is, a conception which does not question the meaning of existence and renounces any kind of metaphysics or its own metaphysical roots?

I have been thinking about the basic questions and paradoxes of contemporary civilization for many years, and in recent times I have even had the opportunity of encountering different aspects of these issues in various countries on all continents. And I have become increasingly convinced that the crisis of the much-needed global responsibility is in principle due to the fact that we have lost the certainty that the Universe, nature, existence and our lives are the work of creation guided by a definite intention, that it has a definite meaning and follows a definite purpose. This loss is accompanied by the loss of the feeling that whatever we do must be subjected to the regard for the higher order of which we are part and to the respect for its authority in whose field of vision every one of us is permanently present.

A TRUE AND ESSENTIAL TURN FOR THE BETTER CAN DERIVE ONLY FROM CHANGES IN THE SPHERE OF THE spirit

I HAVE MENTIONED that the nature of the world today reflects the predominance of several great religious systems which are playing an increasingly important role—or rather whose mutual "otherness" seems to be becoming increasingly important—and that many people actually perceive a conflict between these different religious worlds as one of the threats humankind will encounter in the future. Since the fall of the colonial system and the end of the bipolar division of the world, and due to the population boom and the growing self-confidence and influence of various countries and continents lying outside the limits of the hitherto dominant Euro-American civilization sphere, humankind is actually entering a world whose characteristic features are multipolarity and multiculturalism. And so far, it would seem that the more tied the various civilizations, cultural and religious groups are by the bonds of a single global civilization—exerting unavoidably a unifying influence—the more they emphasize their sovereignty, inalienable identity, specificity or simply things by which they differ from the circle of the other groups. It's as if one lived in an epoch of accentuated spiritual, religious and cultural "otherness." This growing accent is indeed another large threat to this world.

But how to restore in the human mind a shared attitude to what is above if people everywhere have a different image of that which is above and everywhere feel the need to stress that "otherness"? Is there any sense in trying to turn the human mind to the heavens when such a turn would only aggravate the conflict among our various deities? I am not, of course, an expert on various religions, but from all that I know about the main ones, I have gained the indelible impression that they have much more in common than they admit or are willing to admit.

Starting from the basic point of departure—that is, that this world and our existence here are not a freak chance having little meaning but are part of a mysterious, yet integral, act whose sources, direction and purpose are difficult for us to perceive in their entirety—to the large complex of moral imperatives that the act implies—all this surprisingly seems to unite the various religious systems, while the specific aspects of their traditions, accents, liturgies and interpretations remain, in my view, an immensely important but not dominant factor. What does dominate is the similarity in what the various religions ask of us as human beings, or how they perceive us.

Perhaps the way out of the current bleak situation could be found in the search for what unites the various religions and cultures, in the search for common sources, principles, certitudes, aspirations and imperatives, a purpose-minded search; and then, applying means adequate to the needs of our time, we could cultivate all matters of human coexistence and endeavor, and at the same time the planet on which it is our destiny to live, suffusing it with all the spirit of what I would call the common spiritual and moral minimum.

Do you suppose this might be a way to stop that blind perpetual motion dragging us into hell? Would you presume that such a universal recovery of the human spirit and of human responsibility for the world, that such an "existential revolution" as I once called it, could be provoked only by some unprecedented shock or disaster? Or is it within the power of wise people to bring about this recovery or revolution by their own will and by cooperation without the need for any appalling impulse from the outside? Would you presume that persuasive words of the wise would be enough to achieve what must be done, or would we need, as in the past, charismatic prophets or modern messiahs or even some kind of historical miracle? ■
