Dear Mr. President,

Thank you for your kind words of personal acknowledgment in Lyon. They were unnecessary, but appreciated. It was so good to see you -- tired and bug-bitten, but in great form.

I came to Lyon deeply moved by my meetings in Tuzla and Sarajevo. As you well know, Tuzla is home to the survivors of Srebrenica, who a year ago endured a reign of horror worthy of Nazi times. Yet in spite of the intense pathos, and in spite of the overwhelming enormity of the obstacles that confront them, the women refugees of Srebrenica are organized (just like you and I would be!), planning an event July 11th in the sports center of Tuzla where they will cross ethnic lines to commemorate the missing. I'll be taking down with me Queen Noor of Jordan and EU Commissioner Emma Bonino.

I'm sending you this note on our letterhead, so you can see the Host Committee. (Nancy Kassebaum just joined, which I considered especially good form on her part.) We're bringing with us all kinds of concrete help: a micro-enterprise loan fund, a computer training center, antibiotics for 5,000 children, etc. Your announcement of $5,000,000 will be a big boost.

The women are embroidering pieces of a banner with the names of their missing boys and men; those pieces will be tied together, a symbol of the bond of grief that is uniting the women themselves. It's impossible for me to convey to you the depth of their passion. (I talked with one woman who lost two sons, two brothers, and a husband, all in one day.) But their power to potentially heal -- not just themselves, but their country -- is equally strong.

In a small room with benches covered by brightly-colored weavings, a short, sweet, white-haired woman named Fatima sat next to me, describing plans for the commemoration meeting. She held in her lap her blue banner fragment, with the names of her 18 year-old son, and her husband of 25 years. Every now and then, her natural smile contorted, she wiped away tears.

I felt reluctant to raise the issue, but I needed to know: "Do you think it's possible, Fatima, that the women of Srebrenica could invite the Serbian women of Banja Luka to your commemorative meeting?" She looked at me straightforwardly, and, without hesitating, said simply, "We're all mothers."

In Sarajevo the next day, at the conference of 500 Muslim, Croat, and Serb women, I told that story. The whole room burst into long applause, then interrupted me six times, whenever I would speak of the power of the women of Bosnia to unite their country.

Mr. President, I don't believe I'm overstating when I say this is the real positive story going on in Bosnia right now. I've spent many hours talking with leaders of our armed forces in Bosnia -- at multiple levels. Our troops have completed most of their mission, as it was mandated. General Joulwan and the forces on the ground are working side by side with us. They understand that the stability of this country, and the context of their withdrawal, is at stake.

Thanks again for your help. I wish I could be with you at home and here at the same time. Please be assured of my support in every way. And, of course, call on me any time.

Warmly,

Swann

THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON

July 11, 1996

To the Women of Srebrenica:

Today you have come together because of a horrible, tragic event that changed your lives forever. There can be no justification for the barbaric terror you and your loved ones endured, or for the losses you continue to suffer.

Over these past four long years, the United States has joined the international community sending humanitarian aid and later 20,000 peacekeepers. We have rebuilt roads and bridges. Now we are creating a commission to help you find your missing boys and men. And we are sending $5,000,000 to help you start businesses and get back on your feet economically.

These things we can do. But we know that it will take you, from the inside, to repair the fabric of life that has been ripped into shreds by aggression and hate.

And so the thoughts of our nation are with you as you gather in Tuzla not only to remember the past, but to shape your new future. The world is watching with deep admiration as you have invited women across Bosnia-Herzegovina to join you, reaching out across the lines drawn by war, to create a future of compassion and hope.

Hillary and I believe strongly in your mission to reunite your country. We applaud your courage, your strength, and your wisdom. We stand with you today in spirit, to say, "You are not alone."

Dear President Clinton:

I am adding my name to the long list of people urging you to grant executive clemency to Leonard Peltier who has already served 19 years in federal prison, far beyond the ten years needed to be eligible for parole.

Increasingly serious doubt has been cast on Mr. Peltier's conviction. I realize that at this time of grave national concern about anti-government violence by extremist groups, clemency for someone wrongly convicted of murdering FBI agents may be unpopular, but justice is ultimately the best defense against extreme violence. I urge you to talk to Leonard, look at his paintings done in jail -- this is a good heart, not a dangerous man.

Thank you for your consideration of this important issue. It would mean a great deal to so many of us -- and stand as a tribute in history to your compassion.

With friendship,

Dear Mr. President:

It was indeed an honor to have the opportunity to speak with you about the potential contributions Asian American business can make to expand trade between the United States and Asia at the 1996 New York Presidential Celebration on June 24.

I recognize you understand that Asian American business is an important asset and resource to this country, however very little governmental effort has been directed to utilize this resource and maximize its potential benefits.

Asian American-owned businesses have been pinpointed as the fastest growing segment of minority-owned businesses in the country. Not only are they producing jobs and wealth in the Asian American community and contributing to the expansion of the total economy, but they are helping to develop business opportunities for this country in the Asia Pacific region.

Therefore, I submit this proposal for the formation of The Asia Pacific Business Council under a presidential directive. The Asia Pacific Business Council will serve as promotional and marketing arm as well as be an advocate for the United States in the Asia Pacific region.

The members of the Council, selected among Asian American and American business leaders, will use their extensive personal and business contacts in the Asia Pacific Rim countries to develop and foster trade and business opportunities for American companies. The Council will also act as a guide to Asia-based firms interested in investing and relocating to the United States.

I hope that you concur with the merit of this proposal, and I look forward to working with your staff to make this a success for American business.

Respectfully yours,

Dear President Clinton:

First and foremost, I want to thank you for yet another great evening in your company. My friends extremely enjoyed the evening, and were most impressed with your knowledge of all the subjects we discussed. Even my Republican friends were impressed.

Your apparent infinite capacity to absorb information, and your intricate knowledge of the issues are truly remarkable.

I have arranged with Marvin for a few more dinners, the next one taking place July 8th.

Philip Christopher, Nick Gage and Angelo Tsakopoulos have asked me to incorporate a few thoughts into my thank you note to you, and rather than dilute the passion of their feelings, I have included their notes verbatim.

Thank you once again.

Sincerely,

Statement of Philip Christopher:

"With regard to Cyprus, the biggest step forward on the Cyprus issue in 22 years...your assistance in putting Cyprus on track to become part of the European Union (EU)...must proceed without condition. Otherwise Cyprus' accession to the EU could be held hostage by the Turks who support the illegal military occupation and the division of Cyprus. The demilitarization return of Famagusta is another important possible first step in a Cyprus settlement.

We are looking forward to you accomplishing, at the first moment that a government in Turkey soldiers, those things which you promised regarding Cyprus. The International Monetary Fund (IMF) may be moving in coming weeks toward a bailout of the catastrophic situation of the Turkish economy. The approximately $500 million a year drain on the Turkish economy to sustain the occupation of Cyprus is an element which you should legitimately insist be eliminated if you are to approve the IMF bailout."

Statement of Nick Gage:

"Thank you for giving us so much of your time Monday night as we shared our beliefs and hopes for America with you and our concerns for peace and stability in the Balkans, especially in Greece, Cyprus, Albania and Turkey. Although many problems were discussed Monday evening, I want to remind you of two issues on which immediate action can be taken that will underscore America's deep commitment to political and religious freedom.

We were heartened to hear of your deep concern about the flagrant violations in the Albanian elections on May 26 and your belief that what is needed to redress these violations and promote real democracy in Albania is new national elections under international supervision. We were also pleased to hear that you feel that the State Department's announcement calling for new elections in only a few districts is not adequate to make up for the gross violations that occurred throughout the country. We share your concern that if the United States allows such violations to stand, it will undermine your efforts to promote free and open elections in Bosnia.

You should be aware, however, that the State Department only yesterday issued a statement dated June 1 that again called for only partial elections. We strongly believe that what is desperately needed now is a statement from the White House that clearly reflects the belief you expressed to us that the growing tensions in Albania can only be relieved by new national elections throughout the country under international supervision as soon as possible.

Statement of Nick Gage continued:

It is crucial that such a statement be made within the next few days before the situation deteriorates beyond repair in Albania.

We also want to underscore to you our deep commitment to His All Holiness Ecumenical Patriarch Bartholomew. We appreciated sincerely the First Lady's visit to the Ecumenical Patriarchate and for her meeting with His All Holiness, however, more needs to be done.

Halki Theological School, which was open during Ottomans times and the tumultuous first years of the Turkish Republic, has now been closed by force since 1971. What an ignoble and infamous anniversary for Turkey! The School should be opened this year as a simple good sign so we can begin a real peace process which will serve as a strong foundation of democracy in the Balkans Area, Southwest European and the Aegean. I ask you on behalf of all those present and for all the Orthodox Christians in our community to do what has not been done exert influence to open the School. It would be a win/win for Turkey, the Patriarchate, Greece and the reelection bid of your great administration."

Statement of Angelo Tsakoupoulos:

"Less than five months ago, Greece and Turkey reached the brink of war in the Aegean Sea over the Greek islet of Imia. War was averted due overwhelmingly to your personal intervention, Mr. President, for which we are grateful.

In the immediate aftermath of the crises, you repeatedly stated that the United States opposes the threat or use of force to settle disputes in the Aegean. You also urged the parties to resort to the International Court of Justice regarding the matter of Imia. Instead, Turkey has completely ignored your call for the peaceful settlement of disputes in accordance with international law and has escalated its threats and provocations against Greece in the Aegean Sea. Furthermore, Ankara recently escalated the tensions in the region by challenging the legal status of the Greek island of Gavdos, situated southwest of Crete and 250 miles from Turkey. By any legal standards, this Turkish action constitutes a major provocation against our NATO ally Greece and demonstrates utter contempt for international law and the inviolability of national borders. Simultaneously, The Turkish air force has increased its systematic violations of Greek airspace and Turkish warships have harassed Greek tourist boats inside of Greek territorial waters.

Statement of Angelo Tsakoupoulos:

Most regrettably, the State Department's response to this flagrant violations of the sovereign rights of Greece has been to adhere to a policy of "equal distance." By equating the aggressor with the victim, the United States is delivering a message to Turkey that its illegal actions are acceptable.

As a result, the possibility of a military confrontation between Greece and Turkey is more serious today than in decades. A Greek-Turkish conflict would be catastrophic for both countries, the entire Balkan and Eastern Mediterranean regions, and an unmitigated disaster for vital American interests.

Mr. President, we strongly urge you to send a clear, direct and public message to the Turkish General Staff that its policy of challenging Greek sovereign rights in the Aegean Sea, and escalating its threats and provocations against our NATO ally Greece, are absolutely unacceptable to the United States and the NATO alliance. Only in this way will Turkey be persuaded to follow the path of peace with its neighbors, and move away from the adventurist path that is inexorable leading to war."

Galler says E.coli 0157:H7 disease is far more common than official reports indicate. There are outbreaks no one hears of, he says, because the restaurant or fast-food outlet is worried about bad publicity. Perhaps more important, there are hundreds of isolated, sporadic cases of illness

Anne Marie Fahey's Volkswagen Jetta is parked outside her apartment on Washington Street in Wilmington.

It's not that the trail runs out, said her brother Brian. 'There is no trail.'

Staff reporter

WILMINGTON — Anne Marie Fahey, the governor's appointment secretary who vanished last week, was last seen by Wilmington attorney and political insider Thomas J. Capano when the two had dinner Thursday night in Philadelphia, according to friends and sources close to the investigation.

Police said they do not consider Fahey's dinner companion whom they did not identify to be a suspect and said he has been cooperative with investigators.

Police said the companion told investigators he dropped off Fahey, 30, at her Washington Street apartment about 10 p.m. Thursday.

She hasn't been seen since.

Wilmington police, who are heading the investigation, said they have found no sign of foul play and no suspects.

Capano is a former assistant public defender and prosecutor, who served as an aide to former Wilmington Mayor Daniel Frawley and former Gov. Michael Castle. He declined to return repeated telephone calls. He now works for the Wilmington law firm Saul, Ewing Remick & Saul.

Police said Fahey and her companion had dinner at the Ristorante Panorama on North Front Street in Philadelphia between 7 p.m. and 9:15 p.m.

As the search for Fahey enters its fourth day today, investigators, family and friends were left wondering what happened, and what to do.

"Her disappearance is so seamless," said Fahey's brother, Brian, on Tuesday. It's not that the trail runs out, he said. "There is no trail."

Fahey: Governor is 'hoping against hope'

Investigators said that after Fahey was dropped off, she vanished.

"The last person to see her saw her Thursday," said Deputy Attorney General Ferris W. Wharton, who is monitoring the investigation. "Between then and now, we don't have a clue what went on. She's just missing, and there's no way of knowing what happened."

And the longer she is missing, the more the hope fades.

Her boss, attending a bill signing ceremony Tuesday, was peppered by reporters with questions about his appointment secretary.

"She was beloved. We're hoping against hope she will be found," Carper said. "There was nothing at all to indicate something was wrong. We are just baffled."

Brian Fahey, 34, and his sister and three brothers have been calling every telephone number in Anne Marie's private phone directory. "We've been calling on her friends, hoping she's holed up there," he said Tuesday.

A combination of factors kept his sister's disappearance from official notice until late Saturday night.

Because Carper was going to be in Dover all day Friday, it was a good day for her to schedule a day off, and she did.

But she didn't keep a hair dresser's appointment Friday.

And Friday night, she was supposed to meet her boyfriend, Mike Scanlan, and go to her brother Robert's house in Newtown Square, Pa., for dinner.

But she didn't keep that date.

Late Saturday night, Brian Fahey said, Scanlan and Anne Marie's sister Kathleen, concerned about her well-being, went to Anne Marie's apartment.

Brian Fahey said the door was locked, and the landlord let the two in.

"They saw all her things were there," Brian Fahey said Tuesday. Anne Marie's purse was there, as was her wallet, which still contained her driver's license, all her credit cards and an undisclosed amount of cash. Brian Fahey said all of his sister's luggage has been accounted for, there was no sign of a struggle in the third-floor apartment and her car was still parked out front.

"They found all the things you would take with you if you were going someplace," he said.

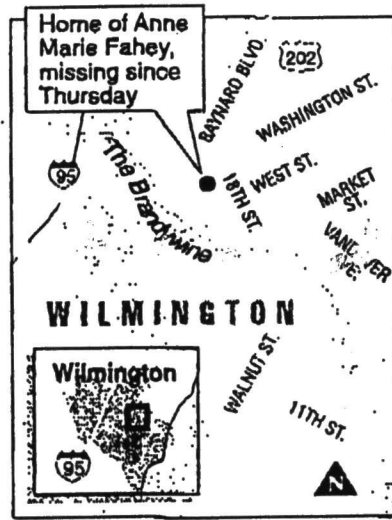

The only thing missing, he said, was her keys. Scanlan, who did not return phone calls, and Kathleen Fahey called Wilmington police. Brian Fahey said the governor, once informed of the situation, ordered the state police to assist.

Brian Fahey and authorities have said there was no indication that his sister was distressed about anything.

Anne Marie, he said, seemed happy when he last saw her, on June 21. He said she was going to pick him up from the airport when he was to return from his Ecuador vacation next Tuesday. He came home early when he learned of her disappearance.

Another friend, Robert H. Surles, said he received a computer message from Anne Marie Fahey dated last Wednesday. He said the tone was upbeat. "She sent me an e-mail, asking me to buzz her, and I didn't do that," said Surles, a prosecutor with the state Attorney General's office. "I was going to do that Monday."

On Tuesday afternoon, as a small crowd of reporters gathered outside the three-floor apartment building at 1718 Washington St., state police detective Lt. Mark Daniels and another investigator

Other residents of the street, which faces a park, said Fahey was known as friendly but quiet.

Rudolph Tyler, who lives in the building next door to Fahey, said he dug her car out of the snow several times this past winter. "She was nice, real sweet," Tyler, 21, said.
