Writes to the President stating that because of his appreciation of historic-architectural landmarks, he may wish to include in his personal library Copy No. 1 of the new Historic American Buildings Survey Catalog which lists the survey collection deposited in the Library of Congress. Expresses his regret that many of the Nation's most significant structures are not listed, "in fact, are not completely recorded anywhere." Adds that he has felt it to be something of an obligation to submit to the Bureau of the Budget a supplemental estimate in the amount of $150,000 for the recordation of about one hundred outstandingly important buildings, among these buildings being the U. S. Capitol, the Independence Hall group, the New York City Hall, and various early public buildings, churches, and houses; "probably even the White House is nowhere recorded adequately."

It's patriotic and sporty
To drive your car under forty-
Forty miles an hour I mean
That saves tires and gasoline;
Let's keep forty miles the limit
Freedom's Lamp- we dare not dim it-
Let us drive the safety way
And save- to save the U.S.A.;--
Along the Nation's wide high-ways-Here's the warning to pass-- an autographed copy of "Our Country" for the President.

This has been released through the New York Times Syndicate and Bundles For America.

It is our hope to have posters of it displayed throughout the nation and when the song is printed a few weeks hence we hope it will be sung by the children of America.

Respectfully yours,

H. B. Childs

The author has been a well known lecturer and contributor to standard scientific Journals on the subject of atomic theory. In this book he has given both the lay reader and the highly trained scientist a clear account of his own contributions to this subject, and points out where certain present theories require revision.

The employment of mathematical symbols, used of necessity in his original monographs, has been successfully avoided, and a story of intense interest to workers in science as well as the lay reader revealed. It may be read in an hour or two, and is not a text-book. However, to get the author's point of view and his picture of atoms, it calls for careful reading and study. When his thesis concerning the steady states of atoms is admitted in the mind of the reader as a possibility, the rest falls naturally into line.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer (March 19, 1942) says "Atomic Theory is a simplified exposition of years of brilliant experimental and mathematical research, which, the author asserts, clears up many present-day mysteries and points the way to a complete understanding of valency in chemistry and atomic forces involved in crystal structure. . . . Certain facts stand forth clearly. The theories of a man with the training and accomplishments of Dr. Grehore cannot be ignored. He has proved himself to be a physicist and mathematician of the front rank."
