Feast of Tabernacles

We Are to Keep God's Holy Days—and Rejoice at the Feast

personal from the president

Feast of Tabernacles 2026

This past week I once again recorded my Feast sermon in an empty studio. While I have done this numerous times before, the experience never feels quite natural.

I have done one of these each year since we began in COGWA, with the exception of last year. Because of my surgery last year, we had a special video in place of my sermon.

This year, having recovered, I returned to my practice of recording my sermon for this Feast. It will be shown in all U.S. sites on the second day of the Feast.

I don't think I will ever get used to recording a Feast sermon in July in an empty studio. There is something to be said about being in the moment—giving a sermon before a full house of rejoicing members. You cannot get that same feeling in an empty studio. Often, I have to give the message twice before I feel satisfied with it. You just can't replicate that excitement and enthusiasm without an audience.

Standing behind a lectern in an empty studio inevitably gives me time to think about what really matters during the Feast. Each year I come to the same conclusion: it isn't the camera or the recording that matters most—it is the people who will eventually hear the message. I do my best to transport myself to the Feast and the feeling of purpose that we all have.

My sermon this year won't introduce some new idea. Rather, it will focus on timeless truths that have always strengthened God's people.

We all gather for the Feast (Deuteronomy 16:16) for multiple reasons, but one of the most important is the encouragement we get from each other and from the messages we hear. That is my focus—to provide encouragement.

I tell stories from the past for the purpose of reassuring us for the future. There is nothing more exciting or reassuring to me than the stories of God's people. I often return to the stories recorded in Hebrews 11. They remind me that God's people in every age have faced uncertainty, endured hardship and remained faithful.

If I can provide encouragement for God's people in the midst of our current, chaotic world, then I will have been successful in my sermon. I try to include in my messages stories of the people I have known and my experiences after more than 70 years in the Church.

My own journey began when I was only 2 years old, after my 22-year-old mother began listening to Herbert Armstrong on the radio while living in a basement apartment in Michigan City, Indiana. My mother had a genuine zeal for obeying God—keeping the Sabbath, observing the festivals and faithfully tithing. Looking back, I realize she passed that same zeal on to me, a gift for which I have never ceased to be grateful.

I hope all of you are just as excited this year as you were for your first Feast. You probably have more available funds today than you did when you began. As I recall, we attended those early Feasts in Big Sandy with only a small amount of cash. We packed our own food, then loaded the tent, the Coleman stove and the folding cots into our U-Haul, and set off as a family of four for Big Sandy, Texas. We didn't have much money, but it never felt as though we lacked anything important.

As we gather once again before God, my prayer is that none of us loses the excitement we felt when we first understood His festivals. Every Feast is another reminder that God's Kingdom is drawing closer. May we come together with thankful hearts, ready to encourage one another, strengthened by God's Word and determined to "be strong and of good courage" (Joshua 1:6). If we do, I truly believe this year's Feast will be one of our best ever.

Overcoming Anger

Unchecked anger can do permanent damage to our relationships and reputation. How can we overcome anger problems?

By Eddie Foster

How often have we wished that our “fuses were longer” or our tempers controlled? The Bible emphasizes the need to be slow to anger, but what can we do to make that a reality?

Both Psalm 4:4 and Ephesians 4:26 use the phrase, “Be angry, and do not sin.” These verses are telling us that anger is not wrong of itself; in fact, these verses appear to even encourage a righteous indignation to reject what we know to be wrong and live God’s way of life. This right kind of anger (the kind that’s compatible with the fruit of the Spirit in Galatians 5:22-23) can motivate us to change for the better, to help those in need and to defend God’s teachings.

Unfortunately, few of us can honestly say that the majority of the anger we experience is righteous indignation—especially when we can’t control it.

Why is anger spiritually dangerous?

Just as with all uncontrolled emotions, chronic anger is a pathway to behavior that we know is not what God expects of us. Christ equated being angry without cause (the only right cause being righteous indignation) to murder in the heart (Matthew 5:21-22).

Many times we may kid ourselves into thinking we have righteous indignation about supposed harms committed against us or undesirable behaviors we see.

Meanwhile, our minds are content with condemning others rather than judging righteously. Too often we attempt to justify ourselves rather than examine ourselves.

Unresolved anger can eventually transform into all sorts of unwanted character traits, such as bitterness, harshness, coldness, inability to trust, grudge-holding, impatience and hatred.

So, in order to not hinder our demonstration of the fruit of God's Spirit (including love, joy, peace, longsuffering, kindness, gentleness and self-control), we must overcome chronic anger.

Identify the cause of angry thinking

Once we recognize we have a problem, we can start looking for the stimuli that provokes our anger. To do this, we should keep a record (whether in a journal or with an electronic device) of everything that made us angry during the day. We can do this at the end of the day before going to sleep, but it is more effective to record it as close to the event as possible.

We have to ask ourselves questions, such as:

- Did someone say something I felt was offensive?
- Did something I planned not go the way I wanted?
- Did I see someone who reminded me of someone who has hurt me in the past?
- Did someone's tone of voice get on my nerves?

Determine which situations can be avoided and which situations need to be dealt with. The majority of causes are ones we cannot avoid, so remember what the apostle Paul wrote: "If it is possible, as much as depends on you, live peaceably with all men" (Romans 12:18, emphasis added).

To do this in tough situations, we have to change our thinking.

Analyze and compare our thinking with reality

Next, it's time to jot down the thoughts that accompany our events or causes. Some thoughts might include:

- They are doing it on purpose!
- She knows I hate that, and she keeps doing it just to get me mad!
- I can't stand that guy!
- What is his problem?
- I can't believe this!
- How dare they?
- Those idiots never listen to me!

Take a good look at all the thoughts generated by each event. When we stop justifying our outbursts of wrath, we can begin to see in ourselves traces of being petty, easily offended, impatient, etc.

So what do we do? We should analyze our thinking. Here are some examples:

1. Is it fair/rational to think that people always know they are upsetting us with something they do or how they talk or how they behave?
2. Is it fair/rational to think that we have never offended anyone and would not want to be extended some latitude in these situations? Ecclesiastes 7:21-22 tells us: "Also do not take to heart everything people say, lest you hear your servant cursing you. For many times, also, your own heart has known that even you have cursed others."

3. Is it fair/rational to get so upset over things that (upon further examination) may be trivial, petty or just a misunderstanding?

Substitute the irrational with rational and biblical thinking

Once we realize that many of our thoughts about certain events are irrational and not in line with God's thinking, then we can change them. We have to commit to different thinking when these same situations occur again, since life will be full of these causes of anger.

Determine some rational, biblical thoughts relating to causes of our anger:

- This upsets me, but I will bear with others in love.
- This is a petty and insignificant issue.
- I need to speak the truth in love.
- If I don't forgive, God won't forgive me.

Thoughts that involve biblical insight should be used to replace thoughts that are too often self-centered and perhaps even violent.

What if I've already lost control?

Sometimes strong emotions will seem to skip from stimulus to reaction, seemingly bypassing the thought process. So what do we do?

There are several well-known calming techniques to bring us down from anger (for example, breathing in and holding for several seconds, then breathing out; excusing ourselves from a situation; and walking off the energy), but immediately praying to God and asking for patience and His Holy Spirit should be our first option.

Then we should ask, "Why am I upset? Is this righteous indignation? Do I control my anger, or does it control me?"

Finally, we should prepare for our next battle with anger by studying what we've recorded and the biblical principles about overcoming anger. ©A

WE ARE TO KEEP GOD'S HOLY DAYS—AND REJOICE AT THE FEAST

By Mark Winner

Recently I was visiting in the home of someone who was new to God's Church. He called me to discuss several issues on his mind. One of the questions he asked me was, "Why does COGWA teach the need to keep or observe the feasts of the Lord that are listed in Leviticus 23?" He had heard us talking at church services about preparing to keep the Feast of Tabernacles.

In answering him, I began with the fact that these feasts are indeed God's feasts—not Jewish feasts (Leviticus 23:2). I then went through each of them and pointed out how several times they are mentioned as being "a statute forever" (verses 14, 21, 31, 41). These days were not only kept in history, but are also to be kept by His called-out ones today.

Christ's instruction and example

Verses 1 and 8 of Luke 22 show us that Jesus Christ taught the disciples to prepare for the Passover just as He had always done. Later in the same chapter (verses 14-16), we see how much He was anticipating this particular Passover because it would be His final one before His crucifixion.

Then in verses 17-20 we find that Jesus Christ taught a change to the Passover symbols, but He was certainly not trying to do away with Passover. The Gospel accounts—plus 1 Corinthians 11:23-26—show Passover observance is an act of obedience to Jesus Christ.

What about the holy days, including the Feast of Tabernacles? Are they to be kept today too? Absolutely. In John 7:14, 28, 37 we find that Jesus Christ taught during God's feast days. And since we are to follow the example of Jesus Christ (1 Peter 2:21; 1 John 2:6), we are expected to keep them and appreciate their meaning.

Perhaps someone will state, "Well, that all changed after Jesus Christ's death." But no such thing is found in Scripture. While the penalty for sin (death) is removed when one repents and accepts Christ's sacrifice, the command to keep God's feast days has never changed. Why would Jesus have taught His disciples to observe the Passover, Unleavened Bread and the Feast of Tabernacles (Luke 22:8; John 7:8; 14:15) if He did not want them to observe these days following His death?

Matthew 28:19-20 really drives home what Jesus Christ intended for us today: "Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, teaching them to observe all things that I have commanded you" (emphasis added throughout). Based on this, it seems clear that His disciples not only observed the holy days, but also were expected to teach their observance. And we, likewise, are expected to teach them today.

We continue to see references to observing the holy days even after Christ's death and resurrection. For example, in Acts 18:21 Paul was likely referring to the Feast of Tabernacles. In Acts 27:9 we see a reference to Atonement.

What was taught in Leviticus 23 remains in effect today: We are to keep God's holy days year after year. Jesus Christ kept them, as did the apostles, including Paul, who reminds us that we are to imitate him just as he imitated Christ (1 Corinthians 11:1).

How should we keep God's Feast?

So, if we are to keep these holy days, that raises another question: How are we to keep them? What does God want us to do? And what would He want us to avoid doing?

There is not space here to discuss each holy day, but I would like to focus on an important aspect of keeping the upcoming Feast of Tabernacles. I hope you will think about this before you go and when you attend.

When we go to keep the Feast, God commands us to rejoice.

In Deuteronomy 16:13-15 it is clear God wants us to rejoice together as a spiritual family (as well as with any physical family that may attend with us). Verse 14 says, "And you shall rejoice in your feast, you and your son and your daughter, your male servant and your female servant and the Levite, the stranger and the fatherless and the widow, who are within your gates.”

The Feast is a time of joy. It is a time to celebrate what will come once Jesus Christ is on His throne in Jerusalem. God will put away Satan and his influence for 1,000 years (Revelation 20:3). Christ and the firstfruits will teach the world how to live a happy, prosperous life. It is incredibly exciting to meditate on, talk about and anticipate.

We have saved a tithe of our income to enjoy specifically at this appointed time because God tells us to (Deuteronomy 14:22-26). But please consider what so often brings joy to a man or woman of God. It isn't that we have the means to enjoy nice things or nice meals as much as it is that we are able to share and rejoice with others.

I have recognized for years that having something nice may be okay, but it lacks something. On the other hand, sharing what we have with others is priceless. It is fulfilling. It goes along with the mentality God wants us to have—the way of love and outgoing concern for others.

Let's take this thought further. While it is nice to be able to buy fine things for one another in our family and stay in quality places, that is still a narrow picture. It can become all too easy to focus on what we desire rather than on rejoicing about what lies ahead with our spiritual family.

Now maybe you are thinking, but aren't we told to spend our tithe on what our heart desires (Deuteronomy 14:26)? Yes, it does say that. But let's put that instruction with what we read in Deuteronomy 16—that we are to rejoice with all who are within our gates. Simply put, doing our own thing as an individual or a couple or a family can be fine for an evening or a day, but surely not for the entire Feast. God wants us together, focusing on the blessing of His calling and the anticipation of what will come with the fulfillment of these days.

God is building a family, not unconnected individuals that will carry the same family name (the God family) while being separate from one another. The Father and Son work together in unity and oneness, and that is our model. When we rejoice together at the Feast, God is most pleased.

As we keep the Feast of Tabernacles, let's be sure to rejoice and to do so together. ☺

Doug Horschak Makes Trip to Africa

July 6 to 22, Doug and Tanya Horschak traveled to Africa for a jam-packed schedule of visits, ILP classes and even a weekend of marriage seminars.

After several long flights and layovers, they arrived in Harare, Zimbabwe, Wednesday evening, July 8. They visited retired elder Harris Hlazo and his wife, Patricia, that Thursday morning and that afternoon gave ILP classes to two couples.

On Friday, July 10, the Horschaks flew to Bulawayo, Zimbabwe, where they enjoyed Sabbath services (pictured above) with the congregation and conducted ILP classes for five couples and three singles.

On Sunday, they visited with Stephen and Vetina Tshabalala, and then flew back to Harare so they could fly on to Blantyre, Malawi, the next day. They spent three days in Malawi, holding ILP classes for six couples (three from Zambia) and a Bible study for local brethren, as well as visiting with Elifazi and Selia Salawila.

Then it was on to Johannesburg, South Africa, where Mr. Horschak taught ILP classes (for seven couples) and helped senior pastor Tim Waddle conduct a marriage enrichment weekend for South African members.

Manila Church Refreshed by Outing

On June 20 the Manila, Philippines, congregation gathered at a farm resort for a weekend of rest, worship and togetherness.

We began with a Sabbath service, surrounded by God's creation. That evening everyone enjoyed a delicious potluck dinner.

After dinner, the night continued with Bible-themed group games that had us laughing and learning together. Then some swam in the pool, while others fellowshiped more before retiring for the night.

The next morning, the ladies were up early, cooking brunch for everyone. With full hearts and stomachs, we said our goodbyes and headed home—tired but deeply refreshed.

Fort Worth Youth Spend a Day at the Zoo

Heavy rain had been forecast, but the weather cleared just in time to enable 23 teens, preteens and parents from the Fort Worth, Texas, congregation to spend Sunday, April 12, at the Fort Worth Zoo.

Because of the weather, there were few other visitors, so the group was able to enjoy viewing and interacting with the animals unimpeded. Especially popular were the hands-on exhibits—allowing the young people to touch snakes and ocean creatures—and the ice cream and train rides, a treat by one of the attendees!
