

Emily Jin is a Research Assistant for the Energy, Economics, and Security Program at CNAS. Her research focuses on U.S.-China competition over regional influence and global order. She observes the increasingly cross-domain bilateral competitive landscape by analyzing U.S.-China political, economic, technological, and ideological contentions. In addition to U.S.-China competition, she studies policy at the intersection of American economic resilience and national security.

She has prior work experience at the Export-Import Bank of the United States, the Department of Commerce, and the Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Jin holds an MA in international economics and China studies from the Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies, and a BA in psychology from Georgetown University. Her academic interests include economics, finance, behavioral sciences, and international relations. She is natively fluent in Mandarin Chinese. Find her on Twitter: @ew\_jin.
