International (Atomic Warfare) Shareholder Disputes in Closely Held Family Companies

Feuds between closely held companies, and particularly family, often arise during the management and operation of a global business raising complex international issues that can exacerbate a dispute. This panel will explore from a multi-jurisdictional approach realities, tactics, logistics, and issues involved in shareholder disputes in closely held family companies. Issues such as selection of jurisdiction(s) for the disputes, legal team formation, "war chest" funding, governing law, receiverships, pre-judgment remedies, discovery, shareholder buyouts, related criminal proceedings, intellectual property use, and settlement/end-game strategy will be explored. The panelists will present perspectives from the common (U.S. and Commonwealth) and civil law approaches.

Renewable Energy Opportunities and Energy-Related Infrastructure Development

Decades ago, developed nations began gradually shifting their societies away from fossil fuel energy and towards renewable solar, wind, or water-based resources. Recent trends show that renewable energy continues earning a growing share of the energy market. Today, advances in technology, coupled with increased interest of private equity and international governmental cooperation, have made renewable energy a staple of modern industry, innovation, and infrastructure. Global environmental concerns have also led to the creation of multilateral governmental infrastructure funds to help finance renewable energy infrastructure projects in developing nations. The panelists will draw on a broad range of experience and practice areas to examine the risks and opportunities for use of solar energy in Florida and Latin America for both, residential and utility scale facilities, as well as prospects for floating solar projects, the rise of the electric vehicle, electric charging stations and related infrastructure. Revitalized interest of private equity firms in the solar and wind energy spaces, financing options for renewable energy in addition to federal, state and local government treatment and incentives. Each of the mega-projects also come with a unique set of risks and high potential for disputes. The panel will address the various methods of executing renewable energy projects, mitigating litigation risks, and utilizing alternative dispute resolution methods.

INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS TRANSACTIONS TRACK

Morning Sessions

10:00 a.m. to 11:00 a.m.

International Money Laundering Through the Precious Metals Markets

Criminal prosecutions and government seizures of precious metals imports and exports at the border are on the rise as corrupt organizations and foreign governments utilize the precious metals markets as a vehicle for trade-based money laundering of illicit proceeds or profits. Recent cases involve Venezuelan government organizations and leaders, drug trafficking cartels in Peru and Colombia and include schemes to circumvent U.S. sanctions. U.S. laws and regulations require dealers in precious metals to have robust anti-money laundering programs. This panel will discuss recent prosecutions and seizures involving money laundering through precious metals, latest enforcement trends, the components of an effective program to avoid involvement in money laundering transactions, and how lawyers can be effective advisors to international precious metals dealers in navigating risk in these markets.

Blockchain and Cryptocurrency: Novel Issues in Commercial Litigation

Introduced into the mainstream of commerce less than a decade ago, Blockchain and cryptocurrency have become an undeniable hallmark of this technological age. Investors, private equity and technocrats alike have gravitated towards the dream of decentralized currencies and applications that are autonomous, anonymous, and unregulated. However, this new plane of exchange that ties technology and finance in a novel creature very few fully understand has presented its own complex web of issues. This panel will address some of the most prevalent litigation issues arising out of the adoption of blockchain technology, cryptocurrency, and NFTs in the marketplace, including data theft, e-wallet security, financial fraud, propensity for use in money laundering, adoption or recognition by sovereigns, and how different national policies try to balance the interests of their consumers in the midst of an irresistible wave of technological progress.

International Construction Arbitration – Challenges, Cultural Differences, and Conflict Management Options

This session will explore the various issues and challenges when the project's arbitrations and mediation are international based on the panel's own experiences. What is the cultural impact on the process of the interplay between the common law and civil law traditions in viewing an international construction dispute? How the exchange of information may be limited with parties from civil law jurisdictions where "Discovery" is not common and which is limited in the ICDR's International Arbitration Rules consistent with international arbitration practice. Other areas where the parties' expectations may differ include witness examination, experts, written submissions, privilege concerns, emergency relief, early disposition, and the allocation of costs. Challenges may also arise when dealing with language and logistical issues and when proceeding in a virtual or hybrid setting.

A Look to the Future: Integrating Technology Across Various Industry Sectors to Increase the Use and Acceptance of International Dispute Resolution

The ICDR has established a Working Group for the resolution of technology and life science disputes. This working group is part of the ICDR's global effort to study and obtain the feedback of experienced international practitioners in this growing area. The result will be a set of practical proposals for what the dispute resolution community, including the ICDR, should do to assist the information technology, life sciences, construction, energy, aviation, aerospace, and many other industries in resolving their technology and intellectual related disputes. Join members of this working group, corporate counsel, and other dispute resolution experts from various industry sectors in an interactive discussion about the resolution of technology disputes worldwide.

Afternoon Sessions

2:00 p.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Foreign Direct Investment: Increasing Oversight, Compliance, and Russian Sanctions

In the interests of national security, foreign direct investments (FDI) in the United States are receiving increased scrutiny, in particular from the Committee on Foreign Investment in the United States (CFIUS), the inter-agency authority overseeing the national security repercussions of foreign investment, as a result of the Foreign Investment Risk Review Modernization Act. Additionally, last year saw significant enforcement actions by the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC), shaping how businesses must conduct their compliance programs. Finally, sanctions put in place in response to the Ukrainian-Russian conflict will complicate FDI here in Florida. This panel features speakers from our nation's capital who have served in senior positions in CFIUS and OFAC who will discuss how these agencies are projected to shift their focus in light of recent events, as well as a Miami attorney originally from Russia specializing in Russian international business law.

Moderator: Jorge Salcedo, Salcedo Attorneys at Law P.A., Miami, Florida

Speakers: Tom Feddo, Capstone, Washington, D.C. (formerly Assistant Secretary of the Treasury for Investment Security)

Changing Beneficial Ownership Requirements

Over the last few years, most world powers have established methods for collecting information on the ultimate beneficial owners of companies and trusts. The United States was stubborn in adopting regulations in this regard, but by 2023 information for existing U.S. companies and trusts will be due to be submitted online to FinCEN in accordance with the Corporate Transparency Act. As soon as this year for newly formed companies, U.S. practitioners will have to grapple with the collection of this information, or their clients could face stiff civil and criminal penalties. With the Pandora Papers, companies formed in the British Virgin Islands have experienced how the collection of beneficial owner information can result in unintended violations of privacy when proper precautions are not taken. This panel will seek to educate practitioners about the coming wave of information collection and will caution them against unintended consequences with recent examples.

Moderator: James Meyer, Harper Meyer LLP, Miami, Florida

Speakers: Richard Montes de Oca, MDO Partners, Miami, Florida
Jeffrey Hagen, Harper Meyer LLP, Miami, Florida
Laura Paredes, Ingram Micro Inc., Miami, Florida

CLOSING PLENARY SESSION

4:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Ethical Considerations in Cross-Border Negotiations and Dispute Resolution

This session will compare and contrast ethical obligations of attorneys in the United States, Latin America, and Europe in the context of cross border negotiations and dispute resolution. For example: In what way does culture play a role when dealing with ethical considerations in the legal industry? How do those differences impact the outcome of a transaction and the level of trust among the parties? The panel will discuss ethical considerations in specific situations; for example, misrepresentation of facts by the client or by the attorney, unintended disclosure (or omission) of information by a party or by the attorney, circulation of e-mails to unintended addressees, misleading mark-up of documents, etc. The panel will discuss how attorneys of the different jurisdictions should behave when facing those ethical issues and the consequences when those obligations are not observed.

Moderator: Otavio Carneiro, Akerman LLP, Miami, Florida

Speakers: Dan Whyte, Head of Legal, AMC Networks International – Latin America, Miami, Florida

Carmen Perez-Llorca, Assistant Dean for International and Graduate Programs, University of Miami School of Law, Miami, Florida
