from THE PRESIDENT'S DESK...

FELLOW EMPLOYEES:

I HAVE known and worked with many people during my 26 years with LUFKIN, but I have never known nor met a man more dedicated to his company than Walter Trout was to Lufkin Industries.

He was an inspiration to all who knew him. It was his nature to radiate warmth and consideration for those around him. He engendered confidence and respect—for himself, for the activities in which he was a participant, and for the people associated with him.

Walter Trout was a uniquely perceptive, fair, yet exacting business leader. His single-minded devotion to his company and its employees was unmatched.

There never was a time when Walter Trout's door was not open to the employees of this company regardless of their position. He took the time to listen to our problems whether they were business or personal, and we always could rely on his excellent advice.

We at Lufkin Industries are fortunate to have had the benefit of Walter Trout's leadership and counsel for these many years.

A significant era in the history of Lufkin Industries is gone with his passing, and we have suffered a great loss. He symbolized what Lufkin Industries stands for today.

We are deeply saddened by his passing, but we must live up to the high ideals he has set for this company, and continue to build quality equipment worthy of the name LUFKIN.

HENRY WILLIAMS demonstrates part of the procedure he suggested for handling plywood. He is slipping a runner under the stack to allow room for banding. In the background are Eric Long, left, Industrial Engineering, and Ed Root, Warehouse foreman.

WILLIAMS' IDEA IS A WINNER...

HENRY WILLIAMS is the eighth monthly winner of the Trailer Division's Project 100/300 Cost Reduction Tournament.

His suggestion concerned the stacking of scrap plywood, pallets and spacers on towveyor carts in the Trailer Warehouse, where he is an employee.

He recommended that a new procedure be adopted so that the material would not have to be restacked in handling.

The total savings which will be realized by the adoption of the new handling process is $589.50 per year and several man hours per week.

He selected the Black & Decker drill as his prize for submitting the winning suggestion.

Trailer employees wishing to enter the contest are reminded that the monthly deadlines are 12 p.m. on the fifteenth. The contest is open to all shop employees and foremen.

S.C. Donahoe Retires

SYLVESTER DONAHOE, right, is presented his gold retiree watch on behalf of the company by R. E. (Mutt) Barr, vice president and plant superintendent.

AFTER almost 45 years, S. C. Donahoe closed his tool box, shut his lunch kit, bid his friends a warm farewell and retired from Lufkin Industries.

Sylvester never worked full time for any other company; he's spent his entire working years here with Lufkin. He punched his first time card October 22, 1926, and began operating a drill press.

As the years went by, he operated many different machines including milling machines and engine lathes. When he retired he was working in the Jig Department.

He and Mrs. Donahoe have one son, who is a graduate of The University of Texas, and three grandchildren. They live two miles east of Diboll. They moved there about five years ago anticipating his retirement.

Sylvester plans to spend his time raising a small vegetable garden and just "taking it easy."

WALTER TROUT 1900-1971

An Era has Passed for Lufkin

By Virginia Allen

WALTER W. TROUT . . . started as errand boy and ended as Chairman of the Board

IT WAS with a deep sadness that we learned Monday morning July 19, that Walter W. Trout, chairman of the board of our company, had died in his sleep sometime early that morning.

But although we were saddened, we felt the abiding sense of mercy that it was in this way that his full and meaningful life on this earth had come to an end.

Mr. Trout had been wagering a losing fight with a malignancy of his throat. This battle was fought in a typical Walter Trout manner—quietly, uncomplainingly and with few people outside his family and close friends knowing that the fight was going on. He never lost his sense of humor, was always smiling and good-natured as he had always been.

Some weeks ago he suffered a heart attack but even during his recuperation, he was thinking about our company. He called the editor of The Roundup one morning and with typical deference, asked if it were convenient for her to come visit with him in his home so that he might tell her some more pertinent facts about the history of his company in preparation for an article she was to write for September publication.

It was one of the most pleasant occasions this writer has experienced when visiting with him. He was congenial and happily involved in the subject matter. Although this writer was aware of the portent of this visit, there was not the slightest hint of morbidity from Mr. Trout.

There were many interesting and fascinating things he related about this company's early years, but those are for another story; this one is about him.

We can recall some of the things we learned about him when he was interviewed at the time of his retirement from this company in December, 1968.

For as long as he could remember, Walter Trout said his life had been enmeshed with that of this company. He was just a small child when his parents moved to Lufkin from Milwaukee where he was born. His father came to this little east Texas town by invitation from the founders of a small repair shop which was named Lufkin Foundry & Machine Company and was sold some stock in the company and employed as its general manager.

Most everyone knows the story of the fantastic early growth of this company under the guiding genius of his father, the late W. C. Trout. And most everybody knows of how Walter Trout stepped into his shoes when he died and continued to lead this company to greatness—a greatness that is exemplified wherever the name LUFKIN is stenciled on products marketed throughout the world.

Walter Trout said he received his first pay for "working" for this company when he was 13 years old. He was "hired" as errand boy and was paid in cash at the end of each week as everyone else was paid in those days. It was a long time before he realized that his father was putting the cash in his envelope and that he really wasn't on the company payroll.

Mr. Trout said he knew in later years that that was his father's way of keeping him off the streets and out of trouble.

His first real job with the company was in the foundry department as an apprentice chipper and grinder when he was 15 years old and he was paid $1.38 per day. After that he worked during the summers and all holidays in the machine shop, learning to operate every machine tool in the plant.

Following his college work, he decided to go back to his native Milwaukee and not come back to work for his dad's "company," a decision a lot of young men make. But after two years in Wisconsin, he came back "home" and worked in the engineering department until he was put in the sales department and sent to the South Liberty field to assist in the installation of pumping units, the first oil field to use Lufkin units almost exclusively.

In December, 1925, he was transferred to Tulsa to manage the Mid-Continent division. It was there that he met and married Mrs. Trout.

In 1934, he returned to Lufkin and was named assistant to the president in charge of sales. He was elected a director of the company in 1937, vice president in 1943 and president in 1948.

His penchant for delegating work to capable employees and his determination to diversify and equip this plant with the finest machine tools that money could buy have been the cornerstones for the success today of Lufkin Industries.

It was sad to learn of his death and yet—this writer doubts he would have had it any other way. The night of his passing he was with good friends at his "second" home on the beach near Gilchrist, Texas. He loved this place, loved the sound of the waves washing ashore, loved to see his grandchildren frolicking on the sands of the beach.

When his friends left after dinner that evening, he listened to the Astros ball game, still extremely pleased and excited over the triple play they had made the day before. About 11 p.m. he went to bed and to sleep—facing the bay and listening to the waves.

Is there a happier, better way to end a successful sojourn on this earth? We think not.

Angelina College Scholarships Announced

WINNERS of the first $600 two-year scholarships to Angelina College have been announced by the Lufkin Industries Foundation.

The four winners are:

Randall Glenn Arnold, son of Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Arnold. Mrs. Arnold is employed in the Mill Supplies Division.

Joyce Ann Skinner, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Jefferson Skinner. Her father is a machine operator in the Welding & Structural Shop.

Jennifer Lea Clonts, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Clonts. Her father works in the repair department of the Trailer Division.

Billy Eugene Burris, son of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur M. Burris. His father is a machinist in the Machine Shop.

These four new scholarships to Angelina College are in addition to the four-year scholarships to any Texas college which have been awarded by the Foundation since 1964.

The two-year scholarships, limited to Angelina College, are based on need, leadership, aptitude, achievement and other qualifications with the only scholastic requirement being the acceptance of the graduating senior high school student to Angelina College.

The Foundation feels these scholarships will be beneficial to our employees' children, both black and white, who would not qualify for the four-year scholarships because of grades alone, the trustees state.

In announcing these new two-year scholarships, the trustees said that the Foundation wishes to assist as many employees' children as possible to get some education beyond high school. There are no restrictions so far as courses of study are concerned.

Angelina College offers many courses in vocational and technical fields as well as academic preparation for degree work in four-year colleges.

Children of employees who are entering their senior year in high school this fall are urged to consider these scholarships and make application for them. A deadline date for applications will be announced later during their senior year.

To be eligible to apply for one of the two-year Foundation scholarships, a high school student must have a parent who has been employed by Lufkin Industries in its Lufkin office or plant for at least one year when the student registers for the senior year in high school.

A student whose employee-parent becomes totally incapacitated, retires or dies at any time during such student's tenure in high school is eligible to apply provided the parent had been an employee of Lufkin Industries for at least two years prior to such incapacity, retirement or death.

A student whose parent is an officer of the company at the time such student registers for the senior year in high school is not eligible.

The scholarship is paid $150 per semester to Angelina College for two years. To continue to receive the scholarship after having been named the recipient, the student must remain in good standing at the College and the parent must remain employed by Lufkin Industries.

Applications must be filed with the Financial Aids Office at Angelina College, located in Room 111 in the Administration building.

Applications will be considered by the Angelina College scholarship committee and scholarships will be awarded according to their recommendations. No officer or employee of Lufkin Industries is a member of the Angelina College scholarship committee.

MR. AND MRS. Jefferson Skinner and Joyce

A Visit with SCHOLARSHIP WINNERS

By Carolyn Curtis

WINNERS of the new Angelina College scholarships are warm and friendly, ambitious and eager to get started in their college work.

Each has chosen a career to follow in adult life. Their enthusiasm is contagious when their conversations turn to this subject.

JOYCE Skinner plans a career in data processing and she interjects some of her characteristic humor into the reason for her choice.

"I always wanted to work with computers because I think they're the machines of the future. Also, they say computers are taking over the world and I want to be one of the people who can make them work for us!"

Joyce's accomplishments and activities at Kennard High School cover a broad range of interests.

She was popular among her classmates who elected her cheerleader and junior class favorite. She served her sophomore and junior classes as secretary and treasurer respectively.

She developed a taste for the written word through her English courses and loves to curl up with an intriguing novel or short story.

When she tried her hand at writing, she won second place in an essay contest out of entries from all five schools in the district. The subject of her essay was conservation.

She was a member of Future Homemakers of America and was the club's reporter during her junior year.

Joyce sews many of her own clothes and cooks. As the oldest of seven children, she explains that she helps with meal preparation "partly out of necessity and partly as a hobby."

As in most everything else she undertakes, Joyce excels in her hobby of cooking. In 1969 she took first place prizes in both county and district 4-H competition in vegetable preparation.

She also took second place honors for two consecutive years in record book preparation. She has been president of 4-H and treasurer of the Houston County 4-H Council.

Joyce is president of the junior choir at Simpson Chapel Baptist Church.

The seven children in her family range in age from four to 18.

JENNIFER Clonts took a number of business courses at Apple Springs High in preparation for her intended career as a secretary.

She plans to enroll in secretarial studies at Angelina College and looks forward to office work when she gets her Associate of Arts degree. She excelled in typing, shorthand and bookkeeping in high school.

Jennifer was a member of Future Homemakers of America and was named best homemaking student during her senior year. Her grades in Homemaking were in the high 90s.

She says that her favorite activity in high school was leading cheers at the basketball games. She was a cheerleader for four years.

She also played on the girl's volleyball team.

Jennifer presently is getting in on the groundwork of organizing a youth choir at Apple Springs Baptist Church. She has been a member of Girls' Auxiliary there.

She is next to the oldest of four children. Her older brother, Clifton, is an employee of the Machine Shop, second shift. He will be continuing his education at Angelina College this fall and plans to be a vocational agriculture teacher. Jennifer and Clifton have a younger brother and sister.

BILLY BURRIS is putting into practice his theory on selecting an occupation.

"I think the main consideration should be how much you enjoy what you do rather than how lucrative the career is or what the working hours would be."

When he took drafting at Lufkin High School, he stumbled upon his chosen field.

The first year concentrated on machine drawing, which he said he liked "just so so."

But the second year of drafting was house drawing and he went wild. One of the class projects was designing a home and his was T-shaped featuring a raised ceiling and a spiral staircase leading to a half floor above.

"When I showed the house plans to the class, they said I went window-happy because nearly all the windows were bay windows," he laughed as he got caught up in the description of his dream home. He estimated that it would cost about $50,000 to build the house.

Ever since that project, he has wanted to be an architect. After earning his Associate of Arts degree in drafting, he plans to transfer to Sam Houston State University to study architecture.

He likes the East Texas area and would like to live here after college.

At LHS he was a member of the Distributive Education Club and worked after classes at Perry Brothers in the Angelina Mall.

He took woodshop and for a class project he designed and built an eight-foot hydraplane boat of plywood and fiberglass with a 15-horsepower motor. Among his favorite projects, the boat runs a close second behind his house design.

Billy has been a member of CYF at the First Christian Church.

His older sister is Lynne Owens, Mills Supplies Division. Billy has one four-year-old niece.

ASK Randy Arnold about the highlight of his high school years and his reply is quick . . . playing in the state finals as second baseman for the Lufkin High School baseball team.

Show a little interest in his baseball career and he'll bring out his scrapbook crammed full of clippings about the team's successful year. Mother Edith Arnold, Mill Supplies, says she spent eight hours on that scrapbook, which is a comment and not a complaint when your son is one of the star players.

Thumbing through his scrapbook, Randy is quick to share the limelight with the other guys, especially the other four besides himself who made the All-District first team.

With the spring baseball season still so fresh on his memory, Randy readily admits that playing ball is foremost on his mind in reference to his entering Angelina College in the fall.

The conference in which the junior college will play should provide some tough competition and Randy likes that.

But Randy's enthusiasm for baseball would lead you to believe that he hasn't had an academic thought since deciding to attend college.

Not true. His ambitions are high. He's signed up for pre-law at Angelina College and is considering transferring to The University of Texas in two years.

After finishing school, he intends to practice law in Lufkin, where he says "people are nicer than anywhere else." When he was younger, he experienced the usual desire to live away from Lufkin when he became an adult. He says that most youth go through that stage, but that he was one of those who reconsidered and decided to return to Lufkin.

In high school Randy was an all-around athlete. Besides baseball, he played guard on the Panther football team and was captain of the team. But he prefers baseball to football, because he says the practice sessions are less strenuous and that baseball "doesn't demand as much of you physically."

He was a member of the Fellowship of Christian Athletes and was vice president of the Christians in Action group on campus. Randy and his family attend St. Paul's Methodist Church.

He was named Citizen of the Month twice—by the faculty at LHS and by the Noon Lions Club.

Randy was a member of Student Council and Key Club.

He has a younger brother and sister.

The employee's pay envelope, through an error, contained a blank check. Gloomily he handed it to his wife and said, "Just as we thought, my deductions have finally caught up with my salary."

Husband: "I bought something today for the one I love best. Guess what."
Wife: "A box of cigars."

The dollar doesn't go very far these days, but what it lacks in distance it makes up for in speed.

The best executive is the one who has sense enough to pick good men to do what he wants done and self restraint enough to keep from meddling with them while they do it.

"Ida: "I hear you've accepted him. Did he happen to mention that he'd proposed to me?"
Ina: "Not specifically. However, he did say that he'd done a lot of foolish things before he met me."

A bookstore received this request by mail: "Please send me the name of a book on hygiene. I'm afraid I have it."

A lion broke loose from the circus. The local sheriff formed a posse to track him down. "Before we go," said the sheriff, "let's all step into the saloon and have a drink."
They all had whiskey except little Luke. "What's the idea of drinking ginger ale?" asked the sheriff. "We're all drinking whiskey. Why aren't you?"
"Not me," replied Luke. "Whiskey gives me too much courage."

A cannibal visited a native on another island and saw his new possession, a huge food freezer. Admiring it, the visitor inquired, "How much food does it hold?"
"Well," the native replied thoughtfully, "it holds the two fellows who brought it."

"What ever became of that kid who couldn't hold on to anything?"
"He became a famous drop kicker."

Doctor to patient: "Please stretch your hands out."
The man did and they trembled violently.
"Good heavens, how much do you drink?" asked the doctor.
Patient: "Very little. I spill most of it."

Well-behaved children usually go to bed quietly three or four times an evening.

"What do you mean by insulting me in that yellow rag of a newspaper of yours?" roared the politician. "I won't stand for it. I demand an immediate apology!"
"Just a minute," answered the editor. "Didn't the news appear exactly as you gave it to me, that you had resigned as city treasurer?"
"Yes, it did, but I didn't intend it to be listed under 'Public Improvements.'"

A fisherman who caught 15 more bass than the law allowed was taken to court and fined $10.
"Do you have anything to say?" asked the judge.
"Yes, your Honor," smiled the fisherman, "I'd like six copies of the court record to show my friends."

Exhilaration is that feeling you get just after a great idea hits you and just before you realize what's wrong with it.

Federal credit term disclosure laws were sidetracked by one store which advertised—"Pay cash and then nothing a month for life."

"How much do I pay for a marriage license?" asked the young man.
"Five dollars now," replied the clerk, "and your paycheck for the rest of your life."

Said the oriental fortune teller, "For $20 I will answer any three questions."
"Wow! Isn't that a lot of money?"
"Yes, it is. What is question number two, sahib?"

Girl driver after a collision: "It was really my fault."
Gentleman: "Oh, no, it was my fault. I could plainly see that you've just started driving and I could easily have driven over into that field to avoid this."

Mother: "Junior, don't use such bad words."
Junior: "But, Mother, Shakespeare used them."
Mother: "Well then, don't play with him anymore."

G.I. explaining his black eye to the first sergeant: "I was hit by a guided muscle."
