Ken Kirsch has been promoted to the position of vice president of operations. Prior to filling this newly created role, he served as director of business process operations. Kirsch brings over 20 years of McLanahan experience relating to engineering, project management, quality, business processes and more. Due to the promotion of Nartatez, Sean McLanahan's title has changed to executive vice president and chief administrative officer of McLanahan Corporation.

The newly formed environmental division has led to two position changes. Cory Jenson, who previously served as a regional sales manager in the aggregates industry, will lead the new division as the general manager. Also joining the new division will be Brian Prenatt, director of engineering, who previously held the same position in McLanahan's mineral processing division.

Succeeding Prenatt as the director of engineering for the mineral processing division is Mike Smith. He previously served as the assistant director of engineering for the division.

Another newly formed department is being led by a McLanahan employee. Adam Eardley will serve as the director of the project management department.

Finally, Chris Kelley now holds the position of sales manager for the aggregate processing division. Chris was previously a regional sales manager focusing on the frac sand industry.

McLanahan continues to recognize its employees' potential and is proud to have the talented individuals in the company advance and grow.
