What Cities Probably Cannot Do

A black and white photograph of a city street scene. In the foreground, a large, abstract sculpture made of several rounded, light-colored blocks sits on a raised concrete platform. The sculpture is partially covered with a dark cloth. Behind the sculpture, a street with a white double line runs across the frame. In the background, there are several tall buildings, some with many windows, and some trees. The overall scene is an urban environment.
