Carrying the Dream and Flying High Again

August saw the Flying Eye Hospital finally take to the skies again when its dedicated volunteer medical and technical crew made their first sight-saving journey since the start of the pandemic. The plane initially stopped at Fort Worth, Texas, where ophthalmologists, nurses, and biomedical engineers from various Caribbean countries joined a two-week training program offering advanced knowledge and skills via simulation technology in the onboard classroom.

Always seeing challenges as opportunities, we refused to let COVID-19 restrictions derail our global sight-saving mission. So the moment we learned the Flying Eye Hospital was grounded, we shifted from traditional face-to-face training to online workshops aboard the Virtual Flying Eye Hospital. Our pioneering Cybersight online learning platform also proved extremely useful in ensuring eye doctors from across the developing world could continue to upgrade their skills in a safe environment.

Now back in the air again the Flying Eye Hospital will be continuing to transform the lives of even more needlessly blind patients on still more missions. Supported by Orbis partner, UC Davis Health, the Fort Worth initiative shared skills and knowledge with some 50 Bolivian, Chilean and Peruvian ophthalmologists in areas such as cataract removal, glaucoma, and macular degeneration. We have also recently pioneered a visionary regional training program in Doha for female ophthalmologists affected by ongoing political strife in their Middle East homelands.

In readying the Flying Eye Hospital for its relaunch, our maintenance team carried out a series of equipment upgrades and installed several advanced computers and power systems that have greatly reduced the aircraft's weight. The team also conducted a comprehensive inspection of the plane's airframe and medical equipment to ensure optimal efficiency during every sight-saving mission. Thanks to the continued support of you and other donors like you, the Flying Eye Hospital will be transforming needlessly blind lives for many years to come.

Meet our in-air Sight Savers!

Director of Aircraft Operations

Our Director of Aircraft Operations, Bruce Johnson and his team manage essential tasks such as flight planning and maintenance. His colleague, Maurice Geary, Director of the Flying Eye Hospital, meanwhile, gets volunteer teams from all over the world to review and evaluate each sight-saving project the plane carries out. Behind the scenes is a strong management team who looks after planning and co-ordinates complex logistical necessities such as supplies, customs, visitor schedules and surgical case reviews, etc.

The Plane's Clinical and Medical Team

Newly recruited volunteer ophthalmologists are responsible for providing ophthalmological training for local medical professionals via in-flight workshops using simulation technology to upscale attendees' diagnostic knowledge and surgical techniques. The plane's nurses help patients who come on board for surgery to prepare for – and recover from – their operations and also take charge of surgical instrument hygiene. The nursing team also works hard to teach visiting trainees key topics such as post-operative physical and psychological care.

Aircraft Technical and Maintenance Management

In addition to caring for vital diagnostic, surgical and teaching equipment, the Flying Eye Hospital's team of professional biomedical technicians is responsible for testing and inspecting each piece of medical equipment itself. Such maintenance and repair is essential if the aircraft and its crew are to continue providing optimal professional care for patients and support for training workshop attendees. On the ground, various aircraft engineers carry out further maintenance of airframe equipment, generators, water purification systems, medical gases, etc.

Breaking Down Geographical and Technical Boundaries: How a Miracle Saved Little Rose's Sight

Geoff Oliver Bugbee / Orbis

Like other kids, three-year-old Sernai (Mongolian for Rose) would occasionally suffer from minor ailments. While her mum and dad could not understand why their daughter's eyes swelled up each time she got sick, they did not worry overmuch as the swelling vanished each time she recovered. Eventually, came the day when the problem did not go away. While Sernai's parents realized their daughter needed urgent medical attention, they are nomadic farmers who could not leave their livestock unattended while they accompanied her on the long journey to hospital.

Eventually, Sernai's parents took her on the six-hour trip to Orbis's partner facility in Ulaanbaatar. After inspecting the girl, Orbis-trained pediatric surgeon, Dr. Battsetseg, established that a tumor in an eye socket was putting pressure on her eye. If not treated quickly, the problem could easily have caused blindness at any time.

As such surgery is extremely complex, Dr. Battsetseg immediately admitted Sernai to hospital. Using Cybersight, she then contacted a vastly experienced Orbis volunteer surgeon called Dr. Ron Pelton, in Colorado, U.S.A. Having diagnosed Sernai as suffering from an eyelid hemangioma that required an urgent operation, Dr. Pelton leveraged his 20-year specialist experience of such cases to assist his Mongolian counterpart during the complex surgical procedure.

Sernai's operation was so successful she had completely healed within two months and she was soon happily playing on the grasslands with her family's goats and sheep again. In accelerating the treatments that ensure kids like Sernai can grow up happily, Cybersight breaks both geographical and technological boundaries.

> "Thanks to the brilliant overseas doctors who miraculously saved my grandchild's sight!"

Green Vision Screening Creates Better Services

2021 saw Orbis open fully 17 Green Vision Centers in rural India. All 17 facilities use solar power-generated electricity which not only eliminates problems caused by local power cuts but also minimizes carbon footprints and conserves precious natural resources. The end result is uninterrupted access to quality eye care for over two million patients. In addition to free eye screenings, eye glasses and eye care services for local children, each center can refer cases to hospitals for further treatment where necessary.

Artificial Intelligence Ensures Swifter Screening of Diabetic Eyes

Orbis now leverages state-of-the-art Artificial Intelligence (AI) technology to ensure more accurate screenings and faster referrals for patients afflicted with diabetic retinopathy. Already transforming lives in resource-poor countries such as Rwanda, our pilot AI screening scheme can quickly detect diabetic retinopathy by simply capturing images of sufferers' eyes. Reducing the risk of associated complications by a staggering 98%, the system is perfect for places with poor medical infrastructures and a critical lack of ophthalmologists.

Resolving Eye Care Shortfalls in Poor Countries

Zambia has only 38 ophthalmologists. To address this serious shortage, Orbis has joined forces with local partner hospitals to build innovative models aimed at improving training quality. Major developments include the establishment of a postgraduate resource center where a wet lab helps trainee surgeons sharpen their skills on animals' eyes. One of our Zambian public hospital partners has also set up a dedicated vitreoretinal unit with the country's only state-of-the-art retinal surgical facilities.

New Research: Over 50% of Hongkongers Have Never Undergone a Comprehensive Eye Examination

In September this year, Orbis and the Hong Kong Ophthalmological Society jointly conducted an online study of 6,253 people called "Eye Health Warning Signs in Hong Kong". Results showed that "fatigue", "itchiness" and "dryness" were the most common visual problems, and that some 40% of participants were at moderate to high-risk of eye disease. With 55% of respondents aged 50-59 and 57% of those aged 60 or older at moderate or high risk, the problems obviously increase as people age.

Alarmingly, most Hongkongers are largely unaware of the importance of good visual health, with fully 52% saying they had never received a comprehensive eye examination from an ophthalmologist. Some 44% of those who had undergone tests had not done so for at least five years. More worryingly still, roughly 32% and 38% of those aged 20-29 and 30-39 had the lowest testing percentages compared to 73% of those aged 60 or over.

Dr. Li Yuen Mei, Emmy, Vice Chairman of the Hong Kong Ophthalmological Society and an Orbis volunteer ophthalmologist, said that different eye health warnings reflect specific potential visual problems, and that those whose danger signs appear too frequent should immediately arrange to visit an ophthalmologist. As many initial symptoms of eye diseases are not clear cut, having regular eye examinations will ensure timely diagnosis and appropriate treatment.

Nine major eye health warning signs

Common signs in survey respondents	Proportion %
Fatigue	94.35%
Itchiness	81.38%
Dryness	83.54%
Foreign object stuck in eyes	63.36%
Blurry vision and heavy eyelids	68.11%
Burning and pain	31.63%
Increase in sticky eye discharges	45.16%
Extreme sensitivity to bright light and other external stimuli	68.45%
Seeing flashing lights or dark shadows	52.04%

Leave a Legacy that Will Endure for Eternity

Death remains a taboo subject in Chinese culture as discussing such topics is seen as 'tempting fate'. Many people cling to traditional beliefs and avoid making wills as they wrongly think only rich folks need to settle their affairs. With new generation of Hongkongers now realizing the importance of planning their assets for retirement and after their deaths, views about legacy planning are becoming far more positive across all age groups. A well-managed will ultimately not only protect your family members after you have gone, but can also be of huge benefit to needy people in poorer countries.

Making charitable bequests in one's will is part and parcel of life in Western countries. While many of us here in Hong Kong are keen to turn the riches we "cannot take away" into meaningful charitable gifts, we may not be aware of the best way to do so. To help get people started, local lawyer Ms. Ryanne Lai and her community service activist dad, Mr. Lai Pui Wing, decided to launch a legacy giving advisory service. The consultancy now partners local law firms in Hong Kong and is staffed by volunteer lawyers who provide free, professional and customized will-making services. The ultimate aim is to encourage Hongkongers to donate their estates and leave a "gift for tomorrow" to deserving causes such as Orbis. Knowing that every gift, no matter how large or small, makes a difference, the team's members are very passionate about what they do.

In its first year alone, The "ForeverGift.hk" team was able to help over 1,800 people and benefit around 200 charities. Those for whom they have successfully created wills include roughly 30 Orbis supporters who have generously bequeathed a portion of their estate to help sustain our sight-saving mission!

One of the Orbis donors who has recently organized her will, Monica addressed an October legacy talk attended by a group of nearly 200 Orbis supporters online and offline. "Power is like sand. While we may think we only possess a tiny amount, each grain can help build a mighty tower. As the global economic environment getting tougher by the day, charities like Orbis now need our donations more than ever before!"

Willing to donate a legacy gift worth at least HK$10,000 to Orbis or another equally worthy cause? "ForeverGift.hk" will be happy to help you draft your will for free!

Eye Care Workshop for Kindergartens – “Dance-sing Difficulty”

Determined to encourage youngsters to start protecting their eyes early, we have now pioneered a new experiential learning program called the "Dance-sing Difficulty" Eye Care Workshop. Fun and engaging, the gatherings have been a big hit with both teachers and children at the many schools who’ve signed up to take part.

Participants at the events put on specially made "blurry" glasses that let them experience the daily hardships facing the sightless. In addition to games and songs, each workshop includes eyecare tips and an inspiring story about a blind African girl.

Sign Your Primary School Up for our Soon-to-Launch “Blindfold Touch” Workshop!

Blindfold experiences enable kids to feel first-hand the daily difficulties and inconvenience involved in losing one’s sight. Challenging participants to make sense of lines they trace with their fingers on special paper, "Blindfold Touch" is yet another opportunity to cultivate empathy and support for the visually impaired. Designed to be held during weekly sports lessons or after-school meetings, this upcoming activity is a great way to get kids in your classes interested in helping those who’ve had their sight stolen by eye disease.
