Dear George:

I know nobody who could give you a better judgment of the writers, alleged and real, than Brickell. I have a good deal of confidence, in some respects, in John Crowe Ransom. But I hear that his sister is one of your applicants.

If I could handle your composers and artists now I would do so gladly, but I can't, as I work seven days a week and six nights on my own candidates and I hope I will get done. But I don't quite know how.

When I see you I'll explain our system of honoraria.

Sincerely yours,

Henry Allen Moe
