My dear Miss Waxman:

I would be very glad if you would get tickets covering my passage from Chicago to Washington, and return to Nashville.

In connection with the Conference in Chicago, about which Mr. Embree knows, I have a note from Mrs. Blaine, inviting me for dinner at her home on Sunday evening, after the Conference adjourns. I am writing her in this mail, regretting that I shall not be able to do this because of the necessity for being in Washington the following morning. I have in mind no way in which I could accept this invitation unless I took a plane to Washington around midnight, and there are usually uncertainties about this, so I am assuming that the train is the safest procedure.

Sincerely yours,

Charles S. Johnson
