on the grounds that my experience in accountancy had been more private than public.

May I say that the Rosenwald Fellowship was the direct means of my coming into contact with men of great wisdom and above all I realized just how little I knew and just how much there was to be learned.

Mr. Nathan W. Levin,
Julius Rosenwald Fund,
900 South Homan Ave.,
Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir:

I have your letter dated April 9.

Our head bookkeeper, Mr. James H. Blow would like very much to have the advantage which you may offer in connection with the study of accounting at the University of Chicago for the summer quarter, 1930. Mr. Blow is the young man upon we depend in a very large measure for all of our accounting and a summers study will enable him to serve the institution in a much larger way. He is enthusiastically anxious to have this opportunity. He is a graduate of the two-year commercial course at Hampton Institute and then did two years further study at Wilberforce University, where he was also graduated from the commercial department there. He is a married man with one child. We shall be very glad to have Mr. Blow take advantage of the study as indicated in your letter.

With deep appreciation, I am

Yours very truly,

J. R. E. Lee
