FOREWORD

Educational funds for nursing have been in existence for many years. Most of them have been for graduate study to enable registered nurses to prepare for specialized service or for teaching or administrative positions.

Scholarship and loan funds for student nurses are comparatively new. The war with its pressing demand for nurses pointed up the need for them, and public response to that need was immediate and generous. Individuals and organizations, notably women's organizations, during 1942 established substantial scholarship and loan funds for student nurses, and so gave immeasurable help to the whole nurse recruitment program.

Listed in this pamphlet are organizations which continue to make available educational scholarship, fellowship, and loan funds to student and graduate nurses. The term "scholarship" connotes a financial grant which does not involve repayment; "fellowship" designates a grant for graduate study, while the term "loan" implies a grant to be used for educational purposes to be repaid by the recipient after graduation, sometimes without interest.

Federal funds provided by the Bolton Act for basic and graduate study in nursing now constitute the largest single resource. They are allotted to institutions approved by the Nurse Education Division of the United States Public Health Service, and are made available to students through the directors of nurses or the course directors. Federal funds for advanced work in the field of public health nursing may, in addition, be available through the director of the nursing division of the state departments of health.

By no means are educational funds for nurses provided only by the organizations listed. Many others have been established by colleges, universities and nursing schools and by local civic and nursing organizations. Sources through which information may be secured are included in the student and graduate sections of this pamphlet.
