Alexander Nevsky, USSR 1938. Directed by Sergei Eisenstein. Photographed by Eduard Tisse. Music Prokofiev.

This Saturday and Sunday RAM takes pride in presenting Sergei Eisenstein's Alexander Nevsky.

Nevsky was Eisenstein's first sound film. He conceived it as a cinematic opera, using the new dimension of sound to set up a unique and extraordinary relationship between the musical score and the visual images.

Eisenstein said of Alexander Nevsky that it: "...was my first sound film. I would have liked very much to experiment at leisure, to try some of the ideas that haunted me during the years I watched sound films from a distance. But the guns booming at Lake Khasan shattered my intentions. There was no time for daydreaming...it seemed impossible to ensure an organic unity of music and picture in the short time allotted to us. It seemed impossible to find and reproduce that wonderful inner synchronization of plastic and musical images, that is, to achieve that in which actually lies the secret of audio-visual impression...This is where the magician Sergei Prokofiev came to my rescue....Both music and "visual" music, that is, the representation, must be composed on the same principle. Here the experience of montage construction in the silent film comes in handy. The silent film demanded that the music develop in shot sequences along and in conformity with the narrative presentation of events....The repetition of an expressive combination of sounds, which is indispensable in music, is present in the rhythmical and montage groups of representations too."

To fully appreciate Alexander Nevsky one must appreciate this close relation between the music and the images. The film takes place in 1242, in the region of Russia menaced by Mongol raids. Prince Alexander Nevsky learns that the Teutonic knights are invading Russia. Some of the Russian leaders wish to make peace with the invaders, but the people mobilize under Nevsky. Though they lose several battles, and the Teutonic knights succeed in taking Pskov, they finally defeat the invaders in the great Battle on the Ice and the victorious people march into the liberated city of Pskov.

Georges Sadoul says of Alexander Nevsky: "The Battle on the Ice dominates the film, but its visual and aural power should not allow one to forget the other superb sequences of chromatic opera that pass from pastoral to lamentation and end in a triumphal cantata. Alexander Nevsky marks a decisive turning point in Eisenstein's work, one in which he moved from the masses as hero to individual and tragic heroes, characterized and shaped by their historic missions."

It should also be noted that besides Eisenstein and Prokofiev this film's visual music owes a great deal to the cameraman, Eduard Tisse, one of the greatest artists with a camera that ever lived.

From now until the first part of December the Assistant Deans will not be able to give permission to live and/or eat off campus. Very exceptional circumstances will be considered, but this does not guarantee that permission can be granted.

As previously threatened, we are changing the hours of morning classes so that they start and end 15 minutes earlier, on a trial basis, starting Monday, Oct. 27. This change is not expected to solve completely the problem of long queues in the dining hall at lunch time. It should help.

On Friday, November 7, the usual Friday night lecture will be replaced by an All-College Seminar. By mutual agreement of the Student Committee on Instruction and the Instruction Committee, the text for the seminar will be Dostoevski's Notes from the Underground. This is available in the Bookstore at $0.95 per copy. The story is over 100 pages long: do not, I urge, leave your reading of it to the last available hour!

Curtis A Wilson, Dean

Dear Richard,

I have noticed a certain amount of confusion in your paper recently, centering in your Letters to the Editor section and the reports on Delegate Council Meetings. I was pleased to see My letter published, I think it did clear up some of the confusion, but I am disturbed by the recent letter from Gabriel. He has been demoted and is probably feeling the need for vengeance (sic), which explains the letter's clear falsehoods. There was also a letter printed referring (sic) to a "god". I hope this did not refer to Me. I can fly -to fly meaning able to move in relation to the surface of the Earth without physical contact with it's (sic) surface -but I need neither wings nor tall buildings to do so. If it did mean Me, Richard, you must improve your editing(!), or stand the risk of participating in a small earthquake... Which brings me to another matter concerning a four-floor building in Annapolis, Maryland. I live there as much as any of you mortals, probably even longer(?). Just because I have not paid any tuition does not mean I do not go to classes... divine inspiration... object violently... Delegate Council... St John's will disappear... Jerrems... go first... You will be responsible... Hell... fair warning.

(The Shepherd Seduced by Death)

Fair, in fleeting robes purple
Upon the sunning field's verdure,
You dance, sweet Nymph, but nothing wot
The love it wakes in me unsought.

Passant on diaphane wings,
Jewel of fair Arcade's rings,
You taste, sweet Nymph, the honied mead
But straight it rushes to my head.

Above, the speeding Phoebus leers,
But Daphne's lesson still he fears;
What hope then I to win your side
Whom Grace nor Godhead can betide.

My fleecen fellows I have, maid;
A highland bagpipe I have plaid;
But flowers none to make you kirtle
Nor manna dew nor tort of turtle.

Stagger'd at this lofty height
Actaeon-like, constrain'd from flight,
My boundless heart submits to wrack
And waits the vengeful flock's attack.

There hoves a moment's magent shine
Ere you depart trochilidine,
Whence turn I care-lorn to my sheep
Or cross this crag to sounder sleep.

The following paragraphs are excerpted from The Chessmen of Mars by Edgar Rice Burroughs, part of the Barsoomian series. Tara of Helium is the daughter of the most powerful man on Mars, John Carter, who originally hails from Virginia. She has been captured by the kaldanes, one of whom is the first speaker. I hope you enjoy it.

"I will show you," he said, and lay down upon the floor. Then he detached himself from the body, which lay as a thing dead. On his spider legs he walked toward the girl. "Now look," he admonished her. "Do you see this thing?" and he extended what appeared to be a bundle of tentacles from the posterior part of his head. "There is an aperture just back of the rykor's mouth and directly over the upper end of his spinal column. Into this aperture I insert my tentacles and seize the spinal cord. Immediately I control every muscle of the rykor's body -it becomes my own, just as you direct the movement of the muscles of your body. I feel what the rykor would feel if he had a head and brain. If he is hurt, I would suffer if I remained connected with him; but the instant one of them is injured or becomes sick we desert it for another. As we would suffer the pains of their physical injuries, similarly do we enjoy the physical pleasures of the rykors. When your body becomes fatigued you are comparatively useless; it is sick, you are sick; if it is killed, you die. You are the slave of a mass of stupid flesh and bone and blood. There is nothing more wonderful about your carcass than there is about the carcass of a banth (the Barsoomian lion). It is only your brain that makes you superior to the banth, but your brain is bound by the limitations of your body. Not so, ours. With us brain is everything. Ninety per centum of our volume is brain. We have only the simplest of vital organs and they are very small for they do not have to assist in the support of a complicated system of nerves, muscles, flesh, and bone. We have no lungs, for we do not require air. Far below the levels to which we can take the rykors is a vast network of burrows where the real life of a kaldane is lived. There we have stored vast quantities of food in hermetically sealed chambers. It will last forever. Far beneath the surface is water that will flow for countless ages after the surface water is exhausted. We are preparing for the time we know must come -the time when the last vestige of the Barsoomian atmosphere is spent -when the waters and the food are gone. For this purpose were we created, that there might not perish from the planet Nature's divinest creation -the perfect brain."

"But what purpose can you serve when that time comes?" asked the girl.

"You do not understand," he said. "It is too big for you to grasp, but I will try to explain it. Barsoom, the moons, the sun, the stars, were created for a single purpose. At the very beginning things existed with life, but with no brain. Gradually rudimentary nervous systems and minute brains evolved. Evolution proceeded. The brains became larger and more powerful. In us you see the highest development; but there are those of us who believe that there is yet another step -that some time in the far future our race shall develop into the super-thing -just brain. The incubus of legs and chelae and vital organs will be removed. The future kaldane will be nothing but a great brain. Deaf, dumb, and blind it will lie sealed in its buried vault far beneath the surface of Barsoom -just a great, wonderful, beautiful brain with nothing to distract it from eternal thought."

"You mean it will just lie there and think?" cried Tara of Helium.

From the Biblical Archaeologist Reader:
Nelson Glueck: Exploring Southern
Palestine (The Negev)

Follow almost any well trodden Bedouin train in the Negev and it will lead you from one ancient site to another, datable by fragments of pottery among their foundation ruins, razed often to the very ground by time or tragedy or both. Unchanging topography has conditioned the locations and directions of the cross country pathways or roads, whose lines have varied but little throughout the long story of man's coming and going along them. Look for springs, however few they may be, and wells and cisterns too, and they will indicate the presence of settlements of centuries in their vicinity. Gaze at the slopes of hills, however rocky and barren, for the telltale grooves cut into them for considerable distances to lead the rare rainwater to reservoirs or cisterns or to terraced fields in or alongside the dry stream beds below. Check every shrub-fringed, frequently stone-lined channel leading across any slightly sloping wilderness plain, even if blanketed with a shattered cover of darkened sandstone pebbles and glaringly black flint fragments. You will find almost invariably that at its end is a cistern or a stretch of good soil, held firmly in place by a series of strong cross walls to withstand the scouring freshets of the occasional winter and spring rains. Acquaint yourself with the needs and fears, the moods and manners, of the broken array of peoples and civilizations that appeared at intervals along the horizon of time and, in a general way, you will know in advance where to look for the clues they left behind in the course of their passage. Isolated hilltops overlooking cultivable stretches and strategic roads were preferred in the Judaeian period of Iron II; fertile slopes open to the breezes were the predilection of their predecessors of Middle Bronze I during the Age of Abraham. And above all, read the Bible, morning, noon and night, with a positive attitude, ready to accept its historical references in whatever context they occur as arising from fact, until or unless other factors suggest other procedures.

And then go forth into the wilderness of the Negev and discover, trite as it may sound, that everything you touch turns into the gold of history, and that it is almost impossible not to stumble across the treasures of a robust past, whose existence becomes as real and as full of content and color and sound and fury and the thrill of progress and the pity of failure as the transient present, which is always ticking away so furiously to join the throng of those that need no longer hurry.

(Nelson Glueck was an American archaeologist and educator. "Among the more than 1,000 sites in the Middle East that Glueck uncovered were the copper mines of King Solomon and the ancient Red Sea port of Ezion Geber." He passed on in 1971.)

Drunk again on wine in Shadow drunk;
 Stumble, oh, sobbing on Crazy sidewalks,
 I am Not an Honest Man just a Bum,
 And the stars for you turn faster now and faster,
 Spinning disks, burning flowers, faces
 bleeding Light
 For you, you hear them Screaming, Not
 An Honest Man but just a Bum,
 So that you must kneel in an alley
 Vomiting away your Sin. The stars steady,
 Now they say for you, Ego absolute....
 Strange, you asked on the road to Hospital
 Why help Me (you said) I am just a bum.
 Then you saw yourself as Parody of Man.
 I saw you as myself grown Old and Tired.

I have a problem, and I haven't been able to talk it over with anyone except my cousin. I do not understand my ex-boyfriend. I loved him when we were going together, and now we are friends (I hope). Every time I call over there, he acts as if he is so busy. I have never been out with him, but I was thinking about going out. I want to call him, but I'm scared of what he might say. One time when I did call over there, he acted like "Mr Big Stuff" and said he could care less about me calling him. I still want to call, though. What do you think?

Yours truly,

Dear Concerned Citizen,

Over 650 citizens of Annapolis and its environs requested a public hearing on the deplorable conditions existing at the Bus Station at 120 West Street in Annapolis. The request and the basis for it, on which the hearing will be held, are enclosed.

The Mass Transit Administration, which operates the buses to Baltimore, and leases the terminal facility at the station granted the request and the hearing will be held on Wednesday, November 19, 1975 at 7:30pm in the County Council Chambers at the Arundel Center on Calvert Street in Annapolis. However, in granting the hearing, the MTA has placed on the agenda 4 alternative routes through the City of Annapolis all of which WOULD NOT USE THE BUS STATION.

As a representative of an organization interested in the betterment of Annapolis, you and the members of your organization are urged to attend this public hearing and make your views known. Unless a substantial number of citizens of this area attend this hearing and inform State Officials they will no longer tolerate the conditions existing at the Bus Station and urge the MTA to continue to use the Bus Station for its Annapolis passengers, Annapolis may find itself the only State Capital in the U.S. without a train station, airport, or bus station.

Sincerely,
Gerald W. Winegrad

MEETING WITH THE ADMINISTRATION, Oct 23d

Mr. Jackins listened to several complaints about the food service but said that in the future all complaints should go to the Food Committee: Brad Davidson, Carl Dunn, Marie Toler, Bruce Hopkins.

Beginning Monday, all morning classes will begin 15 minutes earlier. The dining hall will open and close 15 minutes earlier accordingly.

Mr. Dunham is now handling all FSK bookings. Those wishing to use the auditorium should see him or his aide, Ted Hendricks. The Asst. Deans will only grant extensions at closing time.

The Senior Common Room is for the use of tutors and should not be used by students.

A large number of glasses have been taken from the dining hall and must be returned. Their loss is a great inconvenience and a major expense for the school, who must replace them.

The Fire Drill will be on Monday at 4 pm. Since no buildings will actually be burning there is no excuse for dorm residents not to be in their rooms for the event.

Mr. Weigle went over the Iglehart and Randall plans in great detail. They have been tacitly approved by the Council and will go to the Board on Saturday. Mr. Tucker and the boys have staked out the outside dimensions of the proposed additions to the buildings.

The Delegate Council of St. John's College would like to thank Mrs. Carleton Mitchell for her generous gifts to the Garden Club. The flowers and shrubs Mrs. Mitchell has made possible are appreciated daily and will be enjoyed for years to come. They reflect a wonderful love and concern for the College and the Annapolis community.

Football: Spartans-12, Greenwaves-7. The Waves kicked off to Mr. Benjamin, who outran several people and then tossed to Mr. McCoy, who tossed to Mr. Jeschke, who scored. So, here we were, with only one-fifty-sixth of the game over, and the Waves were in trouble already. But after that disasterous start, they regrouped and played evenly with the Spartans from then on. Each team scored two more TDs, but each lost one through a penalty. Messrs. Berger, Jeschke and van Beuren combined for the other Spartan score, and Messrs. Storre and Gray for the Waves.

Guardians-28, Spartans-0.
Druids-19, Hustlers-6.

Unless the Waves can pull off a tie or a win over the Guardians when they last meet, the Guardians will have won another football title. It looks like that tie game between the Druids and Hustlers will prevent the Druids from a shot at the title...two missed conversions have done them in!
