Gym owner switches gear to reopen cycle studio

With a new year comes new resolutions, and like the many Santa Monica residents who have undoubtedly set goals related to fitness, finances and future success — business owner Steph Sklar-Mulcahy has a few resolutions of her own this year.

In 2019, thanks to the success of CycleBar Culver City, Sklar-Mulcahy was named CycleBar's Franchisee of the Year, but, this year, the business owner's focus is geared towards CycleBar Santa Monica, an establishment that was previously shuttered.

CYCLEBAR: Steph Sklar-Mulcahy is expanding her Culver City CycleBar business into Santa Monica.

"We hear a lot of people say over and over, 'Oh my God, how can you reopen a business that was closed? How do you feel like you can make it succeed?" but Sklar-Mulcahy said in an interview Tuesday that she's quite confident she will be able to replicate the success of her Culver City studio.

About 14 years ago, Sklar-Mulcahy got involved in the AIDS LifeCycle ride where she participated in a nearly 550 mile bike ride from San Francisco to Los Angeles in an effort to raise money for HIV and AIDS research.

"It's a really incredible event, because you have all these people that are like pedaling towards one goal and there's all these volunteers that are looking after you and it's really a perfect world — We call it the love bubble," Sklar-Mulcahy said. "You don't have to spend money, you don't have to buy food, your gear is carried for you.... and you finish the ride and it's like, 'How do I go back into the world after I just lived in this utopia for seven days?'"

Sklar-Mulcahy said was hooked from the first ride and soon after set a goal to find a place where she could make the love bubble happen every day.

"So when I found CycleBar and I opened it, it was the perfect place where I could create this community where everybody is happy to be here. And I think we've done that in Culver City," Sklar-Mulcahy said, mentioning how she has received letters and praise from past clients

Bloomberg sees California as model on climate change, guns

MICHAEL R. BLOOD
Associated Press

Mike Bloomberg's plan for California - export it.

The Democratic presidential candidate and former New York City mayor likes a lot of what he sees in the Golden State and thinks its efforts on climate change, gun control and criminal justice reform set a benchmark for other states to emulate.

"I think that California can serve as a great example for the rest of this country," Bloomberg told supporters at the opening of his Los Angeles campaign office.

Ed Foundation surpasses funding goal

BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

The Santa Monica Education Foundation recently wrapped up a three-week fundraising campaign that resulted in more than $213,000, which will be used to benefit the various science, technology, engineering and math programs that are currently in place on Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District campuses.

A total of 286 donors contributed local education foundation's $25,000 matching opportunity offered by MSD Partners, L.P. / Fairmont Miramar Hotel & Bungalows, according to Education Foundation officials. The match ran from Dec. 9-31 and coincided with the foundation's campaign to raise $145,000 for STEM programs during the final month of 2019.

In the four years that MSD Partners, L.P. / Fairmont Miramar Hotel & Bungalows has offered a match for donations to the foundation, more than $709,000 have been contributed to programs in Santa Monica schools. In fact, annual donations and education foundation endowments are funding $2.7 million in programs in Santa Monica schools this school year.

"We are so thrilled with the results of this match! STEM programs in our Santa Monica schools are so important," Santa Monica Education Foundation Executive Director Linda Greenberg said as she detailed how SMMUSD's STEM classes allow students to design and invent as well as prepare for the technology-based careers that may await them after graduation. "We are so grateful to MSD Partners, L.P. and Fairmont Miramar

Homeless women who took over California home gain support

TERENCE CHEA AND JULIET WILLIAMS
Associated Press

Some California lawmakers said they support a group of homeless women who have been illegally living in a vacant three-bedroom house since November, partly to protest real estate speculators who drive up housing costs in the pricey San Francisco Bay Area.

Moms 4 Housing, a collective recently formed to support the Oakland women, interrupted a press conference on legislation to boost housing construction Tuesday at City Hall, shouting "affordable housing now."

"I want to thank Moms 4 Housing for taking that house and for demonstrating that nowhere, nowhere should there be a vacant house anywhere in California when we have the housing crisis that we have," said Democratic Sen. Nancy Skinner of Berkeley. "And it was totally legitimate for those homeless moms to take over that house."

The women took over the home after they said they were unable to find permanent housing in the Bay Area, where high-paying tech jobs have exacerbated income inequality and a housing shortage. They also say they're protesting real estate developers who snap up distressed homes, then leave them empty.

They are awaiting a final ruling from a judge on whether they can stay, though Alameda County Superior Court Judge Patrick McKinney has tentatively ruled in favor of the property owner, Wedgewood Inc., a Redondo Beach-based real estate investment group that bought the home in a foreclosure auction last year.

Dominique Walker, 34, who has 1- and 5-year-old daughters, said she moved back to her native Oakland from Mississippi last year but could not find a place to live in the pricey market. She said many of the people who used to live in her neighborhood have been forced out by rising prices.

"Housing is a human right. I pay bills there. I pay water, PG&E, internet. We live there," Walker said. "We want to purchase the home ... it needs to belong back in the hands of the community. It was stolen through the foreclosure crisis."

The company bought the home for $501,000 and took possession days after the women moved in, said Sam Singer, a spokesman for Wedgewood. The 1908 house has one bathroom and is about 1,500 square feet (139 square meters).

This "is a straightforward situation of illegal entry and illegal occupation," Singer said. "They broke into the home ... and they have no legal or ethical defense for their action."

Lawyers for Walker argued in court last week that housing is a right and the court should allow the women to possess the house, particularly because it was vacant for a long time and the alternative would be to send them to the streets.

Assemblyman Ash Kalra, a Democrat from San Jose, said Tuesday that elected officials need to ensure "opportunistic landlords and corporate landlords" don't "keep our homes vacant."

Many Oakland residents say they are being pushed to the fringes of the Bay Area as they struggle to keep pace with housing costs.

Federal officials said last month that an uptick in the country's homeless population was driven entirely by a 16% increase in California, where the median sales price of a home is $500,000. It's higher in the San Francisco Bay Area.

The situation is so dire that Democratic Gov. Gavin Newsom approved a statewide rent cap on some properties.

Yet there are four vacant homes for every homeless person in Oakland, said Leah Simon-Weisberg, an attorney for Alliance of Californians for Community Empowerment, which is helping the mothers in court.

The empty eyesores are in devastated, predominantly minority neighborhoods, she said, adding that developers like Wedgewood "acquire the property, they kick the people out who are in it, and they sell it."

Singer said Wedgewood buys distressed properties, hires local workers to fix up the homes and sells them, hopefully to first-time

The other fake meat: Impossible Foods unveils pork, sausage

DEE-ANN DURBIN
AP Business Writer

After a big year for its plant-based burger, Impossible Foods has something new on its plate.

The California-based company unveiled Impossible Pork and Impossible Sausage on Monday evening at the CES gadget show in Las Vegas.

It's Impossible Food's first foray beyond fake beef. The Impossible Burger, which went on sale in 2016, has been a key player in the growing category of vegan meats. Like the burger, Impossible Food's pork and sausage are made from soy but mimic the taste and texture of ground meat.

Impossible Pork will be rolled out to restaurants first. The company isn't yet saying when it will come to groceries. Impossible Foods only recently began selling its burgers in grocery stores, although they're available at more than 17,000 restaurants in the U.S., Singapore, Hong Kong and Macau.

Burger King will give consumers their first taste of Impossible Sausage. Later this month, 139 Burger King restaurants in five U.S. cities will offer the Impossible Croissan'wich, made with plant-based sausage coupled with the traditional egg and cheese. Burger King did a similar test of the Impossible Whopper last year before expanding sales nationwide.

The pork products and the Impossible Burger are made in a similar way. Impossible Foods gets heme — the protein that gives meat its flavor and texture — from soy leghemoglobin, which is found in the roots of soy plants. To make heme in high volume, it inserts the DNA from soy into yeast and ferments it. That mixture is then combined with other ingredients, like coconut oil.

The company tweaked the ingredients to mimic pork's springy texture and mild flavor. For the sausage it added spices.

Impossible Pork has 220 calories in a four-ounce serving. That's not much less than a serving of Smithfield 80% lean ground pork, which has 260 calories. Smithfield's animal-derived pork has more total fat, at 20 grams, than Impossible Pork, which has 13 grams. But Impossible Pork has far more sodium, at 420 milligrams. Smithfield has 70 milligrams.

But health concerns are only part of the reason consumers are eating more plant-based meats. Animal welfare and environmental concerns are also a factor. Nearly 1.5 billion pigs are killed for food each year, a number that has tripled in the last 50 years, according to the World Economic Forum. Raising those pigs depletes natural resources and increases greenhouse gas emissions.

"Everything that we're doing is trying to avert the biggest threat that the world is facing," Impossible Foods CEO Pat Brown told The Associated Press.

Brown said the company decided pork should be its next product because customers were frequently requesting it. Impossible Foods started working on the new products about 18 months ago and accelerated development in the second half of 2019.

Brown said ground pork is also critical to meeting the company's international expansion goals. While Americans eat more beef and chicken, pork is the most widely consumed meat worldwide, according to the National Pork Board. Chinese consumers eat more than 88 pounds (40 kilograms) of pork per year, compared to 65 pounds (30 kilograms) for Americans.

Brown said he believes a product like Impossible Pork is critical in China, which has limited arable land and relies heavily on imported meat. Last year, Chinese pork prices surged after African swine fever wiped out millions of pigs.

Brown said Impossible Foods is talking to Chinese regulators and potential partners that could make Impossible Pork — as well as plant-based burgers — in China.

"This is a huge opportunity for China in terms of its food security," Brown said.

Impossible Foods is also waiting for approval from European regulators to sell its products there.

In the U.S., 2019 was a breakout year for plant-based meat. U.S. sales jumped 10% last year to nearly $1 billion; traditional meat sales rose 2% to $95 billion in that same time, according to Nielsen.

Impossible Foods rival Beyond Meat — which already sells plant-based sausage links — had a successful public stock offering in the spring. Impossible Foods ran short of burgers in the first half of the year thanks to the buzz from Burger King. After partnering with OSI Group, a food service company, Brown said Impossible Foods produced twice as much of its plant-based meat in the last quarter of 2019 as it sold in all of 2018.

"We have to keep scaling up as fast as we possibly can," Brown said.

Brown said he welcomes new competitors in the space, including deep-pocketed rivals like Nestle and Tyson Foods. The meat industry is vast, he said, and plant-based meats are still only around 1% of sales.

His only concern is that plant-based products taste good enough to convince meat eaters to switch.

"A crappy product won't win over meat lovers," Brown said.

Facebook bans deepfakes in fight against online manipulation

KELVIN CHAN
AP Business Writer

Facebook says it is banning "deepfake" videos, the false but realistic clips created with artificial intelligence and sophisticated tools, as it steps up efforts to fight online manipulation. But the policy leaves plenty of loopholes.

The social network said late Monday that it's beefing up its policies to remove videos edited or synthesized in ways that aren't apparent to the average person, and which could dupe someone into thinking the video's subject said something he or she didn't actually say.

Created by artificial intelligence or machine learning, deepfakes combine or replace content to create images that can be almost impossible to tell are not authentic.

"While these videos are still rare on the internet, they present a significant challenge for our industry and society as their use increases," Facebook's vice president of global policy management, Monika Bickert, said in a blog post.

However, she said the new rules won't include parody or satire, or clips edited just to change the order of words. The exceptions underscore the balancing act Facebook and other social media services face in their struggle to stop the spread of online misinformation and "fake news" while also respecting free speech and fending off allegations of censorship.

The U.S. tech company has been grappling with how to handle the rise of deepfakes after facing criticism last year for refusing to remove a doctored video of House Speaker Nancy Pelosi slurring her words, which was viewed more than 3 million times. Experts said the crudely edited clip was more of a "cheap fake" than a deepfake.

Then, a pair of artists posted fake footage of Facebook CEO Mark Zuckerberg showing him gloating over his one-man domination of the world. Facebook also left that clip online. The company said at the time that neither video violated its policies.

The problem of altered videos is taking on increasing urgency as experts and lawmakers try to figure out how to prevent deepfakes from being used to interfere with U.S. presidential elections in November.

The new policy is a "strong starting point," but doesn't address broader problems, said Sam Gregory, program director at Witness, a nonprofit working on using video technology for human rights.

"The reality is there aren't that many political deepfakes at the moment. They're mainly nonconsensual sexual images," and the bigger problem is videos that are either shown without context or lightly edited, which some have dubbed "shallow fakes," he said. These include the Pelosi clip or one that made the rounds last week of Democratic presidential candidate Joe Biden that was selectively edited to falsely suggest he made racist remarks.

Gregory, whose group was among those that gave feedback to Facebook for the policy, said that while the new rules looked strong on paper, there are questions around how effective the company will be at uncovering synthetic videos.

Facebook has built deepfake-detecting algorithms and can also look at an account's behavior to get an idea of whether it's intention is to spread disinformation, so the company will have an edge over users or journalists at sniffing them out, Gregory said.

But those algorithms haven't been used widely for deepfakes "in the wild. So it is an open question how effective detection will be," he said. "This is an algorithmic kind of game of cat and mouse, where the forgeries will get better alongside the detection."

Facebook said any videos, deepfake or not, will also be removed if they violate existing standards for nudity, graphic violence or hate speech. Those that aren't removed can still be reviewed by independent third-party fact-checkers and any deemed false will be flagged as such to people trying to share or view them, which Bickert said was a better approach than just taking them down.

"If we simply removed all manipulated videos flagged by fact-checkers as false, the videos would still be available elsewhere on the internet or social media ecosystem," Bickert said. "By leaving them up and labeling them as false, we're providing people with important information and context."

Twitter, which has been another hotbed for misinformation and altered videos, said it's "in the process" of creating a policy for "synthetic and manipulated media," which would include deepfakes and other doctored videos. The company has asked for public feedback on the issue. The responses it's considering include putting a notice next to tweets that include manipulated material. The tweets might also be removed if they're misleading and could cause serious harm to someone.

YouTube, meanwhile, has a policy against "deceptive practices" but does not appear to specifically ban deepfakes. Google did not immediately respond to a message for comment on Tuesday.

Urgent Requests To SMMUSD

OH TO FLY FREE

Over the open skies of Santa Monica, like a bird!

Soaring and swooping in the sunshine and cool ocean breezes, among the tall palms, pondering the great Pacific shore and the limited lives of the tiny earthbound humans I see below me.

But I can't do that, because I keep having to avoid big, tall buildings, more sprouting every day from the soil — I think there's still soil down there, with all that concrete, asphalt and glass — and more and more I'm in the shadows, not the open sunny skies.

AS A COLUMNIST

I would love to do the same. Soar amongst all the great things about our unique and wonderful little beach city, all the great things that our selected leaders, City staff and ordinary citizens are doing every day. To write about them and tell the world.

But every time I think about doing that, something gets in the way.

REALITY.

Our reality here in Santa Monica is that all the smaller, everyday but important things that are being done are put in the shadows by the big sticky SMRR-der web that covers it all. The overdevelopment. The corruption at the heart of wrong-headed public policies. The unwillingness to listen to and act on behalf of the residents. The absolutely crazy stuff that should never stand.

LAST WEEK'S COLUMN

Was the first of the year and I wish it could have been more positive. I threw out a few Wishes for 2020 but as soon as I typed them I realized all had the chance of a snowfall in SM of coming true.

Then I went into the territory of Crazy. Been there before. So many things being proposed and done here are on their face just plain crazy, but no one with any power will stand up and say it.

So for those who complain that I rarely write about the positive things going on in Santa Monica, I'm telling you, I want to. Badly. But I have a job to do.

AND NOW, THAT MURAL!

Time is now running really short to save the Muir Woods Mural. The School Board has arranged for the original artist Jane Golden, to come to SM at the end of this month from Philadelphia. She was given a contract ($10K?), meetings have been arranged, public discussion scheduled.

But none of this has been made public, nor included in any way the Save the Muir Woods Mural (SMWM) group — Jerry and Marissa Rubin and me — who have been working for six years to save this piece of our history, this environmental message. We have done research, presented talks and films, participated in a long but fruitless mediation process requested by SMMUSD, garnered media coverage worldwide, and gathered signatures of support from hundreds of individuals and dozens of organizations, including many prominent Santa Monicans.

And yet the School Board is now continuing to proceed unilaterally with their so-called fair process to determine the fate of the mural through input from the public and from City officials. Which group do you think will receive the greatest weight?

I can't answer those questions because the School Board continues to leave you, and us, who represent so many who have expressed love for that mural and a strong desire to have it restored, out of the process. Despite repeated failed promises to include us.

At some point you have to stop asking, because that's proven a fool's errand, and start demanding what's fair and right.

"DEMANDS"

However, have a bad connotation. No matter how necessary they may have become. So even though your requests have been ignored for years, continue to make "requests."

Speaking for myself, I request a meeting with whomever at SMMUSD is making these arrangements, that will also include Jerry and Marissa Rubin. We have earned a place at the table.

I request they make the schedule they have come up with public record, and publicized widely NOW to residents.

I request to know the criteria they have for determining the mural's fate. Strictly by the will of the residents? Because that's what they promised at the Oct. school board meeting.

It was claimed the mural was scraped a few months ago to remove peeling strips that contained lead paint. Requests for documentation were stonewalled, and buried deep in one report finally received was the information that the lead content was far below any cause for action. Also, if there is lead there why aren't they testing every SMMUSD building?

The scraping, of course, made the already 40-years neglected mural look even worse. SMMUSD COO Carey Upton told me personally, when I asked if they took photographs before the scraping destruction, said yes they did, comprehensive, complete. I request to see those photographs.

I request that school board members cease all one-sided communication with artist Golden, except for necessary travel arrangements. I request that they provide us, SMWM, with notes of any communications that have occurred, or will.

People are still repeating on social media and spreading the claims made by School Board President Jon Kean at that Oct. meeting about the wishes of Golden concerning the mural, which if true would be in complete

"And, what we're really hoping to do now is to copy the success that we've had over in Culver, which is really create an inclusive community where people of all ages, shapes, sizes, feel comfortable to come and work out and also just feel welcome," Sklar-Mulcahy said, because the gym is about more than burning calories.

"It's really about coming in and creating a space where people feel safe and welcomed because you never know what people are going through outside your doors, so we just want to make sure that they feel the love when they're indoors with us," Sklar-Mulcahy said, "because that when the fun happens."

CycleBar Santa Monica is set to begin hosting classes on Jan. 17th, and local residents are encouraged to visit its website — santamonica.cyclebar.com — to sign up for as many as three free classes.

"One thing that sets us apart from other studios is that once you get in our doors, everything is included," Sklar-Mulcahy said, mentioning the gym's towel, shower and shoe rental services. "So you decide to bring yourself to the studio along with a change your clothes and we got you from there."

Sklar-Mulcahy added there are a few different class times to choose from depending on one's preference.

"As we grow, we're going to have a little bit of a limited schedule because we're testing a few of the times once we first open as we build our membership base," Sklar-Mulcahy said. "So to the people who are saying, 'I want more classes.' Invite your friends." There's plenty of room in the 2500 square feet gym featuring nightclub lights and music.

Living While Dying: A Screening and Discussion

Santa Monica Public Library will present a screening and discussion of the documentary Living While Dying (2017) on Saturday, January 11, at 2 p.m. in the Martin Luther King, Jr. Auditorium at the Main Library, 601 Santa Monica Blvd., Santa Monica.

Filmmaker Cathy Zheutlin chronicles the experiences of several people living with terminal illness who greet the inevitable with courage, humor, creativity and acceptance. Her curiosity about death leads her to seek the advice of an aboriginal elder and a deathwalker in Australia, witness a mass cremation in Bali, and ask her 90-year old mother to sit in a coffin while discussing end-of-life wishes.

Zheutlin says that many of us are scared of death; we feel unprepared both for our own deaths and the deaths of people (and animals) we love. Living While Dying invites us to re-imagine our own inevitable ending in new ways. Following the screening Delia Cortez shares about her work as a Palliative Care Social Worker at UCLA Medical Center. Palliative Care teams work with chronically, critically or terminally ill patients to better understand what is important to them. The goal is to provide the best quality of life possible by ensuring comfort and dignity throughout the disease process.

Please join organizers in learning more about end-of-life planning and local resources. This screening is free and open to all ages. Seating is limited and on a first-arrival basis. The Santa Monica Public Library is wheelchair accessible. For disability-related accommodations, call Library Administration at (310) 458-8606 at least one week prior to the event. The Main Library is served by Big Blue Bus routes 1, R10 and 18. Ride your bike. Bicycle parking racks are available at the library.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (JANUARY 08)

People depend on you, and this puts the fire in your belly to make something happen. You'll learn tips and tricks that turn into money and relationships. You'll experience closeness, fun and a great sense of safety inside of love. Libra and Virgo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 20, 44, 18 and 9.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Every time you act from your inner authority, you grow in confidence and charisma. Check in with yourself to make sure you're making decisions that are not just right for the eyes of society but are right for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). With children or those who can't care for themselves, it's appropriate to participate unselfishly. But in relationships with capable adults, if only one person is doing the caring and compromising, it's a problem.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You have a fully formed identity beyond the time you spend with loved ones, and this is part of what makes it so exciting to spend time together. Everyone brings unique attributes to the table.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). People change when they want to and are ready to and know how to. You may want to change, or you may want someone else to. Staying out of one another's process and still being supportive will be tricky and yet doable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Love is not blind. It is actually love's deceiving doppelganger, infatuation, that chemically alters the mind, affecting perception in numerous ways. Account for this phenomenon with today's fixations.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You will ponder what you are and what you might be. The insights available to you await in a quiet space outside of the day's events and responsibilities.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You've tried things that worked and things that didn't. As you experiment, watch out for a rebound situation. Opposite energies can be equally harmful. Often the best route out of harm's way is a side step.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). If you feel an overwhelming urge toward the energies of pity or rescue, this is a red flag to heed. It points to a tendency to take responsibility for more than you should in the deal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You are a role model to people. You forget this but will be reminded of it today with the flattery of copycats. It really is the biggest compliment, though it also makes you think twice about what you're modeling.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Multitasking isn't usually the best way to get things done, but today you have a knack for working on 10 things at once. As long as two of the 10 things aren't driving and texting, the day will be a winner.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You'll meet someone in a position to accept your gifts and help you go places – that is if you know where you want to go. If you can't show it on a map, then try and relay as vivid a picture of it as possible.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). What do you think would happen if you were to raise your expectations of love? You might be disappointed or delighted by the way people rise to the occasion. It's a risk that could be worth it.

Cosmic Self-Appreciation Day

Mercury at a fortuitous angle to dreamy Neptune suggests you love yourself in the way you want other people to love you. It's not because other people don't or won't figure it out eventually, but instructive role models make for faster learning. We don't always get self-love ideas right. Still, we are the ones with the most clues about what we need.

ASTROLOGICAL QUESTIONS

"I have had at least seven dreams involving a griffin. I don't play fantasy role-playing games or read 'Harry Potter' books, and I didn't even know what a griffin was until I told my dream to a friend who pointed out that the creature I was describing – with the hind legs of a lion and the head of an eagle – sounded like a griffin. Except my creature has a strange tail and no wings. What do you think this means?" Does the tail look something like a camel's tail? And is your creature without ears? It might be the opinicus, an earless relative of the griffin that is sometimes born without wings. This category of mystical creatures represents the animal kingdom's most regal, since the lion is king of the land and the eagle is king of the sky. And though they look ferocious, the opinicus is believed to be gentle. It is also known for loyalty, mating for life. If its partner dies, it doesn't take on another. Perhaps you are having a relationship issue that the opinicus wants to help you through – a problem that can be solved through loyalty, patience, class, inner strength and grace.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

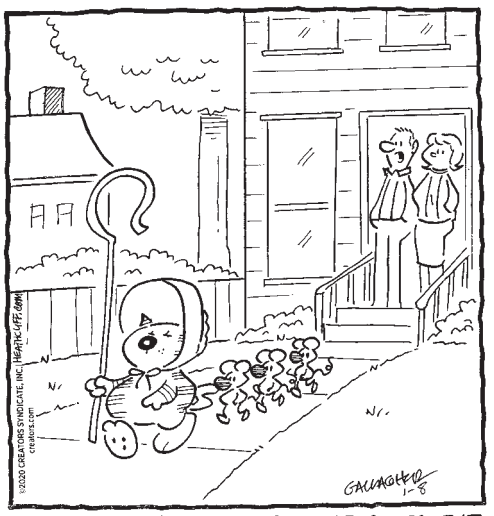

The King of Rock 'N' Roll was born today, and over 80 years later, fans around the world will celebrate the birthday of the legendary Elvis Presley. Presley was born when the sun, Mercury and Venus were all in Capricorn, a sign noted for hardworking ambition. These powerful placements were contrasted by a sensitive, empathetic Pisces moon and lucky Jupiter in sensual, shocking Scorpio. Write Holiday Mathis at HolidayMathis.com.

BLOOMBERG

Yes, there are problems, including homelessness, struggling public schools and scarce, costly housing. But California "is something the rest of the country looks up to," Bloomberg said. "California has been a leader in an awful lot of things."

His comments marked a sharp departure from views of President Donald Trump, whose administration has been in a long-running feud with the nation's most populous state over issues from environmental protection to homelessness. Trump called California "a disgrace" last year shortly after its Democratic-controlled Legislature passed a bill that would have required presidential candidates to release their tax returns to get on the 2020 ballot, a proposal aimed squarely at the president. It was later voided in court.

Bloomberg's visit came as part of a swing through a state that he sees as central to his hopes of winning the White House. After a late entry into the race, Bloomberg is bypassing the first four primary and caucus states and is anchoring his strategy to California and other Super Tuesday states on March 3.

His TV ads have been appearing routinely on television, attempting to connect with voters who might know little or nothing about the billionaire businessman.

With more delegates than any other state, California "has a lot of power in the nominating process," Bloomberg noted.

His remarks veered from occasional jokes — he lamented that Los Angeles has two strong basketball teams, the Lakers and the Clippers, while the hapless New York Knicks have struggled for decades — to searing attacks on Trump's leadership style and decision-making.

Referring to the recent U.S. airstrike that killed top Iranian general Qassem Soleimani, Bloomberg said, "This president has a habit of making decisions impulsively ... and recklessly, as we've seen time and time again."

"During crises like this one, it is critically important to ... deescalate tensions and not escalate tensions, and to not speak irresponsibly and make incendiary and bellicose threats that may provoke attacks and endanger our country," he said.

The political moderate argued that Trump has divided Americans, while he can unite them, and that as Washington languishes in gridlock, he has a record of accomplishment as mayor.

Among the crowd was Los Angeles investor Mike Connolly, who said he feared the Democratic Party was drifting too far to the political left and was drawn to Bloomberg's fiscally conservative, socially liberal blueprint. And, importantly, he believes Bloomberg can defeat Trump.

"He's got the right policies" for most Americans on critical issues like gun violence and climate change, said Connolly, an independent who voted for Presidents Bill Clinton and Barack Obama.

Campaign offices are typically drab affairs located in old storefronts or shopworn, budget-rate offices. But Bloomberg's virtually unlimited budget was on display — his cavernous office was in trendy downtown, its interior accented with industrial chic decor and lush plantings.

Bloomberg earlier joined Mayor Eric Garcetti, a Democrat who flirted with a presidential run, for an early lunch at a downtown restaurant.

"The mayor is paying for it," Bloomberg quipped. "It's a good deal."

Hotel & Bungalows for being an inspiring philanthropic leader in our community and to each of the donors who contributed this month to fund these important programs for Santa Monica students."

"This incredible generosity should come as no surprise to any Santa Monica resident since local businesses have consistently worked hand-in-hand with the Santa Monica Education Foundation to support all students attending schools here in Santa Monica, said SMMUSD board president Jon Kean. "We are so fortunate to live in a community where everyone views themself as a stakeholder in the success of our students."

Greenberg and foundation leaders said they expect the donations made during the December match campaign will fund a multitude of STEM programs in Santa Monica schools across the district, including the STEM classes at Franklin, Grant and Muir Elementary schools, an app design elective at John Adams Middle School and Project Lead the Way, which is a four-year engineering program at Santa Monica High School.

"The results of our matches with the Santa Monica Education Foundation have been astounding," and they are a superb example of what is possible when local businesses and families come together to support children said Ellis O'Connor of MSD Partners. "MSD Partners and The Fairmont Miramar Hotel & Bungalows are proud to be long-time supporters of public education in Santa Monica," and they are honored to partner with the Ed Foundation and the entire local community to help ensure that Santa Monica's students experience the best education possible.

Education Foundation officials said residents can visit smedfoundation.org for more information or to make a donation to support Santa Monica students.

ON DECEMBER 22, 2019 AT 12:15 A.M.

Officers responded to the 1100 block of Alley 2 for reports of a dumpster fire. The contents inside the recycle bin were fully engulfed when officers arrived. Officers attempted to contain the fire with fire extinguishers but that had little effect. The embers from the fire had fallen into the trash can next to the recycle bin, starting a second fire. The bins were located to the rear of the Huntley Hotel. Due to the proximity of the fire to the hotel and the adjacent apartment building, both buildings were evacuated. There was surveillance cameras in the area that caught a description of a possible suspect. Arson investigators were able to obtain the footage and provide the suspect description to patrol officers. On December 23, 2019 at 3:30 p.m., the suspect was found in the area of 2nd and Wilshire and taken into custody. Calvin Jacob Herring, 43, homeless, was arrested for arson. Bail was set at $250,000.

Jimmy Nelson, Dodgers agree to incentive-laden 1-year deal

Right-hander Jimmy Nelson and the Los Angeles Dodgers agreed Tuesday to a $1.25 million, one-year contract, an incentive-laden deal that could be worth $13.25 million over two seasons.

The 30-year-old pitcher spent the last six seasons with Milwaukee. Nelson was 33-46 with a 4.22 ERA and 578 strikeouts and 240 walks.

Nelson had his best season in 2017, going 12-6 with a 3.49 ERA. He ranked eighth in the National League with 199 strikeouts in 29 starts and ninth in ERA. However, he ended the season on the injured list with a rotator cuff strain. He missed all of the 2018 season with a partially torn labrum in his right shoulder.

Nelson returned last season and appeared in 10 games for the Brewers, making two starts. He was 0-2 with a 6.95 ERA and the team didn't offer him a contract by Dec. 2, making him a free agent.

Nelson has a $750,000 salary this year, and the Dodgers have a $2 million option for 2021 with a $500,000 buyout.

If he pitches 40 games or 60 innings this season, the option would become a $5 million mutual option. The option price would escalate to $6 million for 110 innings, $7 million for 130 innings, $8 million for 150 innings and $9 million for 170 innings.

The deal includes $2 million in roster bonuses for 2020: $1 million for making the opening-day roster and $500,000 each for 45 days and 90 days active. There are performance bonuses this year of $250,000 each for 90, 110, 130, 150, 170 and 190 innings.

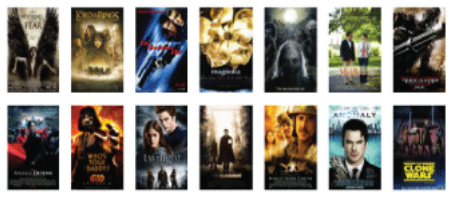

If the 2021 club option is exercised, Nelson could earn $250,000 each that year for 90, 110, 130, 150, 170 and 190 innings.
