One year later, the Palisades gathered — to remember, to reckon, and to rebuild

MICHELLE EDGAR

Special to the Daily Press

On the morning of January 7, the American Legion hall in Pacific Palisades filled slowly and deliberately not with spectacle, but with people who had learned over the past year how to sit with grief together.

Neighbors embraced quietly. Families who had lost loved ones held roses. Veterans stood beneath flags that, for twelve months, had come to represent something deeper than patriotism - they marked safety, steadiness, and the first sign of order in the days after everything burned.

One year after the Palisades Fire, the community gathered not only to remember what was lost, but to bear witness to what carried them through — and to what still must be rebuilt.

In the earliest days after the fire, when streets were still closed and ash coated everything familiar, the American Legion became the first and only place to open its doors. What had been a neighborhood post transformed overnight into a lifeline.

Jim Craig remembers walking up to the building uncertain of what remained, and being struck by what was still standing.

"The flag was still there," he said. "That's when we knew what this building needed to become."

Over the next year, the Legion became the bedrock of the Palisades, a place where people sat for hours with friends and strangers alike, crying together. It became a space for resources, information, paperwork, meals and just as critically, for hugs, tears, and human connection.

One moment defined that transformation. Early on, while Craig and others were planning next steps, a woman walked in off the street with her children. She asked to see the wall of past commanders, searching for a photograph from the 1950s. When she found it, she told her children it was the only remaining record of their grandfather's existence.

"The tears that came from that," Craig said, pausing, "that's when we understood what this place had become."

There are more than 10,460 families connected to the Palisades.

PROTEST: Residents marked the anniversary of the Palisades fire with a protest.

Officers responded to the residence and found an infant with significant injuries. Santa Monica Fire Department personnel transported the child to a local hospital, where the infant was pronounced dead.

The woman was taken into custody in connection with the incident and transported to Santa Monica Jail. The woman was taken into custody in connection with the child's death and booked into Santa Monica Jail on felony charges.

Attorney for Rob Reiner's son resigns but says his client is not guilty of murder under state law

The high-profile private attorney for Nick Reiner was granted a request to be removed from his case Wednesday, but later told reporters that according to California law his client is not guilty of murder in the killing of his parents, Rob Reiner and Michele Singer Reiner.

"Circumstances beyond our control and more importantly circumstances beyond Nick's control have dictated that, sadly, it's made it impossible to continue our representation of Nick," lawyer Alan Jackson said as he stood with his team outside a Los Angeles courthouse.

But, Jackson added, after weeks

Critics draw iffy link between Gavin Newsom's record and Minnesota's food fraud scandal

Last month, as required by law, State Auditor Grant Parks published an annual report on state programs and agencies that his office deems to be at "high risk" of costly inefficiency, waste or fraud.

The report reiterated concerns about seven situations, two of which have been on the list since 2007, including the bureaucracy's chronic inability to successfully employ information technology — embarrassing for a state that is the global center for digital tools.

Parks has added a new program in his latest overview, the Department of Social Service's food aid for poor families, once called food stamps but now known as CalFresh.

The federal government primarily finances supplemental food benefits, but the state's share is determined, in part, by its management, as indicated by its rate of error when determining people's eligibility.

President Donald Trump's One Big Beautiful Bill tightens the error rate thresholds. Thus, Parks notes, California's 11% error rate, if not improved, could require the state to "spend about $2 billion annually to maintain CalFresh benefits."

The most disturbing item on Parks' list is the continuing inability of the Employment Development Department to effectively manage unemployment insurance benefits, which first came to light during the COVID-19 pandemic. Billions of dollars in fraudulent benefit claims were approved, almost all of which came in a federally financed expansion of the program.

By happenstance, the high risk report was released just as a scandal was erupting in Minnesota over widespread fraud in a program meant to keep children fed during the pandemic.

Dozens of people, mostly in Minnesota's substantial Somali population, have been charged with looting the program by setting up companies that billed the state for supplying food that was never delivered.

Politicians failed LA's wildfire survivors. Voters must hold them accountable

Last January, immediately after the fires, there was a moment of optimism for the future of Los Angeles. Fire survivors, policymakers, philanthropists, CEOs and regular Angelenos came together to plan Los Angeles' recovery.

But today, 12 months later, the failed leadership of California politicians has set back recovery efforts.

I am a born and raised Angeleno, and like so many others after the fires, I wanted to help. My career leading mission-driven work led me to connect with Evan Spiegel, founder of Snapchat, and Miguel Santana, president of the California Community Foundation. They launched the Department of Angels, a nonprofit that supports LA wildfire survivors, elevating their leadership in the recovery process.

Today the group is one of many organizations dedicated to the recovery effort. But community-driven work can only accomplish so much. Recovery efforts for disasters of this scale require the government to lead.

Signs of the government's systemic failure to lead began emerging within months of the fires. Away from Los Angeles when the fires first ignited — on an international trip she had pledged not to take — Mayor Karen Bass began the recovery effort behind the 8-ball and has seemingly never recovered. She has openly feuded with critics of her performance, including the Palisades Fire recovery czar that she herself appointed.

At the county level, the board of supervisors still has not fixed the county's broken emergency notification system, a failure that likely contributed to many of the 19 deaths in the Eaton Fire.

And at the state level, Gov. Gavin Newsom jockeyed to be the central figure in the campaign for federal funding, but his rivalry with President Donald Trump has doomed the possibility of federal aid for Los Angeles.

The consequences have been devastating for survivors.

Today, more than 8 in 10 Altadena residents and 9 in 10 Palisades residents are still out of their homes. Thousands of houses that survived the flames remain unsafe or uninhabitable because of contamination. And only about 15% of the 10,000-plus destroyed homes have received rebuilding permits from LA city or county.

In other words, a year later, the rebuilding process has barely begun.

Perhaps worst of all, no concrete steps have been taken to prevent future wildfires in the Los Angeles area, where conflagrations are all but guaranteed. If nothing changes about the government's approach, most survivors of January's fires will never return to their neighborhoods, and future fires will claim even more lives, homes and businesses.

Despite the gravity of these challenges, there are reasons for optimism. This year Californians have the opportunity to elect officials who can plot a better way forward, including a new governor and statewide insurance commissioner.

In Los Angeles, we will have elections for county supervisors, City Council, Congress, mayor and more.

What are candidates' plans for fire recovery?

The myriad candidates in the running need to present serious plans to address the failures of the first year of recovery. They must communicate clear ideas to address environmental toxins that remain, failed emergency response systems, future wildfire prevention and the painfully slow pace of permitting and rebuilding — among many other related issues.

Philanthropy can play a role, too, by organizing nonpartisan candidate forums for candidates to hear from survivors directly. In the first year of the fire recovery, LA's robust institutional philanthropies tried to help elected leaders behind the scenes. Looking ahead, philanthropies would be better served backing the public accountability work necessary for politicians to deliver on their promises.

The failures of the first year of wildfire recovery rests at the feet of politicians, but that does not mean that the many years of recovery work ahead are doomed. Survivors and regular Angelenos have the chance to hold elected officials accountable for their shortcomings and elect new ones who are up to the job.

L.A. fire survivors deserve a new set of leaders who'll have the courage to act and the solutions to rebuild Los Angeles.

LA Metro Opens Public Comment Period for LA River Path Environmental Report

LA Metro has released the Draft Environmental Impact Report for the LA River Path project and opened a 47-day public comment period that runs through Feb. 2, 2026. The project would create a walking and bicycling path along the LA River between Elysian Valley and the City of Maywood, passing through downtown Los Angeles and Vernon.

The proposed path would close the longest remaining gap in the LA River trail system, creating a seamless 32-mile grade-separated corridor for safe walking and bicycling from the San Fernando Valley to Long Beach. The project would directly serve communities including Elysian Valley, Cypress Park, Lincoln Heights, Chinatown, downtown Los Angeles, the Arts District, the Industrial District, Boyle Heights, East Los Angeles and the cities of Vernon and Maywood.

"Projects like the LA River Path improve quality of life and provide mobility choices, foster connection and encourage more active lifestyles, all important goals as we look to build a transportation network worthy of a world-class city," said Fernando Dutra, Metro Board Chair and City of Whittier Council Member.

The project aims to transform the largely inaccessible LA River into a community resource while establishing new open space and expanding opportunities for safe active transportation. Approximately 76,000 Angelenos live within walking distance of the LA River, while about one million people live within biking distance. An estimated 17 percent of working-aged people who live within biking distance currently bike or take transit to work.

Capital cost estimates range from $595 million for a 3.2-mile northern segment to $688 million for a five-mile southern segment. A full 8-mile segment would cost approximately $1 billion to $1.2 billion, depending on the alternative selected.

The alternatives under study were shaped by extensive community input. Early feasibility concepts placed the path entirely along the LA River's west bank and mostly at the bottom of the channel. Current alternatives now include segments on both the west and east banks, linked by new bike and pedestrian-only bridges. Most equity-focused communities that would benefit from the project are located on the east bank.

Community feedback also influenced access points, key destinations and path width. In response to concerns that a 12-foot path would not safely accommodate both cyclists and pedestrians, the proposed width has been increased to 16 to 20 feet based on future demand forecasts.

Metro CEO Stephanie Wiggins said the agency is working to ensure taxpayers get the best possible project through proactive community outreach.

With limited available space along the riverbank, all alternatives incorporate elevated, incised and top-of-bank segments. A bottom-of-the-channel alternative was considered but rejected because it failed to meet key goals for safety, access, sustainability and efficient mobility.

Metro will hold public hearings during the comment period:

Wednesday, Jan. 21: 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. at Lincoln Heights Senior Center, 2323 Workman St, Los Angeles, CA 90031

Tuesday, Jan. 27: 6 to 8 p.m. at Maywood Center for Enriched Studies, 5800 King Ave, Maywood, CA 90270

Thursday, Jan. 29: 6 to 8 p.m. virtual via Zoom at https://bit.ly/larp_deir (Dial-in: 833 548 0276, Webinar ID: 833 2236 2142)

Saturday, Jan. 31: 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. at Felicitas and Gonzalo Mendez Senior High School, 1200 Plaza Del Sol E, Los Angeles, CA 90033

Live Spanish interpretation will be available at all public hearings. ADA accommodations and interpretation are available by calling 213-922-4710 at least 72 hours in advance.

Comments can be submitted at metro.net/lariverpath or via email at lariverpath@metro.net with "LA River Path – DEIR" in the subject line. Comments can also be mailed to Metro, One Gateway Plaza, MS 99-22-3, Los Angeles, CA 90012, or submitted by phone at 213-922-4004.

The project is partially funded by Measure M, the Los Angeles County sales tax approved by voters in 2016. Additional information is available at <https://www.metro.net/projects/lariverpath/>.

ARREST

While police did not initially identify the suspect, court records report her as 24-year-old Carmen Anita Degregg being held on a $2 million bond.

SMPD has said it will provide updates when appropriate on the case and witnesses reported officers carried bags of evidence out of the apartment from a second-floor apartment over the course of several hours. The Los Angeles County Medical Examiner will determine the cause and manner of death. Detectives from the Criminal Investigations Division are investigating the case. Based on preliminary information, the incident appears to be isolated with no ongoing threat to the community, police said.

GUEST COMMENTARY

Kamala Harris chose as her running mate in her campaign for president in 2024, felt the political fallout from the scandal — generated mostly in right-leaning media outlets — and this week dropped his bid for re-election.

Meanwhile, those same outlets — blogs, podcasts and YouTube videos — have been making an accusatory connection between the Minnesota scandal and the Parks report, suggesting the report proves the same kind of fraud was even more rampant in California and laying the blame on Gov. Gavin Newsom, who’s a likely 2028 candidate for president.

This week, Steve Hilton, a Republican candidate for California governor, and Herb Morgan, a Republican running for state controller, cited the Parks report, their own research and tips from whistleblowers in a broad assertion, dubbed “CALIFRAUDIA,” that “California’s exposure to fraud, waste, and abuse across major state programs is likely to reach $250 billion,” adding that it “underscores the urgent need for formal investigation and audit, as a matter of basic fiscal responsibility.”

However, the allegations of widespread fraud and mismanagement during Newsom’s governorship is not confined to those on the starboard side of the political balance beam.

Ro Khanna, a progressive Democratic member of Congress from Silicon Valley who could be a rival to Newsom in the 2028 presidential sweepstakes, issued a similar blast in a posting on X, albeit with a smaller $72 billion pricetag, citing Parks’ report and other data.

Khanna told Politico, “I don’t know what the specific number is” of dollars lost to fraud or mismanagement. “It’s not particular to any person,” Khanna said. “It’s making government more effective. Tackling the mismanagement and waste and some fraud will build more credibility for asking for higher taxes.”

Newsom’s staff responded by accusing Khanna of making a “MAGA made-up claim.”

There’s a reason why veterans of political wars refer to election years as the “silly season,” when political figures seeking media attention are prone to convert anthills of fact into mountains of rhetorical fantasy.

ROB REINER

of investigation, “what we’ve learned, and you can take this to the bank, is that pursuant to the laws of this state, pursuant to the law of California, Nick Reiner is not guilty of murder. Print that.”

Jackson would not specify what he meant and took no questions at the brief news conference.

He spoke after a hearing where Nick Reiner was supposed to be arraigned and enter a plea to two charges of first-degree murder. Instead, after meeting with the Judge Theresa McGonigle in chambers, Jackson was replaced by a public defender and Reiner’s plea hearing was postponed to Feb. 23.

Alan Jackson can’t say why he has to quit case

Jackson said that for legal and ethical reasons, he could not reveal why he had to leave the case. He first appeared in court representing Reiner at a hearing a few days after the beloved actor-director and his wife of 36 years were found dead with stab wounds in their home in the upscale Brentwood section of Los Angeles. Jackson did not say how he was hired — or who hired him. Generally, defendants use public defenders when they can’t pay for a private attorney.

Jackson has become one of the most prominent defense attorneys in the nation in recent years after defending clients including Harvey Weinstein, Kevin Spacey and Karen Read at her intensely followed trials in Massachusetts.

After the judge granted Jackson’s request to leave the case, Deputy Public Defender

The Public Defender’s Office recognizes what an unimaginable tragedy this is for the Reiner family and the Los Angeles community

- Ricardo D. Garcia, Deputy Public Defender

Kimberly Greene took over as Reiner’s attorney.
“The Public Defender’s Office recognizes what an unimaginable tragedy this is for the Reiner family and the Los Angeles community,” Deputy Public Defender Ricardo D. Garcia said in a rare public statement on a case from the office. “Our hearts go out to the Reiner family as they navigate this difficult time. We ask for your patience and compassion as the case moves through the legal process.”

Nick Reiner appears in jail clothes, without suicide prevention smock

During Wednesday’s hearing, Reiner stood behind glass in a custody area of the courtroom wearing brown jail garb and with his hair shaved. Two deputies stood behind him. Jackson and his team stood in front of him on the other side of the glass. At one point, Reiner stood on his tiptoes to peer over the lawyers’ heads to look at the audience. He spoke only to agree to the delayed arraignment.

McGonigle approved the use of cameras inside the courtroom but said pictures could not be taken of the defendant. At Wednesday’s hearing, Reiner did not wear the suicide prevention smock he had on at his initial court appearance on Dec. 17.

Reiner, 32, the third of Rob Reiner’s four children, has been held without bail since his arrest hours after his parents were found dead on Dec. 14.

A Reiner family spokesperson said in a statement after Wednesday’s hearing that “They have the utmost trust in the legal process and will not comment further on matters related to the legal proceedings.”

Jackson says he ‘dropped everything’ to represent Reiner

Jackson, a former LA County prosecutor, had given no indication of the plans for his defense.

He said he that just hours after the bodies were discovered and Nick Reiner was arrested, he and his team got a call about representing him. He did not say who called him.

“We dropped everything,” Jackson said. “For the last three weeks, we have devoted literally every waking hour to protecting Nick and his interests. We’ve investigated this matter top to bottom, back to front.”

He said they remain “deeply, deeply committed” to him and said, “We’re not just convinced; we know that the legal process will reveal the true facts.”

Rob Reiner, 78, and Michele Singer Reiner, 70, were killed early on the morning of Dec. 14, and they were found in the late afternoon, authorities said. The LA County Medical Examiner said in initial findings that they died from “multiple sharp force injuries,” but released no other details, and police have said nothing about possible motives.

Prosecutors have said they have not yet decided whether to seek the death penalty for Nick Reiner.

Rob Reiner was a prolific director whose work included some of the most memorable and endlessly watchable movies of the 1980s and ‘90s. His credits included “This is Spinal Tap,” “Stand By Me,” “A Few Good Men,” and “When Harry Met Sally,” during whose production he met Michele Singer, a photographer, and married her soon after.

A decade ago, Nick Reiner publicly discussed his struggles with addiction and mental health after making a movie with his father, “Being Charlie,” that was very loosely based on their lives.

SOLUTIONS TO YESTERDAY'S WORDS PUZZLE.
Trick or treat goodies

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Jan. 8)

You're stepping into your Year of Gracious Acceptance when you'll be crowned for something you've mastered. Your consistency turns into skill, and your skill draws respect. All the private practice will pay off in public ways. More highlights: financial progress makes a dream doable. Love and a supportive creative partner are in the mix, as are a change of style and routine. Scorpio and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 27, 3, 23 and 16.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Like attracts like. When you walk into a room, you'll gravitate toward people whose energy matches yours - and they'll gravitate toward you. Expect quick connections, inside jokes with strangers and an easy sense of belonging.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). There's a paradox in creative energy. Self-expression doesn't drain you; it feeds you - because the energy isn't coming from you but through you. Even though it looks like you're "giving out" energy, the act of self-expression actually replenishes you.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). It feels unnatural to you to prioritize yourself, but do it anyway. Otherwise, you won't have anything to give. There's a lot of need around you, and you can help, but only if you put your own needs first so you're full and strong.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). When life feels too ordinary, but you don't have the means to upgrade your circumstances, you can still upgrade your attention. Ordinary things get interesting when you look at them from different angles. Curiosity is the cheapest form of reinvention.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Self-discovery is the theme. There's no sense worrying about saying, doing or dressing "wrong." Wrong compared to what? You're creating yourself as you go. And as actors and writers know, there are no mistakes in character creation, only choices.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). A future that looks exactly like today is the easiest to imagine, but also the least likely to occur. Life is always moving. So use today to tilt things in the direction you want. Even a 1-degree shift now can land you somewhere entirely new.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Go where you're attracted and something interesting occurs. You'll discover new abilities in yourself. When there's nothing attractive around, leave. Seek more interesting environments to avoid letting these unrealized talents remain dormant inside you.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Your filters are thinner today. You might share what you didn't intend to, but don't worry too much. This is the truth that could set you free, or at least teach you who is safe to tell the truth to.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). We need different mirrors to know ourselves. A mirror can show you your face and a diary can show you your mind, but what can show you how others experience you? A truthful insight from an outside observer will help.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You've leveled up your skills, and it's evident in the way you make quick work of a task that once intimidated you. And your confidence is so understated that you'll disarm people and bring them to your team.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). There's the way everyone does it, and the way that actually makes life easier. The second one takes a little figuring out, but once you're past the learning curve, it's smooth sailing: harder at first, easier ever-after.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Today you'll witness an inconspicuous kind of morality hiding inside ordinary choices. Evil can be understood simply as any decision that pulls you away from your values, while good is whatever moves you closer.

PALISADES

Every one of them carries a different version of trauma. The mission that emerged inside the Legion was simple but immense: help each family find a path from loss to triumph.

Around them stood the quiet infrastructure of recovery — engineers, National Guard units, LAPD officers, donors, public officials — what Craig described as “millions of dollars of love,” coordinated without hierarchy, each group functioning in its own lane.

Councilwoman Traci Park spoke to the American Legion’s role not as a temporary shelter, but as a civic anchor when residents needed one most. “In the days after the fire, this became more than a building,” Park said. “It became a home base — a place where people could walk in without an appointment, without a form, without knowing what came next, and simply be met with help.”

Park emphasized that recovery in the Palisades has never been about a single agency or leader, but about showing up consistently over time.“What I’ve witnessed here is a community that refused to wait for permission to take care of one another,” she said. “Neighbors organized. Veterans opened their doors. Volunteers filled the gaps when systems were overwhelmed. That kind of response doesn’t happen everywhere, and it deserves to be honored.”

She noted that while visible progress is underway, the responsibility of leadership does not end with anniversaries. “One year later, the work isn’t finished,” Park said. “Families are still navigating insurance, rebuilding, displacement, and grief. Our obligation mine included is to stay present, to listen, and to make sure recovery happens with transparency, care, and urgency.”

For Cindy Kirven, a Palisades resident since 1982, that sense of humanity mattered as much as any formal assistance. She recalled the moment she first realized the scale of her loss — not through flames, but through absence.

“You don’t think of yourself as a disaster victim,” she said. “But suddenly you don’t have a broom, a hammer, extension cords — things you don’t think about until they’re gone.”

Inside the Legion, she encountered something unexpected. Relief organizations lined the hall. Volunteers sat face-to-face with survivors. Someone reached across the table, took her hand, said a prayer, and handed her a gift card.

“It wasn’t transactional,” Kirven said. “It was human.”

As insurance disputes mounted and mortgage processes grew adversarial, the Legion remained a place of trust. Survivors met with SBA representatives at desks instead of call centers. They cried openly. They were helped without being reduced to claims numbers.

Inside the hall that morning, the names of 12 people who lost their lives in the fire were read aloud. Eight families were present. Roses were placed in the front row — one for each life lost.

Children were spoken of those who lost not only homes, but schools and childhoods. Seniors were acknowledged residents who arrived decades ago when the Palisades was still forming, who paid $30,000 for lots in the 1950s and 1960s and now face rebuilding without access to loans. Many of them, Craig noted, carried the beauty of the Palisades for generations.

What emerged was not a story of one leader, but of many - Team Palisades, recovery coalitions, social groups, neighbors holding hands, offering psychological support, helping each other navigate both grief and logistics. Already, more than 30 homes are under construction.

The flag, Craig said, became a central symbol. As a veteran, he described returning from missions and seeing the flag at the gate - the sign that you are home, that you are safe. When flags were placed at entry points to the Palisades, residents saw the red, white, and blue before they saw smoke and ash.

Messages poured in, pleading that the flags remain.

“They helped people keep their tears away,” Craig said.

Faith leaders spoke of what was lost beyond structures — the routines, support systems, and sense of belonging that anchor daily life.

Rabbi Zushe Cunin described how the Chabad Jewish Community Center temporarily relocated to Santa Monica’s Franklin campus and Broadway, alongside the Persian synagogue, while its Palisades home is restored.

“Our roots here were never broken,” he said. “Our people were displaced.”

Students with special needs were among those most deeply affected, losing access to public school resource rooms and community networks. Until families can return, Cunin said, the commitment is to support them wherever they are — with compassion and understanding for trauma that lingers long after flames are extinguished.

Father Liam Kidney of Corpus Christi Parish echoed that message — that rebuilding is about restoring presence, not just places.

State Senator Ben Allen, now running for California Insurance Commissioner, called the American Legion a model of community-centered recovery.

“Community spaces like this are more than buildings,” Allen said. “They’re where neighbors gather, share strength, and rebuild not just homes, but hope.”

Assemblymember Jacqui Irwin reflected on the dual weight of the anniversary — grief and progress intertwined.

“If you drive through the Palisades and see how many homes are being rebuilt, it’s heartwarming,” she said. “But today also reminds us what a terrible tragedy this was — and why we can’t stop showing up a year, two years, or three years from now.”

Her office has assisted hundreds of residents navigating insurance disputes, permitting delays, and recovery roadblocks, securing $4 million in state funding to help accelerate permitting. Insurance reform — particularly around the FAIR Plan and smoke damage — remains the most frequent concern residents raise.

Later in the day, the focus moved outdoors. Flags that had flown throughout the year were formally retired and rededicated. A color guard led a procession accompanied by bagpipes — the sound carrying through streets now marked by rebuilding.

The procession concluded at Palisades Village Green, a gathering place built and sustained through the care and commitment of the Palisades Lions Club. For decades, the Green has been where the Palisades comes together, and on this day it once again served its purpose: a place to remember, to heal, and to recommit.

“This past year tested us beyond measure,” speakers reflected. Yet where systems fell short, compassion stepped forward.

Community leaders including Jessica Rogersand Sharon Kilbride were recognized for holding space when it mattered most — restoring trust, guiding neighbors through uncertainty, and helping the community find its footing during its most difficult season.

Kilbride’s presence carried the weight of continuity. Her family roots stretch back more than 200 years in Pacific Palisades and Malibu, making her a sixth-generation member of the historic Marquez family. In her work supporting vulnerable populations and serving as a liaison, her leadership has been defined by stewardship — quiet, persistent service grounded in care for place and people.

As part of the ceremony, a healing dance was offered in partnership with Global Empowerment Mission. Through movement and song, the performance honored grief held in the body and affirmed resilience — a reminder that healing is both collective and deeply personal.

The ceremony concluded with the ringing of the bells.

They sounded three times — once in remembrance of each life lost, once in honor of families forever changed, and once as a call to duty.

Wreaths were presented. A moment of silence followed.

Through the Abramson Foundation, twelve native trees — live oaks and sycamores — have now been planted in Temescal Canyon, creating a living memorial. The foundation also supports TreePeople’s partnership with Los Angeles Unified School District, extending restoration into school communities impacted by the fire.

“We’ve seen the impossible made real,”

Rogers said. “And learned what impossible truly means.”

Just blocks away, a protest unfolded, where 12 speakers voiced continued frustration with insurance, rebuilding timelines, and accountability. Among them was Spencer Pratt, who announced running for mayor — underscoring how deeply the fire has reshaped civic engagement and political discourse.

Grammy- and Emmy-winning songwriter Jimmy Dunne said what surprised him most was not sorrow — but belief.

“People came expecting sadness,” Dunne said. “But instead, we looked around and realized the promise is right in front of us. The people of this town are what’s bringing it back.”

He pointed to public-private partnerships, including the work of Steadfast LA, as the engine of real progress.

“It won’t be the same,” Dunne said. “It will be better.”

As the sun set on a day of remembrance, protest, prayer, music, and resolve, one truth became unmistakable.

What the fire took was immense — homes, history, and lives. What it did not take was the will of a community determined to rebuild — together.

Under a newly raised flag, the Palisades stood united.

Together, it will heal, rebuild and become one of the greatest disaster recovery stories ever told - through belief in what’s possible.
