THE HEAD FOR THE HILLS ISSUE

One tough sell

A resident wants to house homeless in small modules

BY KEVIN HERRERA | Editor in Chief

DOWNTOWN If sleeping in closet-like capsules is good enough for Japanese businessmen, then it should be good enough for Santa Monica's homeless.

That's what resident Randy Walburger thinks, which is why he has developed an urban camping plan that he believes can move those without shelter into temporary housing faster than what is being done currently.

The only problem is finding the money and the space to make it happen.

Under Walburger's proposal, which he has been sending to just about anyone who will listen, including City Hall staff and representatives with the Los Angeles Homeless Services Authority, those living on the streets would be housed in plastic modules stacked on top of one another and placed in parking lots or land yet to be developed, where case workers could connect with the down-and-out and provide them with counseling, job training and other services.

The urban campsites would include showers, toilets and lockers to store personal items.

"Many homeless people have caseworkers but not a bed to sleep in at night, forcing them to go into hiding when the sun goes down," said Walburger, who almost became homeless himself a few years back when he lost much of his money in the sock market, causing him to become severely depressed.

"If people are caught lying down, they can get a ticket," Walburger said. "That ticket quickly turns into a warrant because they can't get to court or pay the fine, so ultimately, lying down becomes a jailable offense. That's where we are today and I want to change that."

By using modular construction, Walburger believes entire campsites could be easily assembled and disassembled at a low-cost. Sleeping modules would be constructed out of sturdy, waterproof polyethylene plastic, insulated with 3-inches of fire retardant acoustic foam. The inside dimensions would be 7-feet long by 3.3-feet wide and 3-feet tall. Each capsule would contain a twin bed, a light and a small shelf.

The modules would be ventilated front to back so the air flows through. Each module would have a louvered screen window that would serve as the front door. Each would also have a lock box to place personal items.

Each campsite would need to have electrical and water hook-ups. A campsite serving 12 people could be assembled on less than 550 square feet, Walburger said. There would be two toilets, one shower, one dressing room and a sink.

Not just anyone would be allowed to stay there. Walburger said case workers with agencies like OPCC and St. Joseph Center would select candidates who are commit-

On the stump for real change

Local resident campaigned for Hillary Clinton in Iowa

BY MELODY HANATANI | Daily Press Staff Writer

DUBUQUE, IDAHO In a crowded room illuminated by the flashing bulbs of news cameras and the cheers of political supporters, Nancy Linehan Charles finally came face-to-face with a former first lady.

Just three days earlier, the Santa Monica resident and Hollywood actress had joined Hillary Clinton's campaign trail through the Iowa Caucus in hopes of helping the New York senator secure the Democratic nomination this summer.

It was Dec. 29 and Clinton was scheduled to make a speech at a campaign rally in Dubuque, a city located about three hours from the state capital. Charles, who has a role in the movie "Charlie Wilson's War," was among the supporters waiting for Clinton, in one hand clutching a poster she had promised to get autographed for a physically disabled girl lost in the crowd.

Budget proposal threatens parks

Governor may cut lifeguards at some of state's beaches

BY NOAKI SCHWARTZ
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES Cowboy and social commentator Will Rogers once said that Los Angeles was "a great place to live, but I wouldn't want to visit there."

Soon the option of visiting the historic state park that was once Rogers' 31-room ranch house may be out of the question. The estate where Rogers reportedly taught Walt Disney and Spencer Tracy to play polo, is on a list of 48 state parks, beaches and recreation areas that may be closed down to help shore up an anticipated $14.5 billion budget shortfall.

In the state budget proposal released Thursday, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger also called for cutting at least half the seasonal lifeguards at state beaches in Orange, San Diego and Santa Cruz counties. These cuts are expected to save an estimated $14.3 million, with the closures completed by June 2009.

The state's famed park system attracts 79 million visitors a year and ranges from giant redwood vistas along the foggy north coast to iconic deserts to the south. The proposal has outraged conservationists, politicians and many residents who count on taking affordable trips to these places along an increasingly expensive coastline.

"The reality is millions of Californians are going to be shut out of their state parks," said California State Parks Foundation director of legislation and policy Traci Verardo-Torres.

When Rogers' great granddaughter heard what might happen, Jennifer Rogers-Etcheverry immediately drove from her home in Bakersfield to Will Rogers State Historic Park in Pacific Palisades. The family donated the estate with all the hiking and riding trails that wind through the Santa Monica Mountains in 1944.

"It's heart-wrenching," said Rogers-Etcheverry, also the family spokeswoman. "We're not going to stand by and let the doors close quietly."

The state parks department was tasked with coming up with a 10 percent reduction and made their decision based on revenue and visitorship, said parks spokesman Roy Stearns. The resulting plan would close one in every five of state's 278 parks until there is money to reopen them.

Among those on the list: Del Norte Redwoods State Park, the Governor's Mansion State Historic Park, State Indian Museum State Historic Park, San Simeon State Park and Topanga State Park. The governor's office has said some of the parks could be turned over to local governments to operate.

Some were already worried at Sutter's

California Supreme Court's financial conflicts doom appeal

BY PAUL ELIAS | Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO Braxton Berkley had a well-paying assembly line job at Lockheed Martin's famed Skunk Works factory in Burbank. He took pride in contributing to the national defense effort at the height of the Cold War, building F-117 Nighthawks, SR71 Blackbirds and other top secret planes for the military.

But he alleged that the chemicals he and his colleagues used to degrease parts and wash their hands eventually made the workers sick. Berkley was among hundreds who sued Lockheed and the firms that supplied the chemicals, including some of the world's biggest oil companies. The cases began going to trial a decade ago in groups of about a dozen each.

But Berkley's case ended abruptly, and in a most unusual way.

In November, the California Supreme Court dismissed his appeal after initially agreeing to hear it. The court's decision was based not on its legal merits, but because four of the seven justices controlled stock in oil companies that provided some of the solvents at issue, such as acetone.

The court's action — or inaction — has been the talk of the appellate bar since November, leaving lawyers on both sides in disbelief and law professors scratching their heads for a precedent.

"It's an odd one," said Santa Clara University law professor Gerald Uelmen.

That's little consolation to Berkley and his former co-workers, who have ping-ponged through the court system in pursuit of a multimillion-dollar verdict. Now, even their lawyers concede the case is dead and that a lower court's procedural ruling against them stands.

"It's unfair and I am very disgusted with the courts," said Berkley, now a minister in Pacoima. He suffers from diabetes and arthritis that he says were caused by the chemicals.

"A lot of my friends died because of the toxic chemicals we handled," he said. "I am very disappointed and I don't know why they would do something like that."

It's common for at least one justice to bow out of a case because of a financial or personal conflict. Chief Justice Ron George, for instance, recuses himself from cases handled by the prominent law firm where his son practices.

Stick a plug in it, Santa Monica Editor:

In order to protect the city of Santa Monica from severe water shortages and save our ocean from pollution, we must not waste this valuable natural resource on such frivolous actions like hosing down sidewalks, driveways, patios, alleys or parking spaces. We need to only water our lawns in the early morning or late to early evening, and not in the middle of the day, when the heat rises and will evaporate the water. Just because we enjoy the look of a fountain or a pond, we must remember that using water to keep them full is not a necessity and is only going to hurt us in the near future. The city of Santa Monica doesn't even want residents to be washing their cars or serving water in restaurants unless someone requests a glass. We need to make sure we fix any water leaks right away and that we don't have runoff from our lawns into the streets, alleys or gutters.

If everyone saved 20 gallons of water a day, then our city would be protected against possible water shortage and we would not be facing this problem. In Santa Monica, a lot of homes use half their water on their lawns and other outdoor areas, like swimming pools, and this is not good. Because it doesn't rain here a lot, our area is dry, and that is why fires can start so quickly and spread. The city has a lot of good suggestions on how to save water each day and some are as simple as not running your dishwasher unless it is full, not using your toilet as a wastebasket and turning off the faucet while you brush your teeth or rinse dishes.

Every resident in Santa Monica can make a difference if they only understood how important it was to save water, and then that when water from our land runs off into the storm drains, it eventually make its way to the Santa Monica Bay, and that is not good. Years ago, people thought that the big companies or factories were contributing to the pollution problem and that sewage treatment plants were doing the most harm. But we now know that is not the case and if we just practice good household tips and habits, we can make a huge difference and play a part in keeping clean, green and healthy.

If you don't obey the No Water Waste Ordinance you may receive a violation or fine like what happened to one of my neighbors. She received a $250,000 fine for washing her car in her driveway. The city came out and took pictures of her wet car and driveway and mailed her a violation letter telling her she had to pay the fine. The city also provides resources on how not to get fines and what we can do to help save water and stop pollution, like tips for landscaping, cleaning, repairing leaks, servicing swimming pools, stop run-off by practicing good housekeeping, taking care of our cars and driveways and better ways to redirect the water.

So, if we want to avoid pollution to the ocean and bay, decrease the amount and spread of wildfires, save our homes and pockets money and use our water wisely, it is important to listen to what the city has to say and obey the laws. You may think it's a hassle to obey these water laws and keep our streets clean, but when we do this, this will help our water control and pollution. If we don't obey the laws, and pay attention, then the problems will get worse and worse and we won't have enough water for what is a necessity. The city has gone to a lot of trouble, time and resource to help the residents who live in Santa Monica because they care about how to keep where we live great and we need to respond by at least trying to save water and think about the future. So start conversing [sic] water today so that tomorrow we have a future.

Landmarking? It's all a facade

I'VE WRITTEN ABOUT MANY OF THE items on the Landmarks Commission agenda tonight.

The embattled ficus trees on Second and Fourth streets between Wilshire Boulevard and Broadway are back. City Hall wants to remove 23 hazardous trees and relocate about 30 others. Opposing the plan are assorted "greens" and members of Santa Monica Tree Savers who want to landmark the trees in order to stop the project.

If they aren't landmarked or continued again, ficus supporters have hinted at litigation or other action to follow. These trees will die of old age before the dust clears on this fiasco. Nothing that I've read or seen tells me the trees are historic in any sense, but there's always a chance that this commission might grant them landmark status. They wouldn't do that? Would they?

This project was before landmarks, June 11, July 9 and Nov. 12 of last year for design review. Many neighbors eager to protect the historical "period" aura of the neighborhood oppose the project. Commissioners agreed at their Nov. 12 meeting that "a modern structure could be constructed in a historic district, however the no-contributing (modern) structure must be responsive to the context and not overwhelm the onsite or adjacent historic buildings ..." That kind of defeats the purpose of having an historic district if non-period construction is allowed, doesn't it? Well, this is Santa Monica.

A couple of weeks ago, the same commission approved demolition of a small 1953-era duplex with garage and construction of a new, single-family residence at 2642 2nd Street — also located within the Third Street Historic District. Neighbors concerned that another proposed contemporary project (like the one at 2617 3rd Street) would forever alter the characteristics of the district have filed appealed the commission's decision to City Council who will have final word on this project. Let's hope that they are more sensitive to the concept of a historic district than, apparently, the Landmarks Commission is.

The NuWilshire Theater at 1314-1316 Wilshire Blvd. is also on the agenda. Property owner, LaBrea-Washington Co., LLC, wants to extensively remodel the closed movie house which was built in 1930 as a single auditorium theater with retail storefronts flanking the foyer. The large stage-house at the back suggests the Wilshire could accommodate live theatrical productions as well as motion pictures.

The staff report calls it an excellent example of Art Deco architecture although their report notes a 1960s remodel that involved filling in windows, replacing the marquee, removing the free standing ticket box-office, removing the existing tile foyer floor and stripping architectural details off adjacent storefronts.

I wrote in a previous column that in 1977, the single auditorium was divided into two "shoebox" movie theaters. There is no information in the staff report as to how much of the interior of the original auditorium or stage remains. The current twin-screen configuration appears as if much of the original interior, including a balcony may have been just covered over.

The only thing considered for landmark status is the street facade. Although staff feels that enough of this elevation remains after the disastrous 1960s remodel to warrant landmark status I disagree.

The property owner plans to demolish the theater itself and replace it with retail stores and underground parking while preserving only the bastardized 1930s facade.

The same preservation thing was done to the La Reina Theater in Sherman Oaks about a dozen years ago. The La Reina's art deco front wall is still there. Its free-standing box-office is now a display case for the retail store behind the facade. The original backlighting marquee panels have been replaced with a digital "stadium scoreboard" readout. It looks just awful. But, any thoughts of landmarking the entire Wilshire Theater and restoring it is wishful thinking.

Conversely, we're lucky to have an enlightened local property owner like Jim Rosenfeld, who owns the Aero Theater on Montana Avenue. Rosenfeld took the time to find a lessee (American Cinematheque) who retained the Aero's single auditorium and even make upgrades to seating and flooring, bathrooms, concessions, sound and projection -- making it a true community gem.

This is not the case, here. What we'll get is a designer blue jeans store behind another compromised ersatz 1930s facade.

Who's the worst person on earth?

IT'S NOT OSAMA BIN LADEN, SADDAM Hussein or Mahmoud Ahmadinejad. It's not even Joseph Stalin, Pol Pot or Adolph Hitler. No, according to Keith Olbermann — that blinkered liberal extremist who plays a newsman on TV — Wendy Wright, President of Concerned Women for America (CWA), is “the worst person in the world.”

While discussing abstinence education during a recent interview on the Fox News Channel's Special Report, Wright accurately pointed out that the most strident devotees of that abysmal failure tagged “comprehensive sex education” are most likely to benefit financially when children and teens become pregnant or contract sexually transmitted diseases.

During the interview, Wright hit the nail squarely on the head, saying, “In fact, they want to encourage [kids to have sex] because they benefit when kids end up having sexually transmitted diseases, unintended pregnancies and then they lead them into having abortions. So, you have to look at the financial motives behind those who are promoting comprehensive sex ed.”

And the financial motives are staggering. According to its own annual report, Planned Parenthood — which receives its lion's share of profit from abortion — performed 264,943 abortions in the 2006 fiscal year, raking in an astronomical $55.8 million in profit ... free and clear.

It doesn't take a Phi Beta Kappa to figure out that Planned Parenthood has a vested interest in seeing that young girls become pregnant and have abortions. It's a classic case of “the fox watching the hen house.” “Comprehensive sex ed” spells money in the bank because it actually encourages kids to have sex. It doesn't work, and they know it.

Well, Wright's comments didn't sit well with the left. Liberal bloggers went nuts, and in a recent episode of MSNBC's poorly rated “Countdown with Keith Olbermann,” the painfully “progressive” talking-head took issue with Wendy for pointing out this clear conflict of interest, crowning her “the worst person in the world.”

Toward the end of his decidedly obtuse monologue, Olbermann — whose joke writer is also apparently on strike — smugly quipped, “And the condoms the sex educators keep trying to make available to the kids, those are for what ... water balloons?”

Well, Poindexter, yes, in fact. That's precisely what kids are using them for. Take the African AIDS epidemic. As CWA reported a few years back, Dr. Margaret Ogola of Kenya testified at two United Nations conferences that, “‘family planners’ have put so many condoms into Kenya that the children use them as balloons and play with them in the streets.”

Tragically, we all know how “comprehensive sex education” has worked-out in Africa.

Like a broken record, liberal educators and cultural elites incessantly regurgitate, “always have safe sex,” while the only thing impressionable, hormone charged kids hear is, “have sex!”

Even radical feminists such as the vice president of the Gainesville, Florida, National Organization for Women (NOW) and a “committee chair” of the University of Florida NOW, publicly admitted during testimony before a Food and Drug Administration (FDA) hearing that condoms failed them personally — sometimes on multiple occasions. If experts like NOW feminists can't use condoms effectively, how can we expect children to?

Easy answer — We can't.

Look, we know that abstinence is the only foolproof method guaranteed to prevent unwanted teen pregnancy and sexually transmitted disease. Yet the many successes associated with abstinence education go completely unreported by a biased media, as a handful of rigged studies conducted by “comprehensive sex ed” proponents make headlines.

It's a clear attempt to undermine the impressive success of abstinence education, while — at the same time — endeavoring to salvage its failed “comprehensive sex ed” counterpart. If it weren't so serious, it'd be funny. Still, Planned Parenthood is laughing all the way to the bank.

So, congratulations Wendy. It's obvious from the left's reaction to your comments that you struck a tender nerve. Anytime you inject truth into the analysis, they go apoplectic.

And if Olbermann is the chief protagonist for liberal thought, I think the conservative movement is going to be just fine. Anytime you've got Keith Olbermann's goat, you know you're doing something right.

MATT BARBER is one of the “like-minded men” with Concerned Women for America. He is an attorney concentrating in constitutional law and serves as CWA's policy director for cultural issues.

The Q-Line

Measuring Measure R

Considering that funding the area's public schools is one of the most important things a community can do to support its young, it is no wonder that we will be faced with it at the ballot box come February.

So this week's Q-Line question asks:

Do you think Measure R is good for the area or just another attempt to get tax payers to foot the bill for education?

Bowman's death still a mystery

BY BETH HARRIS | Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES Christopher Bowman soared to the heights as U.S. figure skating champion. He crashed off the ice, though, ending up dead on the floor of a cheap motel room 1 1/2 months after being arrested for misdemeanor theft.

The 40-year-old skater's death initially was reported as a possible drug overdose, but "we don't have anything that points specifically" to that as the cause, assistant chief Ed Winter of the coroner's office said Friday.

Investigators also were considering Bowman's death Thursday was the result of an accident or natural causes. The two-time Olympian was 6 feet and weighed an estimated 300 pounds.

"There was some prescription medication present" at the scene but no evidence of illegal drugs, Winter said. He didn't know the type or quantity of medication found. An autopsy on Bowman was to be done this weekend.

He battled drug problems, and underwent treatment at least twice — once before the 1988 Olympics and then again after the Albertville Games in 1992. He was an admitted cocaine addict.

The skater was alternately nicknamed "Bowman the Showman" for his flair on the ice and "Hans Brinker from Hell" for his hard partying and lack of discipline in training.

Bowman was one of figure skating's biggest personalities in the late 1980s and early 1990s. Immensely talented, with a gift for performance that few others could match, he won U.S. national titles in 1989 and 1992, and was runner-up in 1987 and 1991.

He also won a silver medal at the 1989 world championships, and a bronze the next year. He was seventh at the 1988 Winter Olympics and finished fourth in the 1992 Games.

Bowman's body was found by a male friend who had shared his $55-a-night room at the Budget Inn in the hardscrabble North Hills area of the San Fernando Valley, police Sgt. Greg Houser said Friday.

EVERYTHING SEEMED TO BE IN ORDER. THERE WAS NO INDICATION THAT THERE WAS ANYTHING CRIMINAL. "

Sgt. Greg Houser, LAPD

Bowman and his friend spent the night in the motel. The friend told police that he awoke the next morning to find Bowman on the floor not breathing, Houser said. He called 911 and paramedics pronounced Bowman dead at the scene shortly after noon Thursday.

Houser said there was no evidence of foul play or illegal narcotics in the room.

"Everything seemed to be in order," he said. "There was no indication that there was anything criminal. There wasn't any indication there that there was drug use going on."

The two-story stucco motel along one of the busiest streets in the Valley is one of a half-dozen budget motels in the area, located across from an indoor swap meet, gas station and Hispanic supermarket. Historically, the area has been frequented by gangs and prostitutes.

The motel manager, who declined to give his name, would only say he knew Bowman because the skater had been there before.

Houser said Bowman's unidentified friend was distraught at the scene and he cooperated with police.

Bowman had a criminal history and was on probation at the time of his death.

The former child actor, whose credits included "Little House on the Prairie" and "Archie Bunker's Place," was arrested Nov. 23 on a misdemeanor charge of receiving/concealing stolen property.

According to court documents, Bowman was in possession of aluminum siding and pipes that belonged to the city of Los Angeles.

He pleaded no contest and was sentenced Dec. 14 to seven days in county jail, two years' probation and 15 days of graffiti removal with a highway crew.

In 2005 in Michigan, he was sentenced to 18 months' probation for misdemeanor involving having a gun while drunk.

In 1993, while skating with the Ice Capades, he was beaten at a hotel in a seedy neighborhood in Pittsburgh, according to a police report.

Deportees were sedated by immigration agents

BY PETER PRENGAMAN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES U.S. immigration agents must get a judge's permission to sedate deportees, according to a policy change outlined in a memo issued this week.

Immigration officials have acknowledged that 56 deportees were given psychotropic drugs during a seven month period in 2006 and 2007 even though most had no history of mental problems. The American Civil Liberties Union filed a federal lawsuit over the practice in June.

An internal Immigration and Customs Enforcement memo obtained by The Associated Press said "effective immediately" agents must get a court order before administering drugs "to facilitate an alien's removal."

"There are no exceptions to this policy," said the memo issued Wednesday by John Torres, detention and removal director of Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

To get a sedation order from court, officials must show deportees have a history of physical resistance to being removed or are a danger to themselves.

"Medical sedation will only be considered as a last resort," said spokeswoman Virginia Kice.

The ACLU sued the agency in June to stop the practice, alleging it could constitute torture and violates the Bill of Rights and federal laws regarding the medical treatment of detainees.

The suit, still pending, came after a handful of immigrants in Southern California claimed to have been drugged or threatened with drugging while the government attempted to deport them.

"We are very happy that the government recognized that their barbaric sedation policy was wrong," said ACLU lawyer Ahilan Arulanantham. "This has been a shameful chapter in the country's immigration history."

Arulanantham said the ACLU would go forward with the suit to learn more details about how sedation was used, who was drugged and to get a court ruling outlawing it in the future.

Senate testimony last year revealed that 33 of 56 deportees involuntarily given psychotropic drugs had no history of psychological problems, but were given the medicine because of "combative behavior," said Julie Myers, assistant secretary of homeland security.

Utility asks feds to take power company's leader out of case

By the Associated Press

PORTLAND, Ore. The Canby Utility Board wants federal officials to take the Bonneville Power Administration's chief executive out of part of a pending rate case decision on dividing Northwest hydropower between public and private utilities.

The municipal utility says BPA chief Steve Wright could favor private utilities and is seeking a temporary replacement.

"Canby believes that BPA Administrator Wright's impartiality is fatally compromised as the final agency decision-maker," said a letter from Canby General Manager Dick Borges to Energy Secretary Samuel Bodman.

Canby had previously asked the BPA to replace hearings officer Allan Arlow because he also works as an administrative law judge for Oregon utility regulators, who want a larger portion of the BPA system to go to private utilities.

The federal power agency also is getting criticism from others in the case.

The Citizens' Utility Board is considering taking the BPA to court over similar objections, said Bob Jenks, executive director for the ratepayer advocacy group.

The BPA is due to begin determining how it divvies up some $40 billion in hydropower over the next 20 years.

Katie Pruder, Spokeswoman for the BPA

The energy generated at 31 hydroelectric dams and a nuclear plant provides Northwest consumers with relatively low rates and reduces costs for power-hungry industrial employers.

The issue is what share of the system should go to customers of private utilities such as Portland General Electric, PacifiCorp and Puget Sound Energy and what to publicly owned utilities that have preference rights to BPA energy.

"We have taken on this responsibility while being clear that we cannot and will not promise any specific results in advance of the public process," said Katie Pruder, a spokeswoman for the BPA.

Private utilities serve 60 percent of the region's consumers and three-quarters of Oregonians. But they receive only a small slice of benefits from the federal hydropower system because public utilities have had preference since the agency was established in 1937.

In May, a federal court ruled that BPA had ignored prescribed formulas for determining the level of benefits for customers of private utilities.

Ever since, the agency, utilities and government officials have struggled to find a compromise that will avoid congressional intervention. If Congress gets involved, the agency contends, representatives of other states might make a grab for the BPA benefits and leave the Northwest without an economic subsidy of as much as $2.5 billion a year.

Latest digital gear no match for Mother Nature

BY ROBERT WELLER
Associated Press Writer

DENVER Colorado's mountains have a history of overpowering winter visitors, dating all the way back more than 150 years ago to Zebulon Pike and John Fremont, even though the latter had Kit Carson as a guide.

The infamous Alferd Packer, stuck in deep snow near Slumgullion Pass in the winter of 1874-75, ate the remains of the gold seekers he was leading to Colorado. Chief Ouray of the Ute Tribe, who had befriended many travelers, warned Packer to wait until spring.

In the winter of 1846-47 even more were killed when the Donner Party tried to cross the Sierras to get to the gold fields.

"The Indians were smart enough to head down to the valleys in the winter," said Colorado historian Tom Noel. Anthropological research has shown that Indians would winter at the base of the mountains in sheltered areas where cities like Denver have grown up, including Indians who roamed the plains.

So far this year, two skiers have been killed in avalanches and three other people are missing in Colorado. A total of 16 have died in Western states since Nov. 12, with nine in Washington state. Over the past decade an average of 25 people have died in avalanches nationally.

More snow is forecast for Colorado's mountains, and even if it isn't forecast it is always a possibility since the mountains can create their own weather.

Both the National Weather Service and Colorado Avalanche Center had put out numerous warnings in the past several weeks. The avalanche risk was put at considerable Sunday in most of Colorado's mountains.

"We put out the information — whether the public listens or not. It makes my colleagues and I horribly said. It is terrible," said Anne Mellick of the Colorado Avalanche Center.

Some reports have said some of the people who were killed or managed to escape had done all the right things. But is that possible?

"All of the gadgetry isn't capable of handling everything nature can dish out for us. They are not keeping us safe," said Mellick. Avalanche beacons help find people — but one of the victims was buried less than 20 minutes.

Scott Toepfer of the avalanche center said Jesse Brigham, 27, Jan. 4, and his two partners had done everything by the book, the Vail Daily reported.

"Here's some guys who are really trying to do it right. And, God, some of it's just bad luck," Toeper said.

Experts say it all goes back to snow that fell in early October, it created an unstable foundation, some compare it ballbearings that let it slide at the slightest provocation, such as the weight of fresh snow.

Mellick said it isn't possible in some cases to carve out a breathing space above your face. "Some of this snow is set up like concrete. You are not going to be able to move. They are completely entombed in snow," she said. One victim was buried less than 20 minutes.

She also noted that 25 percent of victims die of trauma.

A GPS will tell you are, perhaps providing some comfort in knowing where you died. But in heavy snow they often can't, in the lingo, "acquire satellites" to provide an exact position. Rescuers who came to the aid of six snowmobilers trapped near the New Mexico border said the snow was falling at a rate of eight inches an hour.

That group was lucky. They were near the track of the Cumbres & Toltec narrow gauge railway and they hunkered down in a railroad cabin for three nights.

A cell phone can be more help but sometimes no signal is available. And a 911 could end up being received by a dispatcher hundreds of miles away, further delaying a rescue.

It is absolutely essential that backcountry travelers, be they on snowmachines, cross-country skis, snowshoes or just hiking, travel with at least one partner. They should carry shovels and a probe. Even within the boundaries of ski areas snowriders are urged not to go into the trees alone — the danger there is tree wells, space next to a tree whether it is easy to get trapped and panic. On the other hand sometimes snowriders have to get into the tree to be able to see anything in whiteouts because the trees provide definition.

Backcountry air bags are being tested in Canada.

BAD NIGHT IN BED: Traditional mattresses and bedding contain a slew of potentially harmful chemicals that can 'off-gas' from fabrics, padding and framing. Fortunately there are many alternatives now available, such as this organic, chemical-free mattress from Lifekind.

A non-toxic night's sleep

Dear EarthTalk:

Is it true that traditional mattresses and bedding can cause environmental and health problems, and if so, what alternatives are out there?

— Jay & Aubrey Gillespie,
via e-mail

WITH ALL WE KNOW TODAY ABOUT synthetic chemicals and their effects on our health, going green in the bedroom — where we spend a third of our lives — makes more sense than ever.

Traditional mattresses and bedding contain a slew of potentially harmful chemicals that can "off-gas" from fabrics, padding and framing and get inhaled or ingested. One of the most harmful is formaldehyde, which is used in many adhesives and can cause eye and throat irritation, headaches and nervous system disorders. And carcinogenic flame-retardants known as PBDEs, many of which are now banned in Europe and some U.S. states, still turn up in some sleep products. Most people fare just fine on their mattresses despite proximity to such offensive substances, but those with sensitivities to synthetic chemicals might want to consider greener bedding options. Luckily, there are many varieties to choose from.

Some very affordable green mattress options are available from manufacturers like Lifekind, Cozypure, Vivetique/Dreamlite, Royal-Pedic, Greensleep/Vimala, EcoChoices and Keetsa. Most of these companies make mattresses with natural latex cores, wrapped in naturally flame-retardant cotton and/or wool. Online retailer Gaiam carries some of these brands, and Ikea also now offers PBDE-free mattresses that just about anyone can afford. Also, many independent green stores are sprouting up in communities around the country and are probably the first place to look in the interest of supporting local merchants and minimizing the need to ship products long distance.

As for bedding, environmentalists' main bugaboo is the use of traditional cotton, which requires huge fertilizer and pesticide inputs to grow and causes pollution during the industrial bleaching process. But with consumer demand for greener products through the roof, organic unbleached cotton is becoming more widely available. Some leading organic cotton bedding labels to look for include Cozypure, Lifekind, Holy Lamb Organics, Mary Jane's Farm, The Green Robin, Jan Eleni, Kushtush Organics, Native Organic, Northern Naturals and Under the Canopy, among many others. Most environmentalists embrace wool blankets for their warmth and breathability, although sustainably harvested down in organic cotton duvets provides a viable green alternative as well.

Once you've banned synthetics and chemicals from the bedroom, no doubt you and your whole family will rest a little bit easier.

Concept originated in Japan

ted to getting off the streets. Police would also be allowed to refer and transport those who are willing to reception campsites where they can be evaluated for compatibility with urban camping and find a site that would best suit their needs.

"For some, a camping approach can be the first step into more permanent shelter when an indoor bed or program becomes available," Walburger said.

Those who are shelter resistant may also be more apt to stay at a campsite and receive assistance, Walburger said.

Each site would have an on-site manager to oversee the day-to-day operations and make sure campers are staying on track. Campers could be assigned duties at the sites, such as maintenance or laundry service, to help them reintegrate into the workforce.

The campsites would be closed during the day since they would most likely be located in parking lots or CalTrans land that is used from 6 a.m. to 6 p.m. This would also discourage people from hanging out at the campsite, turning it into an eyesore.

One major hurdle is funding. Walburger said creating the mold that would make the modules would cost roughly $50,000, with each module running roughly $3,000 a piece or less, depending on how many are made at one time. There is a limited amount of money available for such projects, meaning Walburger will most likely have to find private sources instead of relying on public agencies and municipalities.

There are also concerns about public health and safety, said Julie Rusk, human services manager for City Hall who manages the city's response to homelessness and has spoken with Walburger about urban camping several times.

"Concentrating a lot of people in one place is just not what we are trying to do. We are focused on helping the most chronically homeless now, trying to make an impact by targeting those who have been on the streets the longest."

Rusk said organized camping is a project more suited for the private sector, with funding coming from foundations that can take more of a risk.

John Maceri, executive director of OPCC, the largest homeless services provider in Santa Monica, said he has spoken with Walburger many times about his camping concept and believes it has some merit, but points to the difficulties in finding a suitable location to place the modules.

"We all know that we do not have enough housing to meet the need," Maceri said. "But it becomes a question of where do you put these sites. They would be on public parcels that would be very visible, such as parking lots at the beach or CalTrans sites. Having people in these modules is better than doing nothing but you run the risk of them becoming more than a short-term solution and turning into a pretty large encampment, and how do you manage that?"

There is already a feeling amongst many Santa Monicans that City Hall has done more than its fair share to help the homeless and are looking for a reduction in services, or at least in the number of homeless people seen on the streets. By building campsites, there is a fear that more homeless would be attracted to Santa Monica.

Walburger realizes there are many obstacles standing in his way and knows that if he is able to secure funding, there will be many critics who will try to shut him down or push him out of their neighborhoods. However, he remains committed to pursuing organized camping in Los Angeles County, and plans to make presentations to county officials.

"Every new concept is before its time," Walburger said. "But organized camping with caseworker management is not before its need."

WHEN YOU ARE SANCTIONING CAMPING AS A WAY FOR PEOPLE TO LIVE, YOU REALLY TAKE ON A LOT OF UNINTENDED CONSEQUENCE ... "

Julie Rusk

Human services manager for City Hall

"This idea comes up periodically and for good reason," Rusk said. "It seems like a very practical, simple way to help large numbers of people, and it can be cost effective. But in the end, it always comes down to public safety. You are effectively putting a large number of people in what ultimately amounts to a substandard living condition."

"Homelessness is the ultimate substandard living condition, but when you are sanctioning camping as a way for people to live, you really take on a lot of unintended consequences and problems," Rusk added.

Will Rogers State Park could be hit with cuts

Fort which sits just two miles west of the state Capitol and made the list. The fort was a key outpost during the 1848 California gold rush that drew dreamers from around the world.

These days, more than 170,000 schoolchildren visit Sutter's each year, many on overnight trips where they relive the Wild West in the midst of adobe and wooden buildings listed on the National Register of Historic Places. Admission costs $4 for adults and $2 for children over 6 years old.

"This is hallowed ground. Some of the most famous people in American history walked here," said Steve Beck, coordinator of education programs at Sutter's Fort.

At Southern California's Torrey Pines State Beach, some worried about the proposed cuts to lifeguard hours at a beach known for fierce rip tides. The narrow rocky strip of sand hugs the bluffs of the Torrey Pines State Reserve near San Diego and regularly lures entire families on warm weekends.

Michelle Abt of San Diego was walking with her toddler, Jasmine, in her arms. Nearby, a handful of surfers braved the chilly winter water as birds skimmed the bottle-green waves.

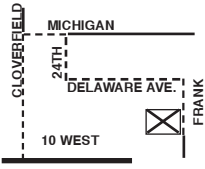

"I really like having the lifeguards, especially because she goes in the water," said Abt. "The undertow is so unpredictable."

As chair of the Assembly Budget Committee, Assemblyman John Laird was aware of the state's financial struggles. Even so, he seemed surprised that two of the state parks in his district made the list and another half dozen beaches would have lifeguard cuts.

The grim reality, he said, is when faced with such a shortfall the choice is either make cuts or raise revenues. But raising fees to parks, beaches and other recreation areas, could price out people who are major users of state parks, he said.

"We have six months to take this to the people of California and see what they want us to do," said Laird.

COMMUNITY PROFILES | NANCY LINEHAN CHARLES

Brandon Wise brandonw@smdp.com

WOMAN OF ACTION: Santa Monica resident Nancy Linehan Charles, who has been an actress for the past 30 years, spent time in Iowa recently stumping for Hillary Clinton.

Resident spends time stumping for Hillary

En route to the podium, the presidential candidate, with a broad smile on her face, stopped in front of Charles, and shook her hand.

"She was spectacular," Charles said last week after returning from her excursion on the campaign trail.

Spending her holidays leaving warm Southern California, cold-calling hundreds of registered voters and spending hours out in the frigid temperatures knocking on doors wasn't exactly what Charles envisioned.

But being involved in the political process is an experience Charles would never take back.

The opportunity came knocking on the door when Charles received a call from her older sister, Caryl Yontz, a retired lobbyist from Texas who occasionally provides political consulting for the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees (AFSCME).

While Yontz was set to spend the holidays with her little sister, she received a call from the AFSCME camp in Iowa to receive her services for the Iowa Caucus. Unwilling to give up quality time with her family, Yontz asked Charles to come along, be a part of history.

But Charles was still undecided between Clinton, whom the AFSCME has endorsed, and Barack Obama.

The deciding factor was Bill Clinton, whom Charles has been a fan of since the former president was in the Oval Office, having met him once on the set of "Minority Report."

"I thought (Hillary Clinton) is smart and she's done a lot so I decided to go with her," Charles said.

The sisters arrived in Illinois on Dec. 26 and a day later, they were in a Dubuque hotel, a copy of several hundred names in one hand and a telephone in another, going down the list making calls to encourage voters to head out to the polls and throw their support behind Clinton.

The week leading up to the caucus was a blur, filled with rallies, the voices of more than 400 people, some in support of Clinton, others tired of the negative campaigning, and countless faces met during door-to-door precinct walking, some voters untrusting, others inviting Charles into their home.

On Jan. 3, Charles participated in her first caucus, a unique experience for a person who had only participated in primaries where votes are private.

Charles observed the Democratic caucus in the town of Asbury, crammed into a room with 330 other people, split into support groups by candidate, the room was noisy as people debated which Democrat should come out victorious, some voters trying to persuade other voters from different camps to join their side.

She recalls watching an argument unfold between two brothers — one for Obama and the other for Clinton — both trying to get the other to join their side.

"I felt like I was back in pre-Revolutionary War America," Charles said.

But as the evening progressed, it became more apparent that Clinton would not win. John Edwards ended up winning the most delegates from the Asbury caucus.

That night, after the votes were cast, Charles listened to Obama's victory speech, one that has her reconsidering her allegiance.

The next day, the Clinton camp packed up and headed east to prepare for the New Hampshire caucus, putting the defeat of Iowa behind them, while Charles decided to go west, the past week becoming an unforgettable memory. It was time to go home.

San Diego advances to face New England in AFC title game

BY BARRY WILNER
AP Football Writer

INDIANAPOLIS After handing New England a huge gift, the San Diego Chargers believe it's time to give the unbeaten Patriots something else: a challenge.

And, oh yeah, a loss.

By stunning Peyton Manning and the defending champion Colts 28-24 on Sunday, undermanned San Diego removed New England's biggest road block to the Super Bowl. Not that the Chargers are intimidated by facing the 17-0 Patriots in the AFC title game next weekend.

Despite having LaDainian Tomlinson and Philip Rivers on the sideline, the Chargers won their eighth straight game. Of course, that's not even half of what New England has achieved.

"Seventeen have tried and it hasn't happened," quarterback Philip Rivers said of New England's perfect record. "We think it can happen."

But San Diego must avoid a repeat of its last performance at New England, when it was routed 38-14 in Week 2. That was the beginning of a slide to 5-5 for San Diego, but the Chargers (13-5) are rolling now.

"A lot has happened since then," Patriots coach Bill Belichick said. "We'll definitely start all over on the preparations. It's like it's a new team."

Also an undermanned team. L.T. departed in the first half with a bruised left knee, and Rivers went out in the third quarter with a damaged right knee. Both said they hoped to be ready for the Patriots, and coach Norv Turner said they are "questionable."

"That's the true measure of a team," Tomlinson said. "Guys stepped up and got it done."

Those guys included Billy Volek at quarterback and Michael Turner as the main runner. Led by those subs, San Diego went 78 yards on eight plays, with Volek sneaking in from the 1 with 4:50 remaining for the lead. The Chargers' big-play defense then held on downs at its 7, and stopped Indy again in the final moments to preserve their eighth straight win.

To make it nine in a row and advance to their second Super Bowl — the other was a loss to San Francisco after the 1994 season — the Chargers will need all that resourcefulness again.

"I'm pretty sure we'll be huge underdogs, but it's still going to be fun, just to get the opportunity," Tomlinson said. "All the rest of the teams have had their opportunity to play New England, and we'll get another opportunity to do so in the AFC championship game. What a better way to go back there."

For the Colts (13-4), it was a bitterly quick elimination from the postseason.

A year ago, they won three playoff games, then beat Chicago in the Super Bowl. They couldn't recapture their touch on offense or defense this time.

WE'LL
PREPARATIONS. IT'S LIKE
IT'S A NEW TEAM."

Bill Belichick, Patriots head coach

"What happened last year doesn't make it any easier this year," Manning said. "When you come back and commit yourself to the '07 season and you don't finish it like you want to, it hurts."

A defense that allowed the fewest points during the season wore down against the equally physical Chargers. Still, the Colts went in front 24-21 when Anthony Gonzalez slipped past Marlon McCree down the left sideline to complete a 55-yard scoring play with 10:07 to go. The Chargers challenged that Gonzalez stepped out of bounds at about the 25, but the play stood.

So San Diego's backups then won it, helped by a 27-yard screen pass to rookie Legedu Naanee and a 15-yard face-mask penalty against Indianapolis cornerback Marlin Jackson.

"When you have so many weapons, you don't have to do anything special," Volek said. "It was not like the game was out of reach. I had to go out there and fill my role."

Manning did throw for 402 yards, completing 33 of his 48 throws, but both interceptions killed deep scoring threats.

It was a gutty showing by Rivers, who threw for three scores.

BJORK ATTACKS PHOTOG

Icelandic singer BJORK attacked a newspaper photographer shortly after she arrived at New Zealand's Auckland International Airport on Sunday, local media reported.

Bjork, who is in the northern city of Auckland to perform at the Big Day Out concert on Friday, tore "New Zealand Herald" photographer Glenn Jeffrey's shirt after he photographed her arriving at the airport early Sunday, he told news agency New Zealand Press Association according to a report on Monday.

CHRISTINA AGUILERA has given birth to a boy, the pop singer announced on her Web site Sunday.

"Christina Aguilera and Jordan Bratman are proud to announce the birth of their son Max Liron Bratman," the brief message said. "He is a beautiful, healthy baby boy."

The baby was born Saturday night and weighs 6 pounds, 2 ounces. Aguilera, 27, was "resting and doing well," according to the message on her Web site, <http://www.christinaaguilera.com/>.

Aguilera said that Saturday was "a very joyful and special day for Jordan and I."

There was no immediate response Sunday to several calls seeking additional comment from Aguilera's representatives.

Aguilera and Bratman married in 2005. The four-time Grammy Award winning singer has said she learned she was pregnant during her recent "Back to Basics" tour.

Aiken says he thought 'Spamalot' was stupid

CLAY AIKEN, who joins the cast of "Monty Python's Spamalot" this week, says its humor was initially lost on him.

"The first time I saw it I thought it was the stupidest thing I'd ever seen in my entire life," the "American Idol" runner-up told Newsweek. "My tour drummer is the 'Spamalot' drummer, and (he) said you've got to see it again."

Aiken plays one of the leads, Sir Robin, in the Tony Award-winning musical in a stint from Friday through May 4. He told the magazine he was so sore from rehearsals he "couldn't even get off the toilet the other day."

"It hurts so bad. I don't know if it's I'm not coordinated or using muscles I never had to use before," he said.

The show is based on the film "Monty Python and the Holy Grail," which came out in 1975, a little before the 29-year-old singer's time.

"I thought Monty Python was a person until three months ago," Aiken told Newsweek for editions on newsstands on Monday.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.
