THE WHAT A DREAM ISSUE

Al Venegas named deputy police chief

BY NICK TABOREK
Daily Press Staff Writer

PUBLIC SAFETY FACILITY Santa Monica Police Chief Tim Jackman has named Al Venegas, a 23-year veteran of the department, to serve as the department's second in command.

Venegas, 47, has been the acting deputy chief for the past six months, following the departure of Phil Sanchez, who became Chief of Police in Pasadena. Venegas was appointed to the permanent position on Tuesday.

"It's huge — to rise to the rank of deputy chief, I never thought in my wildest dreams that I would be there. I'm excited, I'm honored, I'm humbled probably more than anything," he said.

As the second ranking member of the department, Venegas will be in charge of day-to-day operations.

He said upcoming challenges for the department include finding new ways to lower costs, improve efficiency and make better use of technology and crime data.

Born in San Diego and raised in Culver City, Venegas joined the Marine Corps after high school and served for seven years, including a stint as a drill sergeant. He joined the SMPD as an officer directly out of the police academy and has been with the department ever since, rising through the ranks to become the captain in charge of the department's administrative services division for the past three years.

VENEGAS

Venegas has a B.A. from Mount St. Mary's College in English literature and expects to receive a master's degree in Sociology and Criminology from UC Irvine in June.

Samohi student jumps to his death

BY NICK TABOREK
Daily Press Staff Writer

SAMOHI Friends of Santa Monica High School freshman Matthew Mezza on Saturday were struggling to understand what drove the 14 year old, who played baseball at Samohi and was known as a bright student and a bit of a jokester, to jump to his death from an upper floor of the Sheraton Delfina hotel on Friday afternoon.

The suicide was all the more difficult to comprehend for the events that preceded it.

Mezza had attended baseball practice on Friday afternoon but abruptly fled, according to Tim Cuneo, the Superintendent of the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District.

"The student ran from practice across the street and entered the hotel and jumped from the hotel to his death. That's all I know," Cuneo said.

Several witnesses said Mezza had yelled that he was going to jump off a building as he left practice, causing startled teammates to give chase. They lost sight of Mezza, only to see his body fall to the pavement next to Pico Boulevard.

The Santa Monica Police Department said Mezza had jumped from the hotel's ballroom on the 10th floor. Sgt. Jay Trisler, a department spokesman, declined further comment, citing an ongoing investigation. According to school district officials, the jump happened at about 5 p.m. Mezza was taken to a local hospital and pronounced dead by 11 p.m. Friday.

On Saturday morning, Cuneo said about 125 students and parents attended a counseling session put on by the school district at Samohi. A handful of Mezza's friends set up a memorial on the sidewalk across Pico Boulevard from the high school, in the shadow of the Sheraton Delfina.

Many of them had attended John Adams Middle School with Mezza and remembered him as someone who was fun to be around, always seemed to be smiling and loved the TV show "Family Guy."

"What I can tell you is that he was a really happy boy," said Delores Flamenco, a parent whose two children knew Mezza.

Samohi freshman Stevie Lamb said she

3 killed in PCH crash identified

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES Three people killed in a violent 10-vehicle pileup on the Pacific Coast Highway in Orange County were identified Sunday.

The famed roadway was reopened around midnight, about 10 hours after the collision apparently triggered by a Ford Taurus going "at an excessive rate of speed," Newport Beach police Lt. Bill Hartford said Sunday.

The Orange County coroner's office said the driver of the tan Taurus, 27-year-old Julia Allen, of Newport Beach, was killed. Witnesses said her car went airborne after it crossed into the opposite lane and collided with a Toyota Prius, a white Ford Taurus and a Toyota Tacoma pickup.

Three other people were taken to hospitals with injuries, including a motorcycle rider who was listed in critical condition. The names of the injured were not immediately released. All were expected to survive.

At least 10 vehicles became entangled in the wreck, Newport Beach police Lt. Bill Hartford said.

Two cars were overturned, some people were trapped inside their vehicles, and it took hours before some of the dead could be removed from the wreckage.

Sam Schudi was driving one of the cars involved, with his wife Kelli in the passenger seat. "I heard the screech and the sound, and all the sudden I saw this car come flying in the air," Kelli Schudi told KCAL-TV Saturday night.

Sargent Shriver hospitalized in suburban DC

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

BETHESDA, Md. A medical center spokeswoman says former Peace Corps director and vice-presidential nominee R. Sargent Shriver has been hospitalized outside Washington.

Ronna Borenstein of Suburban Hospital in Bethesda said Sunday evening that she could not comment on the 95-year-old Shriver's condition or say when he was admitted.

Shriver announced in 2003 that he had Alzheimer's disease. He served as the first Peace Corps director in the administration of his brother-in-law, President John Kennedy. He also was Democrat George McGovern's running mate in 1972.

Shriver's wife and Special Olympics Founder Eunice Kennedy Shriver died in 2009 at age 88. He is the father-in-law of former California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, who is married to former NBC reporter Maria Shriver. His son, Bobby Shriver, is a Santa Monica City Councilman.

Illegal immigrant students have tough time dating

AMY TAXIN
Associated Press

It was the best the 24-year-old graduate student could do because her boyfriend, who was brought here from Mexico by his parents as a child, is an illegal immigrant and can't risk traveling anywhere identification is required.

For the past two years, the couple have navigated some of life's rites of passage with this in mind. She does the driving and often pays because even with a college degree it's hard for him to find work.

The death of the Dream Act last month dashed their hopes of a path to citizenship. While illegal immigrant students pushed for the bill to improve their access to education and jobs after graduation, the legislation also would have eased the often overlooked challenges of making friends and dating without papers.

On college campuses, illegal immigrant students face a social barrier anywhere photo identification like a driver's license is required: from taking a road trip with friends to bar hopping to catching a flight.

That can make it difficult to deepen friendships or relationships — or to date at all.

Nancy Guarneros, a 23-year-old graduate student, remembers how she was primping for a special night out with her boyfriend when he told her they were going to a club. She panicked.

"It's like, oh my gosh, how can you take me somewhere that requires government ID? What were you thinking?" Guarneros recalled at a recent meeting students held in Los Angeles to talk about so-called "cross-status" dating.

It isn't clear how many young couples are in similar relationships. Researchers say it would be tough to find out, but the number has likely grown since children brought here as illegal immigrants after the country's 1986 legalization program have come of age.

What's with the dog?

Editor:

I note in the [Jan. 11, 2011] Santa Monica Daily Press, page 3, there is a picture captioned, "SMC biology professor Dr. Garen Baghdasarian and his wife Sara Bayles will set sail in March to document plastic pollution in the Pacific." The picture shows them laying on a beach with their dog.

According to the Santa Monica visitors page, NO DOGS are permitted on the Santa Monica Beach, www.santamonica.com/visitors/what-to-do/beach/safety. Thus if the beach in the picture is the Santa Monica Beach, then perhaps before Dr. Baghdasarian and his wife "document plastic pollution in the Pacific" they might first consider following local laws and keep their dog off the Santa Monica Beach and thus help keep the Santa Monica Beach clean.

Council doing business as usual

LAST TUESDAY, COUNCILMAN KEVIN McKeown requested that his colleagues vote to ask city staff to look at additional campaign financial disclosure regulations involving City Council members who've received campaign contributions from a person, company or entity with business before the council — primarily development, zoning and land-use issues. He suggested requiring verbal disclosure of those contributions when their items are before the dais for review or approval.

McKeown's request was shot down 6-2 with Councilman Bob Holbrook absent. The vote went exactly as I expected. "Yes" votes were from McKeown and Bobby Shiver, who did not accept contributions from developers. Pam O'Connor, Terry O'Day, Gleam Davis and Mayor Richard Bloom, who've accepted developer or developer-related largess (in each case, well into the thousands of dollars) voted "no."

O'Connor, who has a long history of receiving campaign contributions from developers and special interests, played the "what if" game by asking about people with a stake in a development who are "not obvious." What if we have people "who have a real monetary interest in a project not happening," as opposed to someone directly backing a project?

O'Connor claimed it was hard to remember her contributors. Maybe not every $100 or $250 contributor, but how can she forget Macerich, who has supported her generously with nearly $5,000 in contributions from employees and associates since 2005?

By the way, Macerich's next project is the redevelopment of the Albertsons/Big 5 property at 3105 Wilshire Blvd. They'll need a development agreement from the council because of the predicted size and scale of the project. And, they need O'Connor's support.

Or Hines (who is seeking a development agreement for the defunct Paper Mate property on Olympic Boulevard) and its associates who contributed $4,250 in 2008, $250 in 2009 and another $3,500 in 2010 to O'Connor? Or NMS Properties, Luzatto/Village Trailer Park, Maxser and the Edward Thomas Collection (Shutters and Casa del Mar hotels) and others that have contributed $1,000 or more over just the last two years?

Gleam Davis voiced a number of reasons why trying to regulate disclosure wouldn't work. She asked about someone who works for a company doing business with the city who gives money to a candidate on their own and not because they were influenced to give by the company. She also wondered if she would have to list everyone who contributed to an independent committee that endorsed her such as the hundreds of people who contributed to Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights.

Davis concluded that if "a columnist with the Daily Press didn't seem to have problems finding campaign figures" nobody else would. But, my research last week still took a few hours and listed only those contributors identified with specific developers and their partners. I didn't spend time Googling all the "retired," "businessman," "housewife" and "real estate professional" contributors to see if they were possibly connected to key developers. Most likely, some developer affiliates contributing to campaigns slipped under the radar.

Davis and others know very few voters will bother to do the research let alone try to figure out who the contributors are and their connections to deep-pocketed business interests.

Calling it a "feel good measure," Terry O'Day opined that who contributed to a campaign "distracts from the real substance of the issue" (project). He also had problems trying to determine out of his hundreds of campaign contributors "who is in and who is out?" If O'Day can't figure it out, how would the average voter do it?

McKeown reminded his colleagues that these were all questions for staff to address. However, Bloom responded that it would be a never-ending process and that many issues would never be resolved. "The debate will go on and on," he predicted.

O'Connor cut to the chase. She charged that this was not an issue of transparency. "There's political motivation, here" she stated and went on to suggest that contributions could be "characterized as nefarious" and encourage "actions that could be used to politicize the land use issues in front of us." As if they aren't already.

O'Connor also raised the other issue of who is trying to influence a council person "by talking to us" (as opposed to giving money) which is not in the public record. She opposed McKeown's proposal because "it doesn't go far enough." Cough.

I guess council members could oppose everything that comes before them because of unintended consequences, or that the proposal being voted on "doesn't go far enough." If that were the case, nothing would get done.

Revealing who is trying to buy influence will be left up to the media. With that coverage comes reporting, interpretation and comment. Being that most of our elected officials dismiss comment, especially criticism, it will be business as usual.

New rules may separate ships, Alaskan seals

DAN JOLING
Associated Press

ANCHORAGE, Alaska Federal scientists are recommending rules that could restrict cruise ship visits to Alaska's Hubbard Glacier, the longest tidewater glacier in North America, because of the threat they pose to harbor seals, a marine mammal important to Native Alaskan subsistence hunters in nearby Yakutat.

Scientists from the National Marine Mammal Laboratory, part of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, say cruise ships making their way through Disenchantment Bay on their way to the glacier flush seals from ice floes into chilly sea water during critical pupping and molting periods.

Pups must bulk up on mother's milk during four to six weeks of nursing to have a better chance of surviving their first winter, said wildlife biologist John Jansen, lead researcher for the study. It suggests measures as severe as a blanket exclusion of cruise ships during pupping and molting, covering May through August, a big chunk of the cruise ship season.

NOAA Fisheries rules makers said they "hope to move forward in the near future" on the recommendations, said Aleria Jensen, a marine mammal specialist in the protected resources division. "This is a high priority issue for us."

Cruise ships and other elements of large-scale tourism went from a trickle to a boom in Alaska over the last three decades as tourists lined up to see the state's wonders from the warmth of a train car, a bus or a floating four-star hotel.

Alaska has become a major cruise destination, with 8 percent of the world capacity, the third highest share, according to the study, behind the Caribbean's 36 percent and the Mediterranean's 16 percent.

Southeast Alaska offers whales, fjords, mountain peaks and America's largest national forest. The breathtaking Hubbard Glacier stretches 76 miles to Mount Logan in Canada's Yukon Territory. At water's edge, Hubbard Glacier is six miles wide and more than 300 feet high. Visitors near the face can watch chunks of ice break off, cracking like a shotgun. The slurry of ice provides resting places for one of the world's largest congregations of harbor seals.

Traffic in the bay increased from about 15 ship visits in 1989 to 170 in 2007, according to the study, with as many as five ships in Disenchantment Bay visiting in one day. Alaska Cruise Association members made 133 trips there last year.

Harbor seals are the backbone of subsistence culture in Yakutat, said Caroline Powell, a former board member of the Yakutat Tlingit Tribe. Seals are eaten dried, smoked and canned. Oil was rendered and used to preserve food. Though it's not used to preserve food anymore, oil is added to food for flavor — like soy sauce, Powell said.

Fish, berries, seaweed and shellfish are all important, she said, but are only available seasonally.

"The seal is there all the time," she said.

Community officials have long feared the effects of cruise ships, said her husband, Larry Powell, a former Yakutat mayor. The National Park Service has jurisdiction on one side of the bay and the National Forest Service on the other, but neither of those agencies nor the NOAA Fisheries or the Coast Guard has adequately monitored cruise ship activity in the isolated community perched between Alaska's Panhandle and southcentral region, Powell said.

The study tried to find out if interruptions by cruise ships strained seals. Researchers made their observations from on board cruise ships and in aerial surveys, Jansen said.

Seals stayed on ice when cruise ships were 600 meters away — about five and a half football fields — but the number of animals hitting the water rose steeply as ships approached closer than 500 meters. Seals of all ages — 90 percent — were sent swimming when a cruise ship moved within 100 meters, or about 91 yards.

A typical harbor seal pup might spend 40 percent of its time in the water. The study concluded that a modest increase to 50 percent for younger pups required them to burn significant calories that might otherwise be devoted to building fat needed to make it through their first winter. The problem of burning too many calories in the water would be compounded if cruise ships interrupted nursing.

Cruise ships have a stated policy to avoid approaching seals closer than 500 meters. Researchers observed ships breaking that barrier 85 percent of the time.

"I can recall several conversations where the crew and the captain on the bridge were like, 'Oh, well we didn't see many seals this trip, huh?' Meanwhile, we had racked up maybe 100 observations," Jansen said. "So it was clear that they weren't seeing what we were seeing."

The study recommends that cruise ships stay 500 meters away from seals.

STILL PAYING: Although 75 percent of the world's fisheries are now either overexploited, fully exploited, significantly depleted or recovering from overexploitation, many governments continue to provide huge subsidies — about $20 billion annually — to their fishing sectors. Pictured: A fisherman hauls in a catch in the North Sea.

Saving the fish

Dear EarthTalk

What is being done to enable ocean fish populations to rebound after being so over-fished? Are nations coming together on this in any way?

Deborah Kay
Milford, Conn.

THERE IS NO OVERARCHING INTERNATIONAL agreement to limit overfishing globally, but a few governments have been able to implement and enforce restrictions at regional levels that have resulted in rebounding fish stocks. The success of these isolated examples gives environmentalists and marine biologists hope that protecting marine hotspots from overfishing can save the biodiversity of the world's oceans.

The results of an extensive four-year study released in 2006 by leading fisheries expert Boris Worm of Canada's Dalhousie University and colleagues showed that overfishing would put every single commercial fishery in the world out of business by 2048, with the oceans potentially never recovering. But University of Washington fisheries scientist Ray Hilborn challenged Worm's frightening conclusion, offering evidence that several fisheries in parts of the U.S., Iceland and New Zealand were recovering. So the two men decided to team up on a new, even more comprehensive survey of fisheries around the world.

The results the second time around, published in 2010 in the peer-reviewed journal, Science, provided ocean advocates with somewhat more encouraging results. In half of the 10 fisheries studied by Worm, Hilborn and their researchers, closing some fisheries, creating protected areas, setting catch limits and modernizing equipment did result in lower exploitation rates and some fish are indeed on the rebound.

"This is a watershed," Worm told reporters. The new study "shows clearly what can be done not only to avoid further fisheries collapse but to actually rebuild fish stocks" and provides a baseline which scientists and managers can use to gauge progress. "It's only a start, but it gives me hope that we have the ability to bring overfishing under control," he added.

Of course, a little bit of good news hardly means we've solved the overfishing problem. Environmentalists were particularly disappointed last year when the European Union (EU) announced it would set quotas for deep-sea fisheries even higher than expected. According to Uta Bellion, director of the European Marine Programme for the nonprofit Pew Environment Group, the EU's decision "will give fleets from France, Spain and Portugal the opportunity to continue plundering these stocks." She adds that the new quotas go against a 2009 United Nations General Assembly resolution that commits the EU to implement a set of measures to ensure the long-term sustainability of deep-sea fish and the rebuilding of depleted stocks.

Meanwhile, some groups are trying to end the government subsidies that effectively bankroll overfishing, legal or otherwise. The nonprofit Oceana, for instance, led an ill-fated 2010 effort to persuade the World Trade Organization to ban subsidies that encourage the depletion of fish and other marine resources. "Although 75 percent of the world's fisheries are now either overexploited, fully exploited, significantly depleted or recovering from overexploitation, many governments continue to provide huge subsidies — about $20 billion annually — to their fishing sectors," says Andy Sharpless, Oceana's CEO. "The fleets are fishing at a level that's as much as 2.5 times more than what's required for sustainable catch levels."

Rep. Gabrielle Giffords' condition improves

AMANDA LEE MYERS
BOB CHRISTIE
Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. In yet another sign of significant recovery during a remarkable week, the gravely wounded U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords was upgraded from critical to serious condition Sunday after a procedure to remove her from a ventilator was successful.

Doctors have been positive, and at time almost giddy, in describing her progress since she was shot point blank in the head Jan. 8.

Giffords responded from the moment she arrived at the emergency room, at first just squeezing a doctor's hand. Then she raised two fingers. She opened her unbandaged eye shortly after President Barack Obama's bedside visit Wednesday. Then, more milestones — which doctors said were all indicative of higher cognitive function — were achieved, all with her husband, astronaut Mark Kelly, at her side.

Kelly asked her to give him a thumbs-up if she could hear him. She did more than that. She slowly raised her left arm. By the end of the week, she had moved her legs and arms.

At the hospital, more than 100 people were gathered amid the sea of get-well balloons and cards when the University of Arizona put out a statement upgrading her condition.

"Oh, that's great news," said Jean Emrick, a 50-year resident of Tucson, as a violinist played in the background.

Her eyes watering, Emrick said: "Tucson is such a special place and she represents what's the best of southern Arizona."

As night fell, candles at the makeshift memorial began to flicker. A mariachi band played the "The Star-Spangled Banner."

Doctors decided to upgrade her condition because the tracheotomy done a day earlier was uneventful, hospital spokeswoman Katie Riley said. A feeding tube was also put in Saturday, and doctors speculated that they might soon know if she could speak.

Few people survive a bullet to the brain — just 10 percent — and some who do end up in a vegetative state. It is even more rare for people with gunshot wounds to the head to regain all of their abilities, and doctors have cautioned that the full extent of Giffords' recovery remains uncertain.

Giffords and 18 others were shot when a gunman opened fire at a meet-and-greet she was hosting outside a supermarket in her own hometown. Six people died, including Giffords' popular community outreach director, Gabe Zimmerman.

At funeral services for Zimmerman Sunday, Kelly told the some 700 people gathered that his wife was inspired by Zimmerman's idealism and warmth, according to the Arizona Republic.

"Gabby and I spoke often about Gabe. She loved him like a younger brother," Kelly said. "I know someday she'll get to tell you herself how she felt about Gabe."

Meanwhile, a week after the Tucson supermarket massacre, more details emerged about one of shooting victims who police said became distraught and was arrested during a televised town hall meeting.

James Eric Fuller, a self-described liberal and military veteran, started ranting at the end of the program Saturday. He took a picture of a local tea party leader and yelled "you're dead" before calling others in the church a bunch of "whores," authorities said.

Deputies called a doctor and decided he should be taken to a hospital for a mental evaluation, said Pima County sheriff's spokesman Jason Ogan said.

In media interviews and on the Internet, Fuller, a former limousine driver and Census worker, has said he worked hard to get Giffords re-elected in her conservative-leaning district. He was going over questions he had prepared for the congresswoman, when the shooting began, he said in an interview with the television show "Democracy Now."

He was shot in the knee and back and drove himself to the hospital, where he spent two days.

"I didn't know how to calm myself down," he said on the TV show, "so I wrote down the Declaration of Independence, which I memorized some time ago. And that did help to organize my thoughts."

He also lashed out at conservative Republicans for "Second Amendment activism," arguing it set the stage for the shooting.

Fuller returned to the Safeway supermarket Friday, telling KPHO-TV he had always considered trauma a figment of imagination until the events of Jan. 8.

"Today I'm back on my feet, more or less, and I'm in a combative mood," Fuller said as he limped across the store parking lot. "It's helping me. I've never had any trauma like this in my life."

Later, he showed up at the home of accused gunman Jared Loughner, who lived within a half-mile of Fuller.

"He said he was going to forgive him for shooting him," Richard Elder, 86, a retired medical mechanic who lives next door to Fuller, told The Associated Press Sunday. "If anyone shot me, I don't think I'd say, 'Hey feller, that's alright.'"

Fuller posted about eight campaign signs in front of his house during the last election, including one for Giffords. And although Fuller was friendly, he acted odd sometimes, Elder said. Once, Fuller asked him if he was going to vote.

"I told him there are two things I don't talk about: politics or religion. I told him that, and he walked off without another word."

He said Fuller had shown him his bullet wounds and seemed to be dealing with the shooting well.

The man Fuller is accused of threatening, Tucson Tea Party co-founder Trent Humphries, said he was worried about the threat, and the dozens of other angry e-mails he has received.

"I had nothing to do with the murders that happened or the shooting of Gabrielle Giffords," said Humphries, who was on his way Sunday to attend services for his friend Dorwan Stoddard, 76. "And I wonder, if he (Fuller) is crazy or is he the canary in a coal mine? Is he saying what a lot of other people are holding in their hearts? If so, that's a problem."

At the Safeway, the flowers, teddy bears, candles and cards were growing.

Eduardo Ibarola sat quietly off to the side with a colorful beaded rosary in his hand. He had been praying all week but drove from Phoenix with his 5-year-old grandson to set his heart right.

"We came just so I could say my rosary. All I want is for those upstairs to hear my prayers," Ibarola said, adding that he had been thinking all week about the youngest victim, 9-year-old Christina Taylor Green.

and her friends hadn't noticed anything strange about Mezza's behavior in recent weeks.

"I saw him the day it happened and he seemed fine," she said.

School officials also said there had been no warning signs.

"We haven't seen anything at all that would have given us any clues," Cuneo said, adding that "there will be some time for reflection" later on.

The school district said counselors will be available to talk with students and faculty about the suicide when school resumes on Tuesday. The district is also planning a Wednesday evening meeting with Samohi's PTSA for parents to discuss the incident. Cuneo said the district would also post information about coping with the suicide on its website.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Do what you want tonight, Virgo

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Talk possibilities. Note an unusual quality about someone as you "try" to communicate. Opportunities will come out of a difficult situation. The unexpected occurs with a boss or authority figure. Tonight: Hang close to home.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Free your mind. Get an explanation for a money matter. Floating through your day is an element of change, odd news and a need to tell it as it is. Start planning for a break or a long weekend. Tonight: Catch up with friends.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ You are full of energy and ready to pitch in, whether it is helping a boss or parent or doing a physical task. Your leadership skills emerge. Your instincts pay off with a partner, a loved one or a friend. You actually turn a difficult situation into one that flows. Tonight: Treat yourself.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ You could feel out of sorts in the morning. It would take nothing to annoy you or to force a change of plans. If you can delay networking, meetings and other such dealings until the afternoon, you will be on cruise control. Tonight: Whatever knocks your socks off.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ Use the morning to take care of an important matter. By the afternoon, a partner could be more willing to express his or her feelings, but you might not be in the mood. Close your door and/or decide to pursue a solo pastime. Tonight: Screen calls; do your thing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Take the lead on a project. Your penchant for details guarantees an often-missing precision. An unexpected statement or action by a close associate, personal friend or loved one triggers thought and conversation. Tonight: Do what you want.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ Do needed research in the morning; act later with certainty. Accept and learn a new technique or application that would make your work easier. If tense, a walk during a break, although short, could help eliminate a lot of your stress. Tonight: Working late.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Deal directly with others. You do know what you want, but you need to do some tricky negotiating in order to realize this desire. Detachment and giving another person space might work in the same manner. Tonight: Do what is most relaxing for your mind.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Others seek you out. You might need to screen calls in order to get anything done. A meeting determines who your supporters are. Use the afternoon for some important conversation, with only the person involved. That adds to your rapport. Tonight: Go for dinner for two.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Plunge into a project and/or hurry through errands in the morning. By afternoon, a carousel of people could be knocking on your door. You will feel a bit overwhelmed, yet at the same quite flattered. A talk suddenly could veer in a new direction. Tonight: Say "yes" to living.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Your creativity swells up in the morning, allowing greater flexibility. This same creativity could translate to risk-taking if applied to finances. Know when and where to plug this energy. By afternoon, you are more focused than you have been for a while. Tonight: Put up your feet and relax.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ It could be tense and somewhat difficult to get going in the morning. It is amazing how easily you get sidetracked. By afternoon, you will need all the creativity you can muster to make up for lost time. The good news is that you have it at your fingertips. Tonight: Apply more creativity to your plans.

Happy birthday

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year, you swing with ease between work mode and social mode. If not working, your moods flow from very serious to downright silly. Associates or friends pop in and out of your life. Expect the unpredictable in daily matters and in your home life; you will not be disappointed. If single, you meet people with ease. You do not need to do anything special, other than be available. If attached, the two of you really get into a groove, and enjoy it.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

ARITHMO™

CrossMath + × − ÷

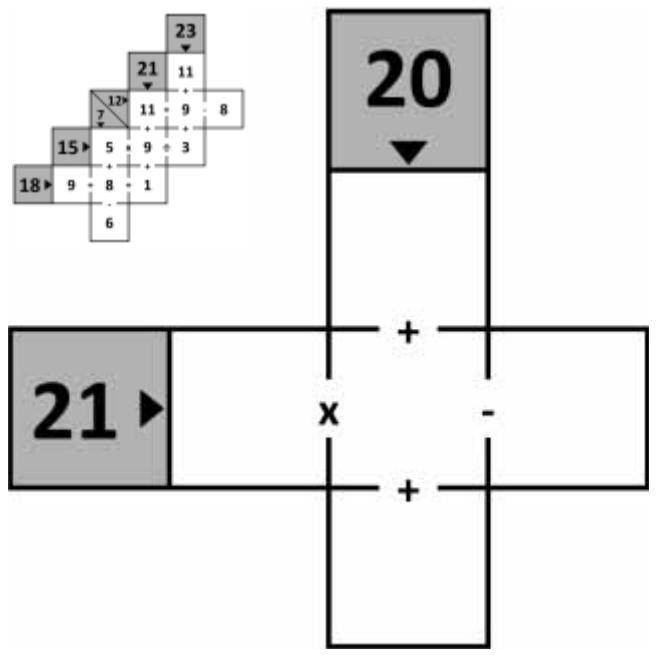

- Fill the grid with the set of given numbers (1 to 12) to satisfy the Equa demands (7 to 24) in the shaded boxes. The Equa demands represent the sum of the digits that you will insert into the empty squares.
- Each horizontal row has one Equa demand to satisfy; each vertical column also has one demand to satisfy. Each empty square in the grid dictates the math operation (addition +, subtraction -, multiplication X, and division ÷) that must be performed to meet the demands.
- You must follow the given math operations for each square and you must make sure all the numbers satisfy the demands in the shaded boxes when connected in adjacent threes and calculated together from left to right, and top to bottom.
- The numbers you insert into the grid must satisfy the Equa demands both horizontally and vertically.

For more games, go to www.arithmo.com

Fill in the empty fields with the given numbers so when calculated together they satisfy all Equas in the gray boxes:

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ A now-10-year-old church in Denver ministers to (as contemplated by 1 Corinthians 4:11-13) the homeless, the reviled, and the persecuted and formally named itself after the actual words in verse 13, the "Scum of the Earth" Church. The congregation touts nonjudgmental Christianity; owns an elegant, aging building (but holds services elsewhere because of fire code violations); and is a rough mix of anarchists, punk rockers, environmentalists and disaffected teens perhaps mainly keen on angering their parents. "Scum" (as church members matter-of-factly call themselves) tilt mildly philosophically conservative (though not nearly evangelical), connected only by the common belief that "God is love," according to a December report in Denver's Westword.

■ Among the recent works funded by Arts Council England was a "painting" consisting of a blank canvas, for which artist Agnieszka Kurant was paid the equivalent of about $2,300 and on which she intends to paint something in the future. Rounding out her exhibition were a "sculpture" that was not really present and a "movie" that had been shot with no film in the camera.
