Sunset Park power lines going below street level

BY NICK TABOREK
Daily Press Staff Writer

SUNSET PARK A long-awaited project that will result in fewer above ground power lines in a four-block area surrounding Pico Boulevard and 18th Street is underway, City Hall officials have announced.

The $8 million project is expected to take six months to complete and involves placing communications and electricity distribution lines underground.

Some transmission lines in the area will remain above ground for now, but are expected to get the below ground treatment in 2013 during phase two of the project.

The City Council prioritized the project in 2004, when it named the area an "underground utility district," said Mark Cuneo, City Hall's principal civil engineer.

Perhaps no one is more pleased with the news than Sunset Park resident Tom Stringer, who helped organize his neighbors to press City Hall for the project in 1999.

He periodically puts out a newsletter with updates on his advocacy that he calls "The Buzz," in reference to the sound the high concentration of power lines in the neighborhood creates.

"Hallelujah! Phase 1 of the construction work begins," he began this month's edition of the newsletter. "Progress has been slow, with many political, bureaucratic and practical bumps in the road."

The project is paid for under a Southern California Edison set-aside program that Cuneo said accrues $600,000 per year. No money for the project comes out of City Hall's general fund.

Work will be taking place on Pico Boulevard and Ashland Avenue along 18th Court, 20th Street, 18th Street and Ashland Place North.

SMC launches recycling training program

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

SMC Santa Monica College, in collaboration with the California Works Alliance, will officially launch its new recycling and resource management job-training program on Wednesday.

Dubbed "Jobs Through Recycling," the program — which provides job training in the high-growth, high-demand field of resource management — began earlier this month with its first group of 100 students. By June, those students will be awarded industry certificates in recycling and resource management from the California Resource Recovery Association, a partner in the California Works Alliance.

On Wednesday, U.S. Assistant Secretary of Labor Jane Oates will be the featured speaker for the kickoff.

"Jobs Through Recycling" is funded by a $4.87 million Community-Based Job Training Grant awarded last year by the U.S. Department of Labor.

"This is an incredibly exciting opportunity for SMC to work with some of the nation's most experienced and passionate leaders in the field of zero waste in creating a highly skilled and prepared workforce in resource management," said Genevieve Bertone, SMC's sustainability coordination project manager.

Bertone said the program will train and certify 660 students in the field of recycling and resource management and will place more than 400 highly skilled professionals in green jobs with upward mobility.

She noted that the recycling industry is as large as the automobile industry in America, and that 25 percent of all green jobs in California are in recycling. In addition, she said, research has shown that for every 10,000 tons of solid waste going to

SM PIER

Concert poster contest begins

The Santa Monica Pier Restoration Corp. announced Thursday its latest edition of the annual Twilight Dance Series poster contest.

The winning design will become the official poster for the 27th annual Twilight Dance Series, the pier's free summer concerts.

The poster will serve as the primary advertising piece for the annual event that attracts over 100,000 concert-goers each summer.

All entries are due on Friday, March 11 by 5 p.m. At that time, finalists will be selected and online voting will take place through April. Entries will be displayed in the pier's Carousel Building from March 21 through April 17.

The winner will receive a $750 prize and a VIP package for the concert series.

For details on how to submit, visit www.santamonicapier.org.

Staffer in L.A. mayor's office gets arrested

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES A staffer in Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa's gang-reduction office and her husband have been arrested on suspicion of attacking police officers during a scuffle at a Los Angeles nightclub.

Los Angeles police Lt. Jim Gavin says Blanca Martinez-Navarro, the Rampart program manager for the major's gang reduction and youth development office, was booked early Sunday for battery on a peace officer. Similar charges were filed against her husband, Oscar Navarro.

Gavin says police received a call about a domestic disturbance at the downtown club the Conga Room. When officers arrived, Gavin says, they were attacked by the husband.

While they were taking him into custody Martinez-Navarro allegedly jumped on the back of one of the officers and began hitting him.

Both are held in lieu of $20,000 bail.

Incandescent bulbs going dark this year

NOAKI SCHWARTZ
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES The brightest bulb in most homes for more than a century is fading toward darkness this year as California turns out the light on the century-old incandescent.

Beginning Jan. 1, the state began phasing out certain energy-sucking bulbs, federal standards the rest of the country will enact next year.

Manufacturers will no longer make the traditional 100-watt bulb and stores will eventually sell out of current supplies. Consumers will have to choose from more efficient bulbs that use no more than 72 watts, including halogen incandescents, compact fluorescents and light-emitting diode, or LED, bulbs.

"These standards will help cut our nation's electric bill by over $10 billion a year and will save the equivalent electricity as 30 large power plants," said Noah Horowitz a senior scientist with the Natural Resources Defense Council. "That translates into a whole lot less global warming pollution being emitted."

The change is part of the federal Energy Independence and Security Act that President George Bush signed in 2007, to reduce energy use and greenhouse gas emissions. California was allowed to adopt the national standard one year earlier.

The act requires new bulbs to use 25 to 30 percent less energy beginning in 2012 nationally — starting with the 100-watt bulb. By 2014, other incandescent bulbs, including the 75-, 60- and 40-watt, will also be phased out across the country.

Some specialty bulbs, however, will continue to be available. Consumers will still be able to get smaller lights such as yellow bug lights and aquarium bulbs.

Light bulb manufacturers said they haven't gotten any reports of customers hoarding 100-watt bulbs yet, though that may change once supplies begin to dry up and word gets out.

Nick Reynoza, manager at Royal Lighting in Los Angeles, said it's a shame the transition comes at a time when alternatives are so much more expensive.

Let the walkers walk

Editor:

Why do people think the bike path can be controlled for bikes only? I assume many if not most "walkers" come from outside Santa Monica and therefore have no clue. They come for the day and all they know is that other people are walking on the path so it must be OK for them as well. I have been riding the bike path from the pier to the end and back every other day for over 10 years and I just put up with it. People use the path because it's there.

Instead of publicly complaining about "walkers," let's hear some real solutions. What should Santa Monica do? Have a squadron of police give walking tickets and make arrests of repeat offenders? Should the police setup "walker blocks" at the Venice and Pacific Palisades city lines? It's one thing to complain but it seems quite unrealistic to pretend that there is a solution to force the outside public off these paths.

Moving toward sustainability

JUST BEFORE CHRISTMAS LAST MONTH, something remarkable happened in Santa Monica. For the first time in decades, our city produced enough water from local sources to meet its total demand. It happened for just a few days during last month's rains — call it a Christmas miracle maybe — but it's significant and what it says about our future is worth further examination.

On Dec. 20, 21, and 22 rain deluged our region. The storm that week contributed to the wettest December on record in 119 years. During that time, many residents and businesses in Santa Monica turned off their outdoor irrigation, and our overall water consumption dropped.

Those events happened to take place at the same time City Hall undertook a 14-day test of its new Arcadia water treatment facility. That facility, funded by a legal settlement against oil companies that polluted our local groundwater, is scheduled to come online permanently next month. When it does, the city will return to its historic groundwater production level of roughly 70 percent of annual demand.

Ribbon-cutting on the Arcadia plant will be a milestone on our city's pathway to sustainability, and last month's brief period of self-sufficiency serves to show how close we are to achieving a truly impressive goal.

For almost two decades, Santa Monica has purchased the vast majority of its water supply from the Metropolitan Water District because of the local groundwater pollution. Most of that water comes from two sources: the Colorado River in the east and the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta in the north. Severe, prolonged drought on the Colorado and a shorter, but significant drought in the Delta, combined with over-pumping, have caused a near collapse of those ecosystems.

In the case of the Delta, as recently as 1986, more than 750,000 Chinook salmon swam to sea past the Tracy pumping plant, which pumps water from the Delta to Central Valley farms and Southern California homes. Last year, fewer than 5,000 salmon made that journey. Over two of the last three years, the fisheries collapse on our river systems led to the closure of salmon fishing statewide, costing the state's economy thousands of jobs and over $500 million.

Still, two-thirds of Californians get some or all drinking water from the Delta. The health of the Delta is critical to us all. On the Colorado, nearly a decade of drought is painfully clear in the rings on the side of Lake Mead. Multiple extensions have been added to the pipes that draw water from the lake and if water levels drop much further, Hoover Dam might cease to generate power.

Just because it rained last month, we cannot stop thinking about how we address our water supply. Drought is always around the next bend in California. In fact, this year's weather is dominated by a very strong "La Nina" condition, in which cooler ocean temperatures contribute to dryness in California and elsewhere. Eighteen of 22 recorded La Nina periods produced below-average rainfall. Maybe December will be the pattern for our whole winter, but chances are against that happening.

That is the case in Australia. The floods there have grabbed headlines and concern around the globe. Last week, Santa Monica Mayor Richard Bloom and I hosted a delegation of Australians who were visiting to learn about our city's approach to water supply and stormwater. Those delegates described a continent that is the canary in the coalmine of global warming. After 14 years of drought nationwide, floods now rage in the east. But notably, for Western Australia, a state five times the size of Texas, 2010 was its driest year on record. More than simply a story of drought, climate change is proving to be about increased variability and risk.

All this goes to say that we must reduce our reliance on imported water. In fact, as Southern Californians and Santa Monicans the only rational response to the variability and risk in our water supply is to reduce our reliance on imports. Fortunately, thanks to our City Attorney's Office holding polluters accountable and the success of our water resources manager in building our Arcadia treatment facility, we now have an opportunity to do just that.

The Santa Monica Environmental Task Force considered our water supply picture in September and passed a motion requesting the City Council to adopt a goal of complete self-sufficiency on local supply by 2020. We are tantalizingly close — next month we will be producing 72 percent of annual demand locally. State law already requires us to reduce supply to 80 percent of current demand.

If we go the extra yard and become self-sufficient, not only will we reduce our environmental footprint, we will save our water users millions of dollars. Imported water is 60 percent more expensive than local water. And consider that the vast majority of December's rainfall washed off our landscapes and into the ocean creating a tremendous lost resource.

At this Tuesday's City Council meeting, I'm requesting that we take action on a study session to examine the recommendation from the Environmental Task Force. Many of my colleagues on the council have expressed support for the concept. Now we need to find the tools to get us to the goal.

We can make our Christmas water miracle of 2010 last more than three days. It can be our gift for generations to come.

TERRY O'DAY is a Santa Monica City Council member and executive director of local nonprofit Environment Now, dedicated to preserving California's natural resources.

There's a pot of gold in your e-mail box

I MUST BE THE LUCKIEST MAN IN THE world. Every time I open my Gmail, someone wants to give me money. I'm talking millions of dollars, folks

My Gmail account receives dozens of e-mails each day. Some of it is directly related to my being a columnist for the Daily Press and some of it is just someone looking for a "sucker."

Because I'm in the media, I'm on a number of publicist lists. For example, I recently received a request from a PR firm asking me to "... interview an author whose recent book highlights how repressed sexual conflicts and gender confusion relate to mental illness, including schizophrenia." The publicist obviously doesn't know I write about city politics. Or, maybe he does.

The most fun is the spam. Just in the last few days I've been approved to win a lump sum of $2.2 million in the UK-Asia National Lottery and Pepsi, Coca-Cola and Nestle all want me to contact them about a "reward." I have one of the lucky e-mail addresses worth $1,950,000 from the American Online Lottery.

I've been approved for the "Star Prize" of 250,000 British pounds, a 900,000 pound reward in a Mercedez-Benz promotion, 600,000 pounds from the Euro Solar UK Awards and 450,000 pounds courtesy of Microsoft Corporation. I've been notified by a barrister (English attorney) about a $45,000 bank draft due me. It seems like when it comes to online scams, the Brits have overtaken the Nigerians.

There's only one problem with all these giveaways. The "awardees" all want confidential information such as full name, occupation, phone/fax numbers, address, sex, birth date, nationality, passport number, bank name and account or brokerage account numbers.

Respond and there are processing fees, entry fees and so forth. While you still "have been awarded millions of dollars," you will also owe payments to cover taxes, registration and handling fees in order to claim your prize. Then there's more fees on top of more fees. You can see where this is going.

Some of my favorite spam e-mails are from those wanting a business relationship.

One company offering computerized animation services was "red flagged" as a Chinese spammer. A digital photo editing service had a red stripe Google warning, "This message may not be from who it claims to be."

Some spam may or may not be from legitimate sources like this one from Ali Zongo who has "cotton /cotton seeds and sesames seeds for sale. Call (foreign phone number) for more details." But, would you take a chance?

Some sound almost reasonable like this invitation from an Australian company: "Learn to Earn $500 to $3,500 a Day From Home the EZ way! We have a proven system that is working like crazy. No BS. See Proof Here: (E-mail address)." Who knows what evil results when responding to this.

A gold finance company offered to make me "legitimate loans such as personal loans & business loans ETC with maximum guarantee. For more Inquiry contact us via e-mail..." However, a quick company search revealed lots of complaints and allegations of fraud and phishing to obtain banking and credit card information.

Try this opportunity: "My name is Dr. Mattie and I live in New York ... I was invited to watch a simple seven-step online presentation about ... My partner started using it June 14, 2010 and has already received over $150,000 in cash already ... Simply reply to this email and get started on this miracle journey to massive wealth right away." Yeah. Right.

I've received a number of these: "My name is Susan Foreman from Tripoli, Libya, I was married to Late Sir Foreman of blessed memory who was an oil explorer in Libya and Kuwait for twelve years before he died in the year 2000. I am presently hospitalized and abandoned by relatives.

"I have few days to live and I desire to ... find some one remotely afar who can receive the funds from where it has been deposited and disburse the money ($2 million) to cancer research institutes and other deserving charity organizations. 50 percent of it can go for your personal needs for working with me on this sole act of charity. The Holy Spirit led me to do it this way. Please be prayerful all through your life." Yep. Pray that I stay "remotely afar" from scammers.

Who knows what trickery this one is about. "Hello, my name is Vivian and i am looking for honest partner if you are interesting pls just mail me back so we can know each other well then i can also send you my picture. thanks and have a nice day."

There you have it. Curiosity satisfied? Lesson to my readers: Never open these kinds of junk or spam e-mails. And, never, ever respond to their offers. It's safe to say they are all scams and rip-offs.

BILL can be reached at mr.bilbau@gmail.com. No spam, please.

UP, UP, UP: According to the Center for Health and the Global Environment at Harvard Medical School, climate change over the coming decades is likely to increase rates of allergies, asthma, heart disease and cancer, among other illnesses.

No breathing room

Dear EarthTalk

Aren't environmental issues primarily about health? Detractors like to trivialize environmentalists as "tree huggers," but the bottom line is that pollution makes us sick, right? Wouldn't people care more if they had a better understanding of that?

Tim Douglas,
Stowe, VT

NO DOUBT MANY OF THE WAYS WE harm our environment come back to haunt us in the form of sickness and death. The realization that the pesticide-laced foods we eat, the smokestack-befouled air we breathe and the petrochemical-based products we use negatively affect our quality of life is a big part of the reason so many people have "gone green" in recent years.

Just following the news is enough to green anyone. Scientific American reported in 2009 that a joint U.S./Swedish study looking into the effects of household contaminants discovered that children who live in homes with vinyl floors — which can emit hazardous chemicals called phthalates — are twice as likely to develop signs of autism as kids in other homes. Other studies have shown that women exposed to high levels of polybrominated diphenyl ether (PBDE) flame retardants common in cushions, carpet padding and mattresses — 97 percent of us have detectable levels of these chemicals in our bloodstreams — are more likely to have trouble getting pregnant and suffer from other fertility issues as a result. Cheaply produced drywall made in China can emit so much sulfur gas that it not only corrodes electrical wiring but also causes breathing problems, bloody noses and headaches for building occupants. The list goes on and on....

But perhaps trumping all of these examples is the potential disastrous health effects of global warming. Carbon dioxide emissions may not be directly responsible for health problems at or near their point of release, but in aggregate they can cause lots of distress. According to the Center for Health and the Global Environment at Harvard Medical School, climate change over the coming decades is likely to increase rates of allergies, asthma, heart disease and cancer, among other illnesses. Also, it is quite likely that, as global temperature rises, diseases that were previously found only in warmer areas of the world may show up increasingly in other, previously cooler areas, where people have not yet developed natural defenses against them. And the loss of rain forest that accompanies increases in temperature means less access to undiscovered medicines and degradation of the environment's ability to sustain our species.

Given the link between environmental problems and human health, more of us are realizing that what may seem like exorbitant up-front costs for environmental clean-up may well pay us dividends in the end when we see our overall health care costs go down and our loved ones living longer, healthier lives.

To help bridge the understanding gap between environmental problems and human health, the nonprofit Environmental Health Sciences offers the free website, Environmental Health News, which features daily reports on research showing how man-made environmental problems correspond to a wide range of individual and public health problems. Even your local TV station or newspaper likely carries an occasional story about the health effects of environmental pollution. We don't have to look very hard to find examples of environmental neglect leading to human suffering. But with newfound public awareness and the commitment of younger generations to a cleaner future, we are moving in a good direction.

Giffords shooting case could take years

JACQUES BILLEAUD
Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. Investigators have been poring over surveillance video, interviewing witnesses and analyzing items seized from Jared Loughner's home as they build a case in the assassination attempt against Rep. Gabrielle Giffords.

It's a case that likely will take years to play out as it goes through the many phases of the criminal justice system: prosecutions by both federal and state authorities, proceedings over whether to move the case to a different venue, a possible insanity defense by Loughner and prosecutors' likely push for the death penalty.

The next step is an arraignment scheduled Monday afternoon in Phoenix for Loughner, who is accused of opening fire on a Giffords political event two weeks ago in a rampage that wounded 13 people and killed six others, including a federal judge and a 9-year-old girl born on Sept. 11, 2001.

Investigators have said Loughner was mentally disturbed and acting increasingly erratic in the weeks leading up to the shooting. If he pleads not guilty by reason of insanity and is successful, he could avoid the death penalty and be sent to a mental health facility instead of prison.

Paul Charlton, who worked as Arizona's U.S. attorney from 2001 to 2007 and isn't involved in the Loughner case, believes Loughner will likely mount an insanity defense. "Given what we know, that's going to be a defense," Charlton said.

"I don't see a lot of other viable defenses," said Michael Piccarreta, a Tucson lawyer who has practiced criminal defense in federal court for 30 years. "It appears the actual guilt or innocent of the shooting will not be difficult to prove, and his pre-shooting behavior seems to be a history of erratic behavior — issues of pre-existing mental illness."

Before the case even gets to trial, the court would have to decide whether Loughner is mentally competent to stand trial. If he isn't, he would be sent to a federal facility for a minimum of four months to see if they can restore his competency. It could be up to a two-month wait just to get him into one of those facilities.

"It could take a year, it could take a year and a half. It could take longer," Heather Williams, the first assistant federal public defender in Arizona, said of the time it will take to bring the case to trial. Her office didn't take the Loughner case because it had conflicts of interest.

One area that will help the pace of the case is the fact that it's a relatively simple investigation. While other high-profile cases have required a lengthy investigation to chase down leads and co-conspirators, authorities have said Loughner acted alone. Dozens of people witnessed the shooting and surveillance cameras captured it on tape.

Investigators say they have also seized writings from Loughner in which he used words like "I planned ahead," "My assassination" and "Giffords."

Loughner will face two cases — federal and state. The federal charges will cover the killing and attempted killings of U.S. government employees such as the judge and Giffords, while the state case will deal with the other victims, including the 9-year-old girl. Federal prosecutors are going first, as charges have yet to be filed in the state case.

Pima County Attorney Barbara LaWall has the discretion to decide whether to seek the death penalty against Loughner in the state case, while the federal decision on whether to seek the death penalty rests with Arizona U.S. Attorney Dennis Burke and Attorney General Eric Holder, Charlton said. Prosecutors haven't signaled whether they would pursue the death penalty, but experts say all signs point toward that.

Federal law gives prosecutors a reasonable amount of time before trial to inform a defendant that they are seeking the death penalty, but there is no hard deadline for doing so.

Whether the case plays out in Arizona is up in the air. First, the case was moved to Phoenix from Tucson after all federal judges there recused themselves because their colleague was slain. Next, defense lawyers could ask that the case be moved out of Arizona by arguing that extensive negative publicity would make it impossible for Loughner to get a fair trial.

There was so much speculation that San Diego would ultimately be the home for the trial that federal authorities were prompted to issue a statement last week denying the reports and saying it's way too early in the case to discuss. The judge presiding over the case works out of San Diego, and Loughner's court-appointed lawyer, Judy Clarke, is based there as well.

Clarke has not responded to requests seeking comment. She is one of the top lawyers in the country for defendants facing prominent death penalty cases, having represented clients such as "Unabomber" Ted Kaczynski and Olympic bomber Eric Rudolph. She has a reputation for working out plea deals that spare defendants the death penalty, as was the case for Rudolph and Kaczynski.

Piccarreta expects the trial to eventually be moved out of Arizona, because of people's connections to U.S. District Judge John Roll and Giffords.

"My personal view is that Arizona is still too close. Why risk a potentially unfair trial when you can move the matter outside of the state," Piccarreta said.

He later said, "They have moved cases out of the state with far less (media) exposure than this," noting that a 1981 trial into the killing of Arizona Republic reporter Don Bolles was moved from Phoenix to San Diego.

Another dramatic scenario that could arise in a criminal case: Giffords testifying against Loughner. It's too early to know if that will happen, and Charlton said prosecutors have many other options for witnesses given that so many people were there when the shooting occurred.

"I suspect that there is sufficient evidence relating to who did what here. Not every witness would have to be called," Charlton said.

BULBS

"It's not really an option — you have this or you don't get anything," he said. "The options are more expensive. Four incandescents are $1.00, the halogens are $5.99 and the LED are like $20."

While conservation groups back the change and the lighting industry has invested heavily in new technology, not everyone supports the law. Rep. Joe Barton, R-Texas, who could not immediately be reached for comment, reintroduced legislation this year to repeal the law.

"People don't want Congress dictating what light fixtures they can use," said Rep. Barton on his website. "Traditional incandescent bulbs are cheap and reliable."

Adam Gottlieb, spokesman for the California Energy Commission, acknowledged that the change has resulted in a "great deal of hue and cry" on some blogs as well. Recent postings have included the titles "More dim bulbs: California banning 100-watt incandescent light bulbs" and "More evidence that California is nuts."

Gottlieb, however, said it was not a ban and that consumers can still buy whatever bulbs they want as long as they meet the new standards.

"After 130 years Tom Edison's old-fashioned light bulb is getting a 20th century makeover," he said. "The simple truth is consumers will save money."

The newer bulbs are more expensive than incandescents, but supporters of the technology say they last so much longer that there is a financial savings in the end. For example, while incandescents provide as much as 2,000 hours of light, compact fluorescents can provide light for six times longer.

Incandescents, which create light by passing an electric current through a tungsten wire filament, also waste 90 percent of the electricity they use as heat instead of light. Fluorescents, by comparison, apply an electrical current to different types of phosphers to produce light and produce less heat.

But fans of the traditional bulb say they provide a softer, more natural light and turn on more quickly. Michael Petras, president of GE Lighting, said the industry is aware of the shortcomings and is working to refine the technology.

Alley Renewal Program

The alley at the 1500 block of 17th Court will be resurfaced starting on Monday, Jan. 10, 2011. City crews will work with visitors who need to gain access. Please observe all construction signs. The Streets Division is committed to making every effort to complete the resurfacing project on schedule. In the event the job should take longer (due to weather or emergency demands), then we will notify residents/businesses of schedule changes. The estimated completion date is Tuesday, Jan. 25, 2011. For more info on our Alley Renewal Program, please visit: www.smgov.net/streets/alleyprogram

Borderline Neighborhood Improvement Project

New water main installation, new various street pavement finishes, new landscaped areas, trees, pedestrian lighting, and a neighborhood kiosk. Work will be taking place on Longfellow Street at the intersections of Marine, Navy and Ozone streets. Please observe posted detour signs. Project is anticipated to be complete June, 2011.

Street & Park Lighting Project

The work consists of modifying existing high voltage series streetlight circuits to low voltage multiple circuits. Work will take place citywide through September of 2011. Work will be taking place on Pier Avenue between 17th and 18th streets. No roadway closures are expected and impact to traffic should be minimal.

Parking Structure No. 2 Seismic Retrofit

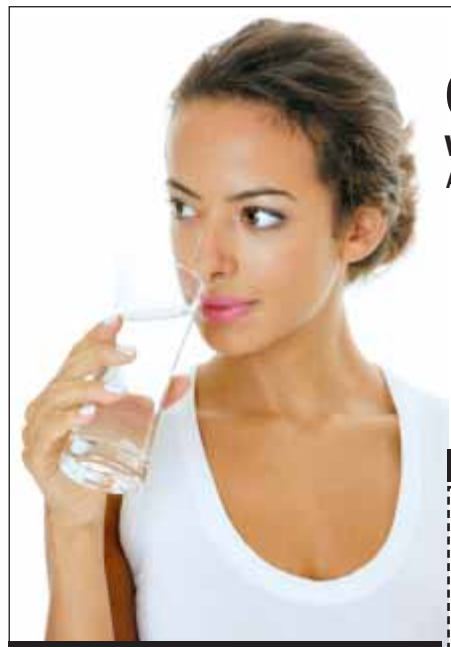

The work on Parking Structure No. 2 resumed on Jan 3. Please observe all posted directional and no parking signs throughout the construction project. The project is anticipated to be complete in February of 2011.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

★★★★★ A partner's difficult yet enlightening attitude forces you to revisit an issue. Ask questions. Be willing to pull in an expert or two. Be willing to open up. Your innate playfulness emerges, despite a hassle or two. Tonight: Ignoring the fact that it is Monday night.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Handle a personal matter hands-on. You could be overly tired and worn by others. Someone even could toss money into the mix in an attempt at manipulation. The only way to win this is to not play the game. Tonight: Nothing complicated.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Pressure builds around your daily life. Someone might be attempting to coerce you into doing what he or she wants. Your charm and ability to demonstrate the benefit of a particular path will turn the tide in your favor, despite this person. Tonight: Visit with a friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Your instincts often serve you well with finances. A wild risk still could become a big problem. Regroup and rethink recent decisions. A child could be difficult. Don't allow someone to coerce you by throwing around his or her weight. Tonight: Balance your checkbook.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Once more, someone reveals his or her inner agenda. You sometimes get tired of having the same conversation. As a result, coldness emanates from you. Stay in touch with your desires. Be willing to state your feelings. Tonight: In your element.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ If you don't feel up to snuff, take today off. If you are a bit blue, surround yourself with friends. Don't push too hard. You will perk up in a day or so, after giving yourself the space to recharge. Tonight: Screen calls.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Zero in on your priorities. If you do, someone's heavy-duty manipulations will remain ineffective. Meetings point you in a new direction. Don't hesitate to act rather than talk. Avoid thinking about an argument. You need to focus. Tonight: Where people are; not alone.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ You are at a point where you would like to shed some of your responsibility. Your priorities are rapidly changing and, as a result, what you want to do with your time will change. Allow this transformation to emerge. Tonight: Burning the candle at both ends.

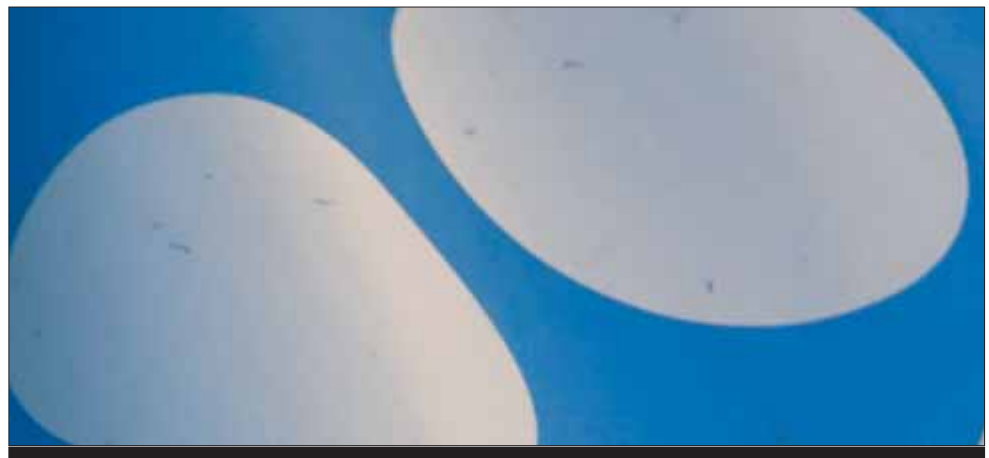

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Reach out for more information and different opinions. Many people would fear this type of diversity, as it would take away or nullify their plan. You welcome knowledge. This increasing information can only make a project or your life better. Tonight: Find an outlet for your high energy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Work with key people individually, allowing a greater give-and-take of ideas. Resist bigger meetings at the moment. Take some time to sift through different suggestions. How sound are they? Curb a tendency to sit on anger, as you are likely to express it in an inappropriate manner. Tonight: Catch up on a roommate's or loved one's day.

Happy birthday

This year, an in-law or a distant associate plays a key role. Your vision becomes broader because of this person. Some of you will be exploring new interests. Thoughts of travel, getting a degree or taking a workshop keep reappearing. If single, you could have unusually high energy. You could become frustrated if a suitor doesn't have the same bounce. People will pop into your life out of the blue. If you are attached, the two of you share a new hobby or interest.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

ARITHMO™

CrossMath + × − ÷

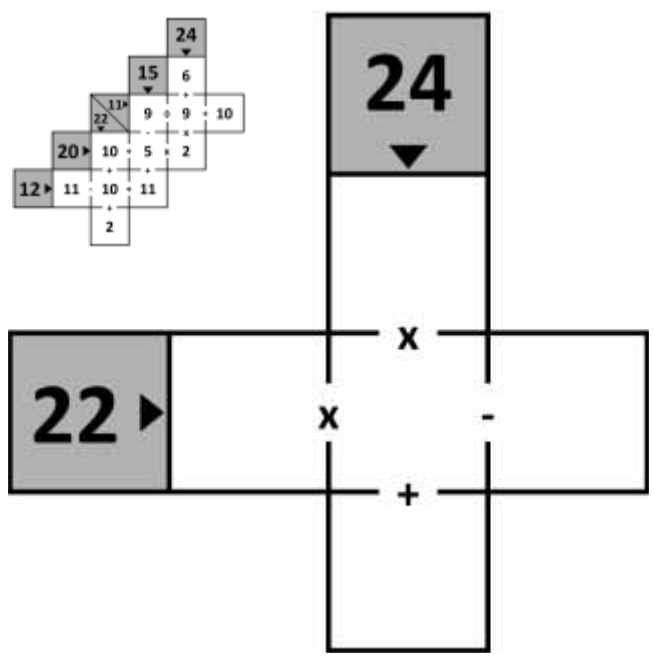

- Fill the grid with the set of given numbers (1 to 12) to satisfy the Equa demands (7 to 24) in the shaded boxes. The Equa demands represent the sum of the digits that you will insert into the empty squares.
- Each horizontal row has one Equa demand to satisfy; each vertical column also has one demand to satisfy. Each empty square in the grid dictates the math operation (addition +, subtraction -, multiplication X, and division ÷) that must be performed to meet the demands.
- You must follow the given math operations for each square and you must make sure all the numbers satisfy the demands in the shaded boxes when connected in adjacent threes and calculated together from left to right, and top to bottom.
- The numbers you insert into the grid must satisfy the Equa demands both horizontally and vertically.

For more games, go to www.arithmo.com

Fill in the empty fields with the given numbers so when calculated together they satisfy all Equas in the gray boxes:

Solution for Task 1627

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Two hundred boredom "activists" gathered in London in December at James Ward's annual banal-apalooza conference, "Boring 2010," to listen to ennui-stricken speakers glorify all things dreary, including a demonstration of milk-tasting (in wine glasses, describing flavor and smoothness), charts breaking down the characteristics of a man's sneezes for three years, and a PowerPoint presentation on the color distribution and materials of a man's necktie collection from one year to the next. Another speaker's "My Relationship With Bus Routes" seemed well-received, also. Observed one attendee, to a Wall Street Journal reporter: "We're all overstimulated. I think it's important to stop all that for a while and see what several hours of being bored really feels like."

■ (1) The Key Underwood Memorial Graveyard near Cherokee, Ala., is reserved as hallowed ground for burial of genuine coon dogs, which must be judged authentic before their carcasses can be accepted, according to a December report in The Birmingham News. The Tennessee Valley Coon Hunters Association must attest to the dog's having had the ability "to tree a raccoon." (In March, a funeral for one coon dog at Key Underwood drew 200 mourners.) (2) Safety Harbor, Fla., trailer-park neighbors Joe Capes and Ronald Richards fought in December, with sheriff's deputies called and Capes arrested for assaulting Richards. The two were arguing over whether the late country singer Conway Twitty was gay.
