The holiday lull in City Council activity is officially over with a return to the traditionally packed agendas that have come to define Santa Monica's political reality.

Tuesday's City Council meeting includes a pair of significant lawsuits, debate over the future of the Santa Monica airport, expansions of outdoor dining, updates on sustainability efforts and a pair of requests to help encourage economic recovery.

LAWSUITS:

Council will hear updates on seven existing lawsuits during its closed season. Two are related to the ongoing settlement payments for the Uller case. The statue of limitations to file claims related to child abuse at the Police Activities League ended last year but the city is still calculating the final payments and attempting to recover some

Thömus bike store on Montana hosts world unveiling

SCOTT SNOWDEN
SMDP Staff Writer

Swiss high-end bike maker Thömus held an international unveiling event at its new store on Montana Ave on Thursday evening. A sizable crowd of invited guests from professional cycling, local businesses, media, the odd celebrity and even the Swiss Ambassador gathered at the 1314 Montana Ave store for cocktails, canapés and the unveiling of the Swissrider, a lightweight electric bike that weighs only 25 pounds, making it the lightest electric bike currently available.

Swiss precision engineering is already legendary with its history of extremely high-quality wristwatches. What makes this bicycle so special is that Maxon—the same Swiss company that makes the electric motors used by NASA for over 30 years, including the Mars Perseverance rover and

Tech industry job cuts come rapidly and in big numbers

Associated Press

In just the past month there have been nearly 50,000 job cuts across the technology sector. Large and small tech companies went on a hiring spree in over the past several years due to a demand for their products, software and services surged with millions of people working remotely. However, even with all of the layoffs announced in recent weeks, most tech companies are still vastly larger than they were three years ago.

Santa Monica has experienced some of these losses directly with several companies firing workers based here and indirectly with a reduction in services from some of the impacted businesses.

AUGUST 2022

Snap: The parent company of social media platform Snapchat said that it was letting go of 20% of its staff. Snap's staff has grown to more than 5,600 employees in recent years and the company said at the time that even after laying off more than 1,000 people, its staff would be larger than it was a year earlier. The company relocated from Venice to Santa Moncia in 2019 but more than 400 individuals were fired from the company's Santa Monica offices

Robinhood: The company, whose app helped bring a new generation of investors to the market, announced that it would reduce headcount by about 23%, or approximately 780 people. An earlier round of layoffs last year cut 9% of its workforce.

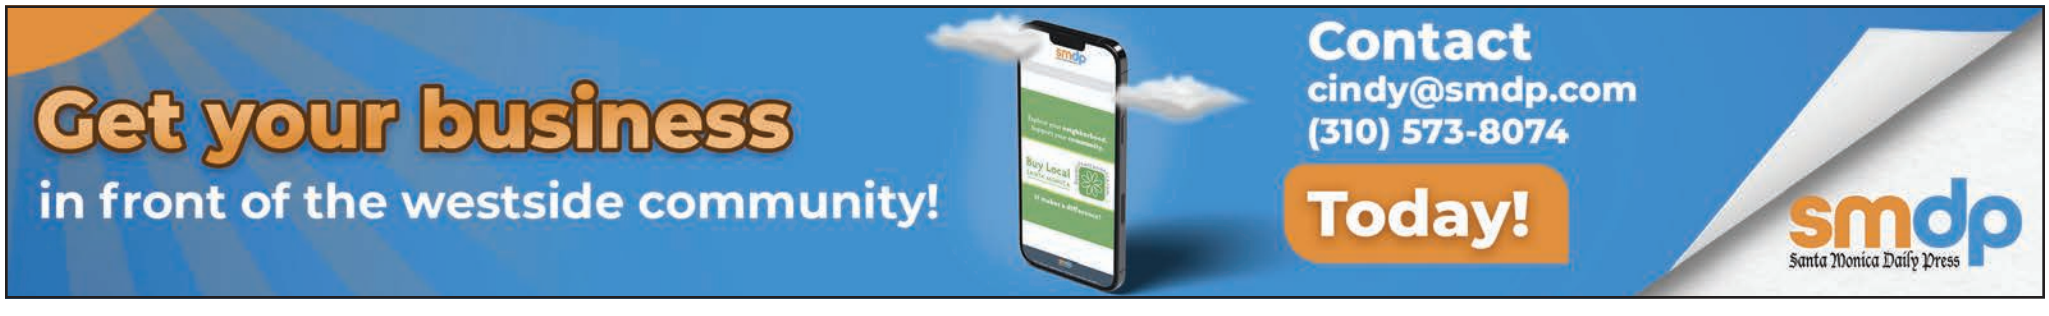

NOVEMBER 2022

Twitter: About half of the social media platform's staff of 7,500 was let go after it was acquired by the billionaire CEO of Tesla, Elon Musk. Santa Monica lost about 100 workers from its office at 150 Pico Blvd. Musk's Hyperloop company also fired 19 people when the company ceased operation.

Lyft: The ride-hailing service said it was cutting 13% of its workforce, almost 700 employees. While no jobs were specifically listed in Santa Monica, Lyft did withdraw its micromobility services (scooters and bikes) from the entire Los Angeles region, including Santa Monica.

Meta: The parent company of Facebook laid off 11,000 people, about 13% of its

Biden's next climate hurdle: Enticing Americans to buy green

CHRIS MEGERIAN, HANNAH FINGERHUT AND MATTHEW DALY
Associated Press

President Joe Biden persuaded Democrats in Congress to provide hundreds of billions of dollars to fight climate change. Now comes another formidable task: enticing Americans to buy millions of electric cars, heat pumps, solar panels and more efficient appliances.

It's a public relations challenge that could determine whether the country meets Biden's ambitious goal to cut greenhouse gas emissions in half by 2030.

> "Folks need to know how to take advantage of these benefits that we passed. That's on all of us around the table here to make sure we get that message out clearly
> -President Joe Biden

Relying on tax credits and rebates made the climate legislation — it was approved in August with only Democratic votes — more politically palatable than regulations that force wholesale changes in polluting industries.

But it also means the administration's battle against global warming will be waged "one household at a time," said Shannon Baker-Branstetter, who works on energy issues at the Center for American Progress, a liberal think tank closely aligned with the White House.

"It is very incremental," she said. "So it requires a very sophisticated communications strategy."

Biden acknowledged the hurdle during a recent Cabinet meeting as he talked about the incentives that are becoming available this year.

"Folks need to know how to take advantage of these benefits that we passed. That's on all of us around the table here to make sure we get that message out clearly," he said.

The White House says it is piecing together a plan to partner with state governments, contractors, retailers and social media influencers to get the word out. "Lowering utility bills is going to be a key driver," said Josh Peck, a senior policy adviser on clean energy issues.

It's also collaborating with Rewiring America, a nonprofit focused on ways to electrify homes and businesses, and companies like Airbnb, Redfin and Lyft. As part of the effort, Rewiring America created an online calculator that shows what credits or rebates homeowners might be eligible for, depending on their ZIP code and income.

Buying a heat pump or installing solar panels is "a major expense line and a major opportunity for savings," said Ari Matusiak, the group's founder and CEO. "So it's really important to make sure people are aware of the resources they have available and the benefits they can unlock in terms of bringing energy bill savings."

But the White House faces an uphill battle.

Polling shows that while Americans support action to slow climate change, they are broadly unaware of the Inflation Reduction Act, the massive legislation that includes financial incentives to lower emissions, and skeptical of their own role in the climate crisis.

An AP-NORC poll released in September, one month after the law was signed, found that 61% of U.S. adults said they knew little to nothing about the legislation. And despite the multibillion-dollar investment in climate solutions, only a third said it would help climate change; about half said it wouldn't make a difference.

The White House says it's not rattled by the results. The goal is to make sure consumers know the financial benefits of energy efficient products at the moment that they're making key decisions on which products to buy, Peck said.

"One of the challenges here is trying to meet consumers where they are when they make decisions about these purchases," he said.

Majorities of U.S. adults said they are unlikely to install solar panels or buy an electric vehicle in the next three years, according to the AP-NORC poll. Among those, at least half said financial incentives would not make a difference in their decision.

Homeowners typically are reluctant to swap out furnaces or water heaters until they absolutely have to shell out the money for them.

"One day the heat won't turn on and it's negative 10 (degrees) outside and you say, 'Oh crap, I've got to get a furnace,'" said DR Richardson, co-founder of Elephant Energy, a Colorado company that helps homeowners install electric heat pumps and other appliances. "So the biggest challenge from our perspective, and from a climate perspective, is to get people to think ahead of time about how to replace these assets."

Most homeowners don't understand what equipment qualifies for a rebate or a tax credit — and even contractors are not always aware, Richardson said. While some heat pumps qualify for a full rebate, others do not or are only eligible for partial rebates.

"So it's just a nightmare if you're not used to working in building spreadsheets to analyze and understand all this stuff," he said.

Not all of the incentives are ready either. While people can get a tax break on the cost of an electric car, solar panels or heat pump, rebates for low- and middle-income Americans seeking to make their homes more energy efficient are not yet available. The Energy Department is still developing the system to distribute that money.

Cecilia Muñoz, director of the White House Domestic Policy Council in the Obama administration, said she learned in her tenure that it's critical for government to invest in the delivery of policies.

"Too often we as advocates and policymakers applaud when policy gets enacted and then stop paying attention," she said. Instead, they need to design ways to target people directly to help them "understand the steps that they can take and the ways that the government is going to make it easy."

The Energy Department has begun releasing information to states about their allotment of $9 billion to support household energy upgrades, including weatherizing homes and installing heat pumps.

And Biden, a self-described "car guy," has been doing his part to promote electric vehicles, making appearances at the Detroit car show in September and on the TV series "Jay Leno's Garage."

Donnel Baird, founder and CEO of BlocPower, a Brooklyn, N.Y.-based company that partners with utilities, government agencies and building owners to improve energy efficiency, has worked with Lowe's and other retailers to promote green appliances.

The idea, Baird said, is that "the checkout person says, 'You know, you can get a tax credit if you don't get that gas lawn mower and get a green one instead.'" While such engagement may not have immediate results, Baird said he's confident the tax credits and other benefits of the climate law will become better known.

"It took years for the ACA to get going," he said, referring to the Affordable Care Act, also known as Obamacare. "I think the same thing could happen with this law."

Dan Pfeiffer, a former top communications adviser to President Barack Obama, sees another lesson in the Affordable Care Act.

"The ACA got more popular the more that Republicans tried to repeal it," he said, suggesting that Biden take advantage of any Republican efforts to roll back to the Inflation Reduction Act to draw more attention to the law's benefits.

"I have no doubt the White House has thought of all of this," Pfeifer said. But the problem is that none of it is easy."

He added: "The bulk of the work starts now."

US proposes once-a-year COVID shots for most Americans

MATTHEW PERRONE
AP Health Writer

U.S. health officials want to make COVID-19 vaccinations more like the annual flu shot.

The Food and Drug Administration on Monday proposed a simplified approach for future vaccination efforts, allowing most adults and children to get a once-a-year shot to protect against the mutating virus.

This means Americans would no longer have to keep track of how many shots they've received or how many months it's been since their last booster.

The proposal comes as boosters have become a hard sell. While more than 80% of the U.S. population has had at least one vaccine dose, only 16% of those eligible have received the latest boosters authorized in August.

The FDA will ask its panel of outside vaccine experts to weigh in at a meeting Thursday. The agency is expected to take their advice into consideration while deciding future vaccine requirements for manufacturers.

In documents posted online, FDA scientists say many Americans now have "sufficient preexisting immunity" against the coronavirus because of vaccination, infection or a combination of the two. That baseline of protection should be enough to move to an annual booster against the latest strains in circulation and make COVID-19 vaccinations more like the yearly flu shot, according to the agency.

For adults with weakened immune systems and very small children, a two-dose combination may be needed for protection. FDA scientists and vaccine companies would study vaccination, infection rates and other data to decide who should receive a single shot versus a two-dose series.

FDA will also ask its panel to vote on whether all vaccines should target the same strains. That step would be needed to make the shots interchangeable, doing away with the current complicated system of primary vaccinations and boosters.

The initial shots from Pfizer and Moderna — called the primary series — target the strain of the virus that first emerged in 2020 and quickly swept across the world. The updated boosters launched last fall were also tweaked to target omicron relatives that had been dominant.

Under FDA's proposal, the agency, independent experts and manufacturers would decide annually on which strains to target by the early summer, allowing several months to produce and launch updated shots before the fall. That's roughly the same approach long used to select the strains for the annual flu shot.

Ultimately, FDA officials say moving to an annual schedule would make it easier to promote future vaccination campaigns, which could ultimately boost vaccination rates nationwide.

The original two-dose COVID shots have offered strong protection against severe disease and death no matter the variant, but protection against mild infection wanes. Experts continue to debate whether the latest round of boosters significantly enhanced protection, particularly for younger, healthy Americans.

Transit ridership falters, posing a 'fiscal cliff'

DAN WALTERS
Special to the Daily Press

California utopians, including those holding public office, envision a state that by 2045 will have achieved zero net emissions of carbon dioxide and other greenhouse gases.

The largest source of those emissions is transportation – the cars, trucks, buses, airplanes and railroad engines that carry Californians, the goods they need to live and the inputs and outputs of the state's $3.4 trillion economy.

To that end, the California Air Resources Control Board has issued seemingly countless decrees, including one that would ban the sale of autos with gas- or diesel-powered engines by 2035.

Public transit is central to the state's hopes of reducing transportation emissions. Officials want more Californians to park their cars – or not buy them in the first place – and use buses and light and heavy rail systems for commutes and other personal trips.

Despite those hopes, transit ridership is going the other way, and transit system operators and advocates are using terms such as "fiscal cliff" and "death spiral" as farebox revenues decline and there is greater demand for taxpayer money to shore up their operations.

Transit usage cratered when the COVID-19 pandemic hit the state three years ago and millions of workers either lost their jobs or shifted to working at home. Ridership picked up a bit when pandemic closures eased and employment finally returned to pre-pandemic levels. However, the California Transit Association says that as of the third quarter of 2022, overall ridership was averaging just two-thirds of what it had been prior to the pandemic.

"Some agencies have returned to pre-pandemic ridership levels and above, while others continue to struggle with ridership counts that are one-third of previous totals," the organization says in a new "strategic plan" it unveiled in December.

The plan "comes at a moment when our industry faces serious existential threats – slow ridership recovery, a fiscal cliff, and a widening workforce gap," Karen King, who chairs the organization's executive committee, said.

The plan makes obtaining more financial support, particularly from the state, its highest priority, citing not only declines in ridership and operational revenue, but the state's mandate that it get rid of its hydrocarbon-fueled buses and replace them with battery-powered vehicles. The cost of zero-emission buses and the infrastructure to operate them is tabbed at more than $11.6 billion.

Three weeks after the plan was released, Gov. Gavin Newsom proposed a new budget for the 2023-24 fiscal year with spending reductions to close what he said was a $22.5 billion deficit, thanks to a projected decline in revenues.

Transit officials and their supporters didn't like the budget's treatment of transit, particularly a $2 billion reduction in transit infrastructure. The industry's top legislative advocate, Scott Wiener, a Democratic state senator from San Francisco, pledged to seek restoration of the funds and more money to cover transit's revenue declines.

Wiener said, "We must not let our public transportation systems go over the impending fiscal cliff and enter a death spiral – where budget shortfalls lead to service cuts that lead to ridership drops that lead to further budget shortfalls and service cuts. The state must serve as a financial back-stop against this fiscal cliff to ensure our transit systems survive."

The transit dilemma typifies the conflicts and tradeoffs that permeate the state's hopes for achieving carbon neutrality 22 years hence. As a recent CalMatters analysis of the state's ambitious but tortured plans to rid itself of hydrocarbon-fueled cars underscores, it's one thing to declare such a goal on paper, but it's quite another to make it reality when the precise steps needed are complicated, time-consuming and expensive.

Police seek why 72-year-old gunman shot up LA dance hall

AMY TAXIN, STEFANIE DAZIO, TERRY TANG AND BRIAN MELLEY
Associated Press

The search for the motive behind the shooting massacre that killed 11 people at a Los Angeles-area dance hall led police to a mobile home community as they probed the past of the 72-year-old suspect Monday and his relationship to the ballroom.

Sheriff's deputies from Los Angeles County searched the home in a gated senior community where Huu Can Tran lived in the town of Hemet, an hour's drive from the scene of the crime in Monterey Park, Hemet police spokesperson Alan Reyes told The Associated Press.

> "Something came over me. I realized I needed to get the weapon away from him, I needed to take this weapon, disarm him or else everybody would have died"
> – Brandon Tsay

Monterey Park Police Chief Scott Wiese said he wasn't aware of the search results or if Tran, who died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound, left behind any note indicating what drove him to shoot up the dance hall.

"We all want answers to questions that we may never have answers to," Wiese said. "That's kind of the enigma of this. I know that my individual officers would like to know why. I know the families want to know why. The why is a big part of this. The problem is, we may never know the why."

Tran had visited Hemet police twice this month to report he was the victim of fraud, theft and poisoning by family members a decade or two ago in the LA area, Reyes said. Tran said he would return to the station with documentation but never did.

He was found dead Sunday in the van that he used to flee after attempting to attack a second dance hall, authorities said. The mayor of Monterey Park said Tran may have frequented the first dance hall that he targeted, and his ex-wife told CNN she had met him there and he offered her free lessons.

The death toll rose to 11 Monday after health officials announced that one of the 10 people wounded had died, the LA County Department of Health Services said.

Officials did not disclose any information about the 11th fatality, but all except one of the others were 60 or older, according to information released Monday by the Los Angeles coroner's office providing the first identifications.

My Nhan, 65, Lilian Li, 63, and Xiujuan Yu, 57, were the three women named. Two other women were in their 60s, and one was in her 70s. Valentino Alvero, 68, was the only man identified. Three men in their 70s and one in his 60s were also killed.

Nhan's family said in a statement that she was a loving person whose kindness was contagious, and was a regular at the Star Ballroom Dance Studio.

"It's what she loved to do. But unfairly, Saturday was her last dance," the family said. "We are starting the Lunar New Year broken. We never imagined her life would end so suddenly."

Authorities have shared little about Tran, who once owned a trucking company, according to California business records.

Tran's Trucking Inc. was based in Monterey Park and licensed with the state from September 2002 through August 2004.

Los Angeles Superior Court records show he was married in 2001 and divorced five years later, citing irreconcilable difference. The couple did not have children, said they had no community property and neither side had to pay alimony.

In the uncontested case, Tran noted in a filing that he could not get away from work to attend any court hearings, though he did not disclose where he worked or what he did.

His ex-wife told CNN that they married soon after they met at the dance hall. While she is named in court papers, she asked not to be identified because of the sensitivity of the case.

She said he would become upset if she missed a step dancing, but was never violent toward her.

Tran eventually moved from the San Gabriel Valley, a melting pot for Asian immigrants, and settled in Hemet, a low-income community of many retirees 75 miles (120 kilometers) east of Los Angeles in Riverside County.

Tran lived in The Lakes at Hemet West, a gated community off a busy road with a view of snow-covered mountains. The development boasts of amenities including a 9-hole golf course, a shuffleboard court and a dance floor. Properties listed for sale ranged from $45,000 to $222,000.

Hemet police had no records of any incidents involving Tran in the community or calls for service at his home, Reyes said.

The shootings during Lunar New Year celebrations sent a wave of fear through Asian American communities and cast a shadow over festivities nationwide.

The massacre was the nation's fifth mass killing this month, and it struck one of California's largest celebrations of a holiday observed in many Asian cultures, dealing another blow to a community that has been the target of high-profile violence in recent years.

It was also the deadliest attack since May 24, when 21 people were killed in an elementary school in Uvalde, Texas.

"We do understand that he may have had a history of visiting this dance hall and perhaps the motivation has to do with some personal relationships. But that's something that I think investigators are still uncovering and investigating," said Monterey Park Mayor Henry Lo. Public records show Tran once had addresses in the city and neighboring ones.

The mayor and LA County Sheriff Robert Luna stressed that the motive for the attack remained unclear. No other suspect was wanted, according to the sheriff.

The suspect was carrying a semi-automatic pistol with an extended magazine, and a second handgun was discovered in the van where Tran died, Luna said.

Tran is the second-oldest mass killer in the U.S. over the last nearly 20 years according to a database compiled by The Associated Press, USA Today and Northeastern University. The only older mass killer was a 73-year-old who murdered five people in Yuma County Arizona in 2011 before killing himself. The database tracks every mass killing — defined as four dead not including the offender — committed in the U.S. since 2006.

Within three minutes of receiving the call, officers arrived at the Star Ballroom Dance Studio in Monterey Park, according to Monterey Park Police Chief Scott Wiese.

There, they found carnage inside and people trying to flee through all the doors.

"When they came into the parking lot, it was chaos," Wiese said.

About 20 minutes after the first attack, the gunman entered the Lai Lai Ballroom in the nearby city of Alhambra.

Brandon Tsay was in the lobby at the time, and he told ABC's "Good Morning America" that he thought he was going to die.

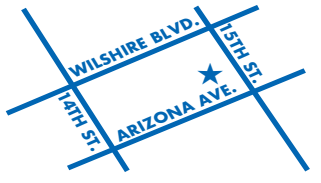

"Something came over me. I realized I needed to get the weapon away from him, I needed to take this weapon, disarm him or else everybody would have died," Tsay said. "When I got the courage, I lunged at him with both my hands, grabbed the weapon and we had a struggle."

Once Tsay seized the gun, he pointed it at the man and shouted: "Get the hell out of here, I'll shoot, get away, go!"

The assailant paused, but then headed back to his van, and Tsay called the police, the gun still in his hand.

While Luna told reporters on Sunday that two people wrested the weapon away from the attacker, Tsay, who works a few days a week at the dance hall his grandparents started, security footage shown on "Good Morning America" showed only the two men struggling for the gun.

Taxin reported from Hemet, Dazio reported from Alhambra and Melley reported from Los Angeles. Associated Press journalists Andrew Dalton, Jae C. Hong and Eugene Garcia in Los Angeles and Julie Watson in San Diego contributed to this report.

Trump's MAGA forces threaten to upend vote for RNC chair

STEVE PEOPLES
AP National Political Writer

By week's end, the Republican National Committee is set to resolve a bitter leadership feud that has exposed perilous divisions within a party that has struggled to move past a disappointing midterm ahead of a critical race for the White House.

Those inside the fight believe the days ahead of Friday's secret ballot at a luxury seaside resort could get even uglier as rebel forces within former President Donald Trump's "Make America Great Again" movement threaten to upend RNC Chair Ronna McDaniel's reelection bid.

The attacks have been led by McDaniel's chief rival, Harmeet Dhillon, a Trump attorney who has accused the incumbent of religious bigotry, chronic misspending and privately claiming she can control the former president — allegations McDaniel denies. Also in the race is My Pillow CEO Mike Lindell, a pro-Trump conspiracy theorist who secured enough support to qualify for the ballot.

Trump hasn't made a public endorsement, but he and his team are privately advocating for McDaniel, whom he tapped for the position shortly after his 2016 victory. Still, many Trump loyalists blame McDaniel, the niece of Utah Sen. Mitt Romney, for some of the party's recent struggles.

In an interview, Dhillon insisted that the overwhelming majority of Republican voters want a leadership change at the RNC. She warned of serious political consequences for any of the committee's 168 elected members who support McDaniel's reelection.

"For those members of the party who vote not with what the people in their state want but with what their own self-interest is, the next time they're up for election, it's going to be an issue," Dhillon told The Associated Press.

Apprised of Dhillon's statement, McDaniel said, "That sounds like a threat." She condemned the increasingly ugly attacks against her and the divisions plaguing the committee.

"There's nobody who's enjoyed this more than Democrats. I know, because I love it when they're fighting each other," McDaniel said.

Friday's vote for RNC chair serves as the latest high-profile leadership test for a deeply divided Republican Party grappling with questions about its future — and Trump's influence — ahead of the 2024 presidential election. The infighting was on public display earlier this month as House Republicans almost came to blows before uniting behind House Speaker Kevin McCarthy, undermined by the same MAGA forces threatening McDaniel this week.

In both cases, Trump has struggled to control his own loyalists, who seem intent on fighting the status quo — whether McCarthy or McDaniel — no matter the cost.

Seeking to influence the vote, a group of Florida Republicans from the party's MAGA wing moved last Friday to hold a vote of "no confidence" in McDaniel, which Republican groups in a handful of other states have done in recent weeks as well. But the Florida gathering, which drew leading McCarthy detractor Rep. Matt Gaetz, R-Fla., fell far short of reaching the quorum needed to hold an official vote.

Still, dozens of anti-McDaniel protesters waved signs outside the event. One read, "RONNA IS THE ENEMY WITHIN."

"The biggest thing is that we want a really strong leader who's in touch with MAGA, and Ronna just doesn't have that," Lake County, Florida, GOP Chair Anthony Sabatini, who led the anti-McDaniel push, said in a phone interview from a shooting range as gunshots rang out. "She's lost the confidence of voters."

Trump has avoided weighing in on the RNC chair fight at McDaniel's request, according to those with direct knowledge of the situation. The former president would endorse her if she asked, but McDaniel's team currently believes she will win without his public backing, allowing her to maintain a sense of neutrality heading into the 2024 presidential primary season.

According to its bylaws, the RNC must remain neutral in the presidential primary. Trump is the only announced GOP candidate so far, but other high-profile contenders are expected in the coming months.

Still, Trump could ultimately endorse McDaniel ahead of Friday's vote if his public support is deemed necessary, according to people familiar with his thinking who, like others interviewed, spoke on condition of anonymity to share internal discussions.

At least three top Trump lieutenants — senior advisers Susie Wiles, Chris LaCivita and Clayton Henson — are planning to attend this week's three-day RNC winter meeting in Southern California, where the vote will play out. While they are not attending specifically on McDaniel's behalf, Trump's team is making clear in private conversations that he backs McDaniel.

> "There's nobody who's enjoyed this more than Democrats. I know, because I love it when they're fighting each other"
> - Ronna McDaniel's, RNC Chair

McDaniel's unofficial whip team is expected to include former Trump chief counselor Kellyanne Conway, former Trump chief of staff Reince Priebus, former Arizona Senate candidate Blake Masters, Family Research Council President Tony Perkins and conservative commentator Hugh Hewitt, she said. Another high-profile Trump loyalist, Maryland RNC member David Bossie, is also backing McDaniel.

Dhillon's guest list is still in flux, but she said over the weekend that her team would likely include former Arizona gubernatorial candidate Kari Lake, MAGA influencer Charlie Kirk and country singer John Rich.

After three consecutive disappointing national elections, there is a broad sense of dissatisfaction among Republican voters and RNC members alike about the health of their party. Some are increasingly eager to move on from Trump and, by proxy, McDaniel, who is viewed as a close Trump ally — even if many Trump's supporters outside the RNC membership see her as insufficiently committed to their cause.

"She's been Trump's lap dog for four-plus years," said Bill Palatucci, an RNC member from New Jersey and a vocal critic of both Trump and McDaniel. While Palatucci formally endorsed Dhillon late last week, he is skeptical she has the votes to defeat McDaniel.

Dhillon has unleashed a torrent of attacks against McDaniel in recent weeks that have resonated across Trump's MAGA movement. But as the far right cheered, Dhillon may have alienated would-be supporters on the actual Republican National Committee, which is made up of activists and elected officials from all 50 states.

She has seized on several examples of apparent misspending and mismanagement under McDaniel's watch, which McDaniel's team — backed by former Trump officials like Wiles — claim are inaccurate or misleading.

In recent days, the attacks against McDaniel have intensified.

Last week, Dhillon promoted claims that a McDaniel ally raised concerns about Dhillon's faith in at least one private conversation. Dhillon, who is of Indian heritage, identifies as a member of the Sikh religion.

The McDaniel ally has denied the claim, which was outlined in a detailed email to the RNC's entire membership bearing the subject line "Religious Bigotry."

Dhillon also highlighted a Washington Post report that McDaniel has said, in multiple private conversations with RNC members, that only she can dissuade Trump from launching an independent presidential bid — and ultimately destroying the party's chances in the next presidential election — should he fail to win the GOP nomination.

"She said it to many people: Only I can control Trump," Dhillon told the AP, likening such a statement to someone believing they could single-handedly stop an asteroid from crashing into Earth.

McDaniel said such claims are "ridiculous."

"After working with President Trump for six years, I don't think anybody could ever say they control him," McDaniel said.

Meanwhile, McDaniel warned of a "huge risk" if Republicans cannot stop the infighting as the 2024 election season begins. The GOP is well positioned to win the Senate majority and maintain control of the House, although the presidential contest will dominate much of the committee's focus.

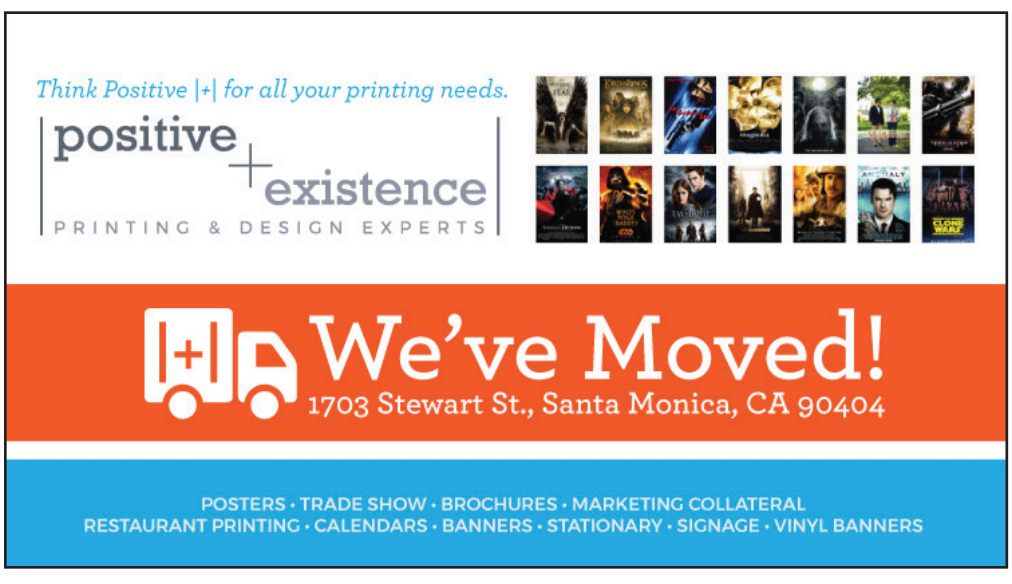

"This is really critical as we head into '24 that we stop labeling, attacking, demonizing other Republicans to the point where we can't bring them together post-primary," she said.

For her part, Dhillon said she would "of course" unite behind McDaniel if she ultimately prevails Friday.

"Job 1 is winning elections," Dhillon said. "I'm a team player."

workforce including at least 162 in Los Angeles.

JANUARY 2023

Amazon: The e-commerce company said it must cut about 18,000 positions. That's just a fraction of its 1.5 million-strong global workforce.

Salesforce: The company lays off 10% of its workforce, about 8,000 employees.

Coinbase: The cryptocurrency trading platform cuts approximately 20% of its workforce, or about 950 jobs, in a second round of layoffs in less than a year.

Microsoft: The software company said it will cut about 10,000 jobs, almost 5% of its workforce.

Google: The search engine giant becomes the most recent in the industry to say it must adjust, saying 12,000 workers, or about 6% of its workforce, would be let go.

Spotify: The music streaming service is cutting 6% of its global workforce. It did not give a specific number of job losses. Spotify reported in its latest annual report that it had about 6,600 employees, which implies that 400 jobs are being axed.

Santa Monica lost additional jobs from other companies that were tech adjacent last year including 54 jobs from a production company and GoodRX laid off 69 people. Doordash fired 75 people when delivery demand softened after the pandemic.

THOMUS BIKE UNVEIL

that these bikes start at around a $6,000 price point and each one will be built, on site, specifically to the customer's needs.

"We strongly believe that the market in Switzerland and much of Europe, like Denmark or Belgium, where people commute every day is very similar to the area here [Santa Monica] it's perfect to commute also, with good bike lanes and even some small hills," said Berni Gonzalez, Partner at Thömus USA.

"People here want to be healthy, they're trying to be healthy. And that's why we're here. We're not just a sports brand, we're not just a performance brand, we're also an urban mobility brand."

Joining Gonzalez at the event was Thömus CEO Thömu Binggeli, Group CEO of Maxon, Egen Elmiger and NASA Associate Administrator and CTO Thomas Zurbuchen.

"The Swissrider is an e-bike for life and is light enough to carry up the stairs and hang on the train without effort, yet with enough power to ride easily," said Binggeli.

"We're convinced that light e-bike drives have a lot of potential in urban life. This Swissrider relies on sleek design, super-light construction and electric tailwind from Maxon, a promising package for this market," Elmiger said.

Thömus developed the Swissrider at its headquarters in Oberried, Switzerland, approximately 110 miles northeast of Geneva, where Binggeli started bicycle production on his parent's farm more than 30 years ago. In July of 2022, the company launched the Lightrider E Ultimate, the world's lightest dual-suspension electric mountain bike, which also marked the first collaboration with Maxon.

If an initial outlay of six thousand dollars is a bit much to begin with, Thömus rents out its bikes from the Montana Ave store as well. Simply visit or contact the store and provide a few basic details like what kind of bike you want to hire, for example, road, e-road, gravel, mountain, e-mountain or city e-bike, along with your height and frame size and they'll do the rest.

COUNCIL AGENDA

costs associated with the case from insurance companies.

The California Business Roundtable has filed a suit against the city to block the voter approved Measure GS that would establish a third tier of real estate transfer tax. The measure was one of two that sought to raise money from the sale of large properties (over $8 million) last year and GS (sponsored by then mayor Sue Himmelrich) beat out Measure DT (sponsored by Councilman Phil Brock). The lawsuit contends GS is invalid as it stipulates money would be split between two causes: funding schools and affordable housing and California law prohibits ballot measures on more than one subject.

City Hall is also being sued over development and construction rules. The Santa Monica Housing Council alongside two residents (William T. Dawson and Irma Vargas) have accused city officials of failing to adhere to state mandated housing laws. The lawsuit alleges the city's housing element fails to provide enough sites for future development and doesn't do enough to account for high density projects. The plaintiffs are asking the court to mandate increases in height and density limits for projects.

Of the three other lawsuits on the agenda, one is suing for damages alleging a City worker caused a traffic collision and a second alleges the City, through its housing authority, underpaid a landlord for Section 8 tenants. No information was available in the court system for the third.

STUDY SESSIONS:

Council will receive an update on environmental programs through the Office of Sustainability and the Environment. While there's no action required during a study session, staff will discuss a broad range of environmental programs with a focus on Council's previously identified targets of water self-sufficiency by 2023, zero waste by 2030 and carbon neutrality by 2050.

Santa Monica has the ability to close its airport on Dec. 31, 2028. If it does, the land would be available for alternate uses and Council will begin discussions with the community on Tuesday regarding possible uses. In 2014, voters approved a measure establishing land use regulations for the site focused on park space. However, the report states there's no economic feasibility study for a park and additional uses may be necessary such as housing and municipal services. Should those uses be pursued, they may require an additional public vote.

BUSINESS BOOSTERS:

Should Council make it to the end of its agenda in one night, which is not always the case, it will discuss several proposals for future action. Mayor Pro Tem Lana Negrete, Councilmember Christine Parra and Councilmember Oscar de la Torre are asking for a meeting with Downtown Santa Monica Inc. to develop an arts and entertainment district on the 1200 block of the Promenade that would expand outdoor dining, allowable uses and street performances.

Negrete has also joined with Councilmember Caroline Torosis over a proposal to help fund small businesses. The two are proposing a Small Business Assistance and Tenant Improvement Fund to provide loans to businesses who are otherwise unable to afford to locate in Santa Monica.

Additional discussion items include a request to help fund music programs at Samohi and support a bill in Sacramento that would allow churches and colleges to build affordable housing projects on their property.

Council will meet in City Hall at 1685 Main Street on Jan. 24. Closed session begins at 5:30 p.m. Meetings can be viewed online on the City's Youtube channel.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Jan. 24)

You think you know what your favorites are, but this year brings a whole new slew of them — people, places, foods and more that make your "best of" list. You've a talent for pricing your work, and financial wins keep coming. More highlights: a sacred calling, the continual polishing of your talent and someone you teach who wins your heart. Virgo and Sagittarius adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 7, 10, 3, 33 and 17.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Whatever state you're going for, pretend you're already in it. Involve yourself as fully as possible in the exercise of acting "as if," and before you know it, you won't be pretending anymore.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). It's counterproductive to overwork, though it can also be hard to tell if you need to push through tiredness or embrace the lazy. And what exactly is the best way to rest anyway? Only you know the right answer. Trust yourself.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You keep going because you're persistent but also hopeful. What's your best move? The next one! You wouldn't want to deprive the world of seeing this. You'll have an ally in an Aquarius or Pisces.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). We all follow someone. Well-intentioned friends, parents and leaders don't always teach us the right things. It's a day to figure out which information is wrong and make corrections.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). There are those who seem to enjoy complaining. You know the type; their discontent is endless. Maybe you'll be inspired to solve the problem, which won't stop the complaining, but it will change the direction it flows.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Various curiosities and passions will intermingle in one particularly interesting project. This one will take a few tries to get right because there are so many elements coming together. It will bring about your very best efforts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You won't have as much time as you'd like to do what you want to do. What can you let go of to make this work? Image will be very important. If you approach with confidence and poise, you may be able to buy more time.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). If someone feels safe enough to open up to you, you consider this an honor, especially if you're in a position to help. It's best if this is part of a slow and natural progression of a relationship. It should take time to build trust.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). When there's nothing you would change about the scene, you've achieved happiness. Wanting something to be different is the opposite of happiness. What would it take to love what is and desire nothing more?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You prize honesty, but a certain amount of showmanship is smart, too. It will keep people engaged and focused on the parts you prefer they would see. You're like a magician, directing eyes to the magic.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). It's not always terrible or dangerous when the lines between dreams and reality are blurred. Today you can see the lines, but you'll also get the wonderful sensation that you're in a movie, and you'll be willing to suspend your belief.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Like a fallen tree in the road after a storm, you've come upon blocks that you have no control over, but you might have something to do with the clearing. You'll work on it with others who have the tools to help.
