Holocaust survivor shares tales of resilience with Samohi

THOMAS LEFFLER
SMDP Staff Writer

In advance of Monday's International Holocaust Remembrance Day, the students of Santa Monica High School were given a rare opportunity to hear from someone who escaped the horrors personally.

On Jan. 22, Holocaust survivor Eva Perlman spoke to a packed Barnum Hall, sharing her harrowing tales of resilience during tough times. Born in Berlin in 1932, Perlman was raised in constant turmoil, her family forced to flee into France during World War II, and the survivor has since used the experience to educate others about the Holocaust.

The author of "Eva's Uncommon Life: Guided by Miracles" gave a rousing address during Samohi Flex-Time, saying that she was "very honored" to talk to the Vikings in attendance and that her experience was "only one in many." She began her talk, as she often does, by thanking the non-Jewish allies her family had in Europe that wouldn't sell them out to the Nazis constantly impeding French territory.

"There were people who helped the Jews, and there were evil people

School district works to help students and staff who lost their homes in the Palisades fire

THOMAS LEFFLER
SMDP Staff Writer

The Santa Monica Malibu Unified School District has been reeling from the ongoing chaos caused by this month's wildfires but the true cost of the disaster came into focus last week with the first meeting of the board since the blazes began.

Of the deadly wildfires that hit LA in January, the Palisades Fire was particularly harmful to SMMUSD, keeping Malibu schools on ice for weeks. The human toll was apparent as well, as 55 SMMUSD families and staff lost their homes in the blaze.

Superintendent Dr. Antonio Shelton opened the first SMMUSD Board of Education meeting of 2025 on Jan. 23 by saying he's personally talked to students that have lost their home, unable to describe the torment they've gone through.

"They have had their lives upended with these tragic and incredibly stressful situations," Shelton said. "We see you and are

In a small, intimate press conference on Friday, County of Los Angeles Fire Department Captain Malcolm Dicks was reunited with Patty Phillips, the Malibu resident he saved from the Palisades Fire.

Held at Fire Station 70 on Carbon Canyon Road, overlooking the burnt out shells of destroyed homes on the PCH, they were joined by LA County Fire Department Chief Anthony Marrone and LA County Supervisor Lindsey Horvath.

US economic losses from natural disasters soared in 2024, even as they eased globally

BY ALEX VEIGA
AP Business Writer

Economic losses from hurricanes and other natural disasters soared in the U.S. last year and were above average globally, reflecting another year of costly severe storms, floods and droughts.

Damage caused by Hurricanes Helene and Milton helped push total economic losses from natural disasters in the U.S. to $217.8 billion last year, according to insurance broker Aon PLC. That figure represents an 85.3% increase from 2023, when losses totaled about $117.5 billion. It's also the largest annual tally of economic losses from natural disasters since 2017.

Insured losses, or the portion of economic losses that are covered by insurance, also rose last year. They climbed 36% to $112.7 billion, the most since 2022.

Hurricane Helene tore across six southeastern states last fall, costing $75 billion in economic losses, mainly due to inland and coastal flooding. according to Aon. Less than two weeks later, Hurricane Milton made landfall on the west coast of Florida, causing some $25 billion in economic losses.

"In 2024, one of the big differences is we had significant U.S. hurricane events that happened," said Liz Henderson, global head of climate risk advisory at Aon. "When those events happen, they affect a large area and they affect areas with large values in terms of properties and people and content. So the losses from those events tend to be significantly higher."

At least two other hurricanes, several severe "convective" storms and a drought contributed to the losses from natural disasters in the U.S. last year.

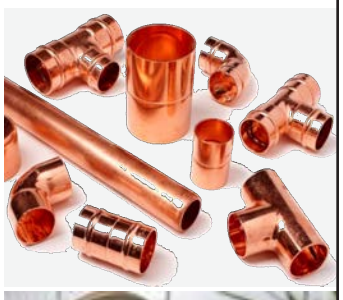

In addition to the severe storms in the U.S., deadly floods in the Valencia region of Spain and other natural disasters drove worldwide economic losses from natural disasters to $368 billion last year, according to Aon. That's a 7.3% decline from 2023, but about 14% higher than the annual average going back to 2000. Global insured losses, meanwhile, climbed 15.1% to $145 billion.

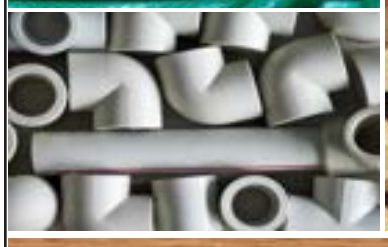

While it's impossible to predict the timing, location and losses from natural disasters, 2025 is not off to an encouraging start. The devastating wildfires that erupted in Los Angeles County on Jan. 7, killing at least 28 people and destroying more than 14,000 structures, are already projected to be among the costliest natural disasters.

In a separate report last week, Aon estimated that total economic and insured losses for the two largest wildfires — the Palisades fire and the Eaton blaze burning just outside Los Angeles — could reach into the lower tens of billions of dollars, likely making them the costliest wildfires in U.S. history.

If California split from the US and became a nation, it would be comparable to Canada

CALIFORNIA: A demonstrator carries a large California state flag as they march during a protest for immigrant rights in Oakland on May 1, 2006.

With Donald Trump back in the White House, he's resuming his long-running feud with California and its political figures, most prominently Gov. Gavin Newsom.

Trump refers to Newsom as "Newscum" in his social media postings, and Newsom has called a special session of the California Legislature to pay for steps to thwart Trump's policy decrees.

The transcontinental sniping raises an old question: Could California sever ties with the United States and once again become an independent country?

The San Diego County-based Independent California Institute thinks so. It cites California's world-class economy and its status as "an influential and well-known actor on the world stage, particularly in humanity's collective fight against climate change."

The institute has released a new poll purporting that more than 60% of Californians agree that they "would be better off California if peacefully seceded from the U.S. at some point in the next 10 years."

Strong majorities, the organization says, want California to form a commission dedicated to secession; to use its border stations to check incoming autos for drugs, guns and other contraband; to seek ownership of federally owned land, and to use hardball tactics in Congress, such as withholding votes on the federal budget to press for independence.

None of this is likely to happen, of course, but on paper an independent California might be feasible.

Canada, which also shares a long border with the 47 other contiguous U.S. states, is comparable in many ways to an independent California.

California's population, just under 40 million, is almost identical in size to Canada's, but there is a big difference in economic output. Canada's $2.3 trillion economy ranks ninth in the world while California's $3.9 trillion ranks fifth or sixth.

Canada's national budget of $534.6 billion Canadian ($372 billion US) is not too much more than Newsom's proposed $322 billion state budget. However, about $100 billion of California's comes from non-tax sources, mostly the federal government.

Much of Canada's budget resembles California's, namely spending on education, health care, welfare and housing. One major difference is that Canada also is spending about $40 billion on military defense, less than 5% of the $825 billion the United States spends for defense.

That raises an interesting question about how an independent California would defend itself. Would it, like Canada, depend on its much more powerful neighbor to provide military protection

TUESDAY
POOR

SURF: Knee to thigh
1-2FT

NW swell is minimal but a new pulse of SSE swell is due to creep in. It'll be mostly knee-thigh high surf throughout the day but there should be a bit more push to it at times as some of the SSE energy shows in the afternoon. Clean conditions are expected for the AM window, getting bumpy in the afternoon as onshore wind develops.

WEDNESDAY
POOR

SURF: Shin to knee
0-1FT

Some small, off-season SSE swell creeps in through the day, generally shows best west of Dume because of the swell angle. Will be a slow morning on the high tide but the afternoon low tide will see a touch more surf.

Weather

Tuesday: A slight chance of showers after 10am. Sunny, with a high near 56.
Tuesday Night: Mostly clear, with a low around 43.
Wednesday: Sunny, with a high near 58.
Wednesday Night: Mostly clear, with a low around 44.

How much did the youth vote shift to the right in California?

YOUTH: Two lines of students align both sides of a hallroom at a polling place at a university. The students are either looking straight ahead, looking down at their phones or talking to each other.

In November 2024, when President Donald Trump won 38.3% of the vote in California, this was 4 percentage points more than he won in 2020. It was a small shift to the right, owing to many factors among subgroups of voters. But what part did young voters play in it?

According to national exit polls, Trump made gains within the youth vote — generally categorized as voters ages 18-29 — in 2024 compared to 2020. Experts say reasons for this shift, both nationally and here in California, could range from fewer young people turning out to vote to changes in ideology.

Former Vice President Kamala Harris won California in her 2024 presidential bid by over 3 million votes. However, Trump increased his share of votes in 45 out of 58 California counties from 2020 to 2024, according to a CalMatters analysis. Imperial, Merced and Sutter counties saw some of the biggest gains.

Nationally, 7% of youth voters who voted for Former President Joe Biden in 2020 switched to vote for Trump in 2024, according to independent research conducted by The Center for Information and Research on Civic Learning and Engagement, a nonpartisan research organization based at Tufts University in Boston.

Despite this national shift, young Californians are more likely to identify as Democrats and liberals. Eric McGhee, a senior fellow at the Public Policy Institute of California, explained that rightward shifts in the state do not necessarily indicate the same for the youth vote.

"The people who are turning out to vote might be different than the broader population of people from that demographic, or even than the people who typically vote in that demographic," McGhee said.

Some may choose not to vote altogether. The Tufts University research organization recently estimated that the national 2024 youth voter turnout was 42%, compared to 52% to 55% in 2020.

Adam Tallabas, a 26-year-old graduate of Cal State Long Beach and current chair of Orange County Young Democrats, met young residents in his community who planned on not voting in this election. When speaking to Orange County residents under the age of 35, Tallabas found that financial strains like paying rent and student loan debt were at the heart of their apathy toward voting.

"People, they have so much going on in their household that it's hard for them to focus on what's going on outside of that household," he said.

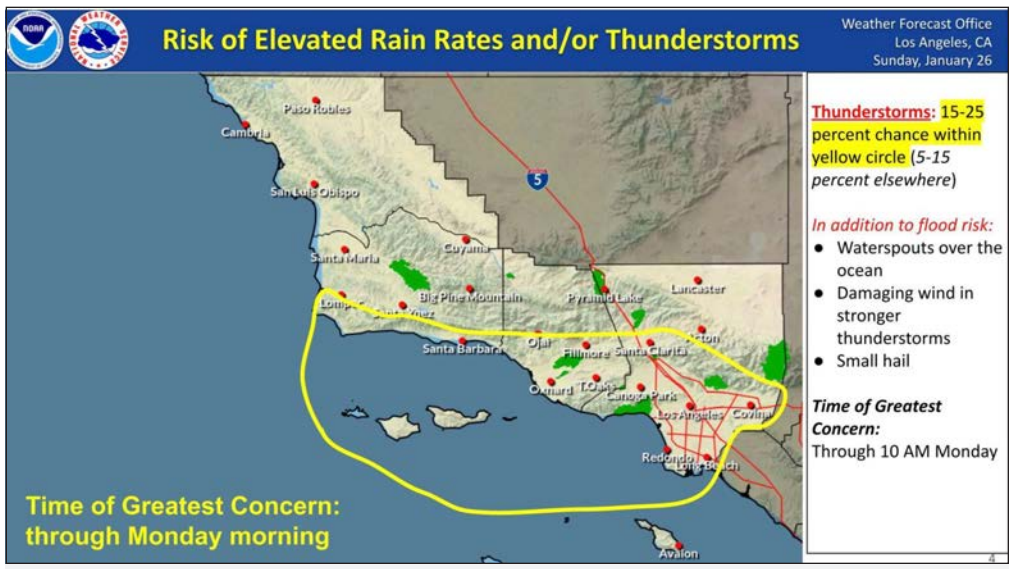

In 2020, 53.5% of Orange County voters chose Biden compared to 44.4% who chose Trump. That margin shrunk in 2024 when 49.7% of voters chose Harris compared to 47.1% who chose Trump. The county also saw 129,173 fewer votes overall in 2024 than in 2020, approximately an 8.35% decrease in turnout rate.

"A big part of why young people don't vote is because they're less rooted to their communities. They're not homeowners by and large ... They haven't reached that stage of life where they feel quite as, kind of, connected to things," said McGhee, who has conducted research at the nonpartisan think tank for over 17 years.

Young Californians of all political parties are much less likely to be homeowners than

Rain in Southern California creates mudflows but helps firefighters

Graphic Courtesy NWS

RAINFALL: Southern California finally received rain over the weekend, helping firefighters with wildfire containment.

More rain fell Monday on parts of Southern California after causing mudflows over the weekend, helping firefighters but boosting the risk of toxic ash runoff in areas scorched by Los Angeles-area wildfires.

Flood watches were in effect for burn areas from recent fires that broke out around the Pacific Palisades neighborhood in Los Angeles, Altadena and Castaic Lake, said Joe Sirard, a meteorologist for the National Weather Service in Oxnard.

"All these fresh burns are very susceptible to rapid runoff," Sirard said, warning of even small amounts of rain in a few minutes' time. "What that means is we have a fairly high danger of mud and debris flows once we get above those thresholds."

Los Angeles International Airport reported a little under an inch of rain (2.5 centimeters) in a 24-hour period ending at 3 a.m. Monday, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration reported. Surrounding areas reported lesser amounts.

School was closed Monday for the four Malibu schools in the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District "due to dangerous road conditions and challenges with access to our schools," school officials posted online.

A portion of the Pacific Coast Highway in Los Angeles County was closed as of Sunday afternoon due to mudflows in Topanga Canyon, the California Department of Transportation said. Heavy snow fell in the mountains in San Bernardino and Riverside counties.

One benefit that could come from the rain: It may help firefighters who are reining in multiple wildfires after weeks of windy and dry weather.

Los Angeles County crews spent much of last week removing vegetation, shoring up slopes and reinforcing roads in devastated areas of the Palisades and Eaton fires, which reduced entire neighborhoods to rubble and ash after breaking out during powerful winds on Jan. 7.

The Palisades Fire, the largest of the blazes that destroyed thousands of homes and killed at least 11 people, reached 94% containment Monday. The Eaton Fire, which broke out near Altadena and has killed at least 16 people, was 98% contained.

The Hughes Fire, which ignited last week north of Los Angeles and caused evacuation orders or warnings for more than 50,000 people, was 95% contained as of Monday morning.

In San Diego County, firefighters made progress to contain the smaller Border 2 Fire as it burned through a remote area of the Otay Mountain Wilderness near the U.S.-Mexico border.

Most of the region was forecast to get about an inch of precipitation over several days, but the weather service warned of a risk of localized cloudbursts causing mud and debris to flow down hills.

"So the problem would be if one of those showers happens to park itself over a burn area," weather service meteorologist Carol Smith said on social media. "That could be enough to create debris flows."

Los Angeles Mayor Karen Bass issued an executive order last week to expedite cleanup efforts and mitigate the environmental impacts of fire-related pollutants. LA County supervisors also approved an emergency motion to install flood-control infrastructure and expedite and remove sediment in fire-impacted areas.

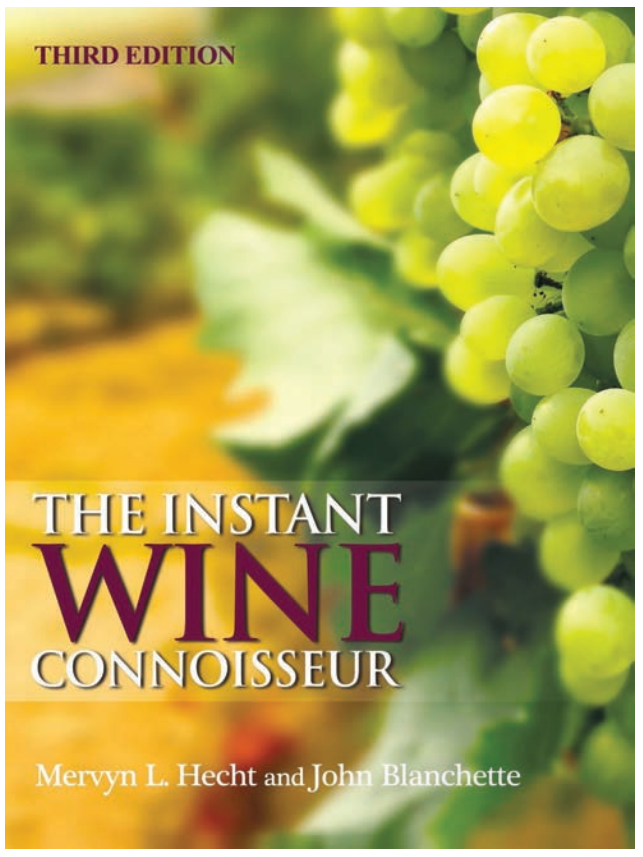

Fire crews filled sandbags for communities, while county workers installed barriers and cleared drainage pipes and basins.

Officials cautioned that ash in recent burn zones was a toxic mix of incinerated cars, electronics, batteries, building materials, paints, furniture and other household items. It contains pesticides, asbestos, plastics and lead. Residents were urged to wear protective gear while cleaning up.

Concerns about post-fire debris flows have been especially high since 2018, when the town of Montecito, up the coast from Los Angeles, was ravaged by mudslides after a downpour hit mountain slopes burned bare by a huge blaze. Hundreds of homes were damaged and 23 people died.

The rain snapped a near-record streak of dry weather for Southern California. Most of Southern California is currently in "extreme drought" or "severe drought," according to the U.S. Drought Monitor.

doing everything we can to support you during this difficult time."

The evening before the fire broke out, the SMMUSD Emergency Operations Center (EOC) convened to address risks to Malibu schools, which were still feeling the impacts of December's Franklin Fire. SMMUSD Malibu Pathway Executive Director Isaac Burgess stated that the Franklin Fire caused damage at Webster Elementary School ranging from exterior damage to bungalows to damage to electrical systems and solar panels.

After repairs were made to electrical systems and internet connections, and cleanup crews were able to access the campus, Webster reopened for one minimal day on Jan. 6 before closing yet again. Prior to winter break, Malibu Elementary School was able to house Webster students and staff for four days.

Originally sending an email to Malibu staff and families the night of Jan. 6 saying school would be open on the 7th, the EOC determined early on the 7th that all Malibu campuses should be closed that date due to increased high wind concern.

During the Palisades Fire, Chief Operations Officer Carey Upton said the challenge with Webster wasn't necessarily about the Palisades blaze, but rather extreme wind kicking up ash from the Franklin Fire. Cleanup efforts at Webster had to start again during this time, completed by Jan. 24. Upton added that ash kicked up from Palisades also showed itself at Grant Elementary School.

In the immediate aftermath, Burgess worked with Executive Director of Elementary Schools Dr. Steve Richardson to compile a list of families and staff who were displaced, lost their homes or experienced property damage. The two then reached out to see what assistance was needed.

"Just to let them know that we care, we (got) in touch with them," Burgess said. "We care, we're thinking of them and we want to support them in any way that we can."

The district is currently exploring options for the 15 staff members who lost homes and the 24 who were displaced, including the reinstatement of Personal Necessity Days. Essential workers who had to be on the ground during the Palisades Fire will have additional compensation thanks to a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) with union SEIU Local 99.

For Malibu students, a total of 10 hotspots and 15 Chromebooks were checked out to Malibu Middle School and Malibu High School to support students, and staff collaborated to develop a Continuity of Learning plan to "help sustain student learning" during the prolonged school closure. Though the district is required to offer such a plan, students were not required to participate.

"Over the past few weeks, our school community has faced unimaginable challenges, and the devastating fires have touched the lives of so many among us," Assistant Superintendent of Educational Services Dr. Stacy Williamson added. "It has been so hard to see that some have lost their homes, been displaced or supporting friends and loved ones that are going through a similar heartbreak."

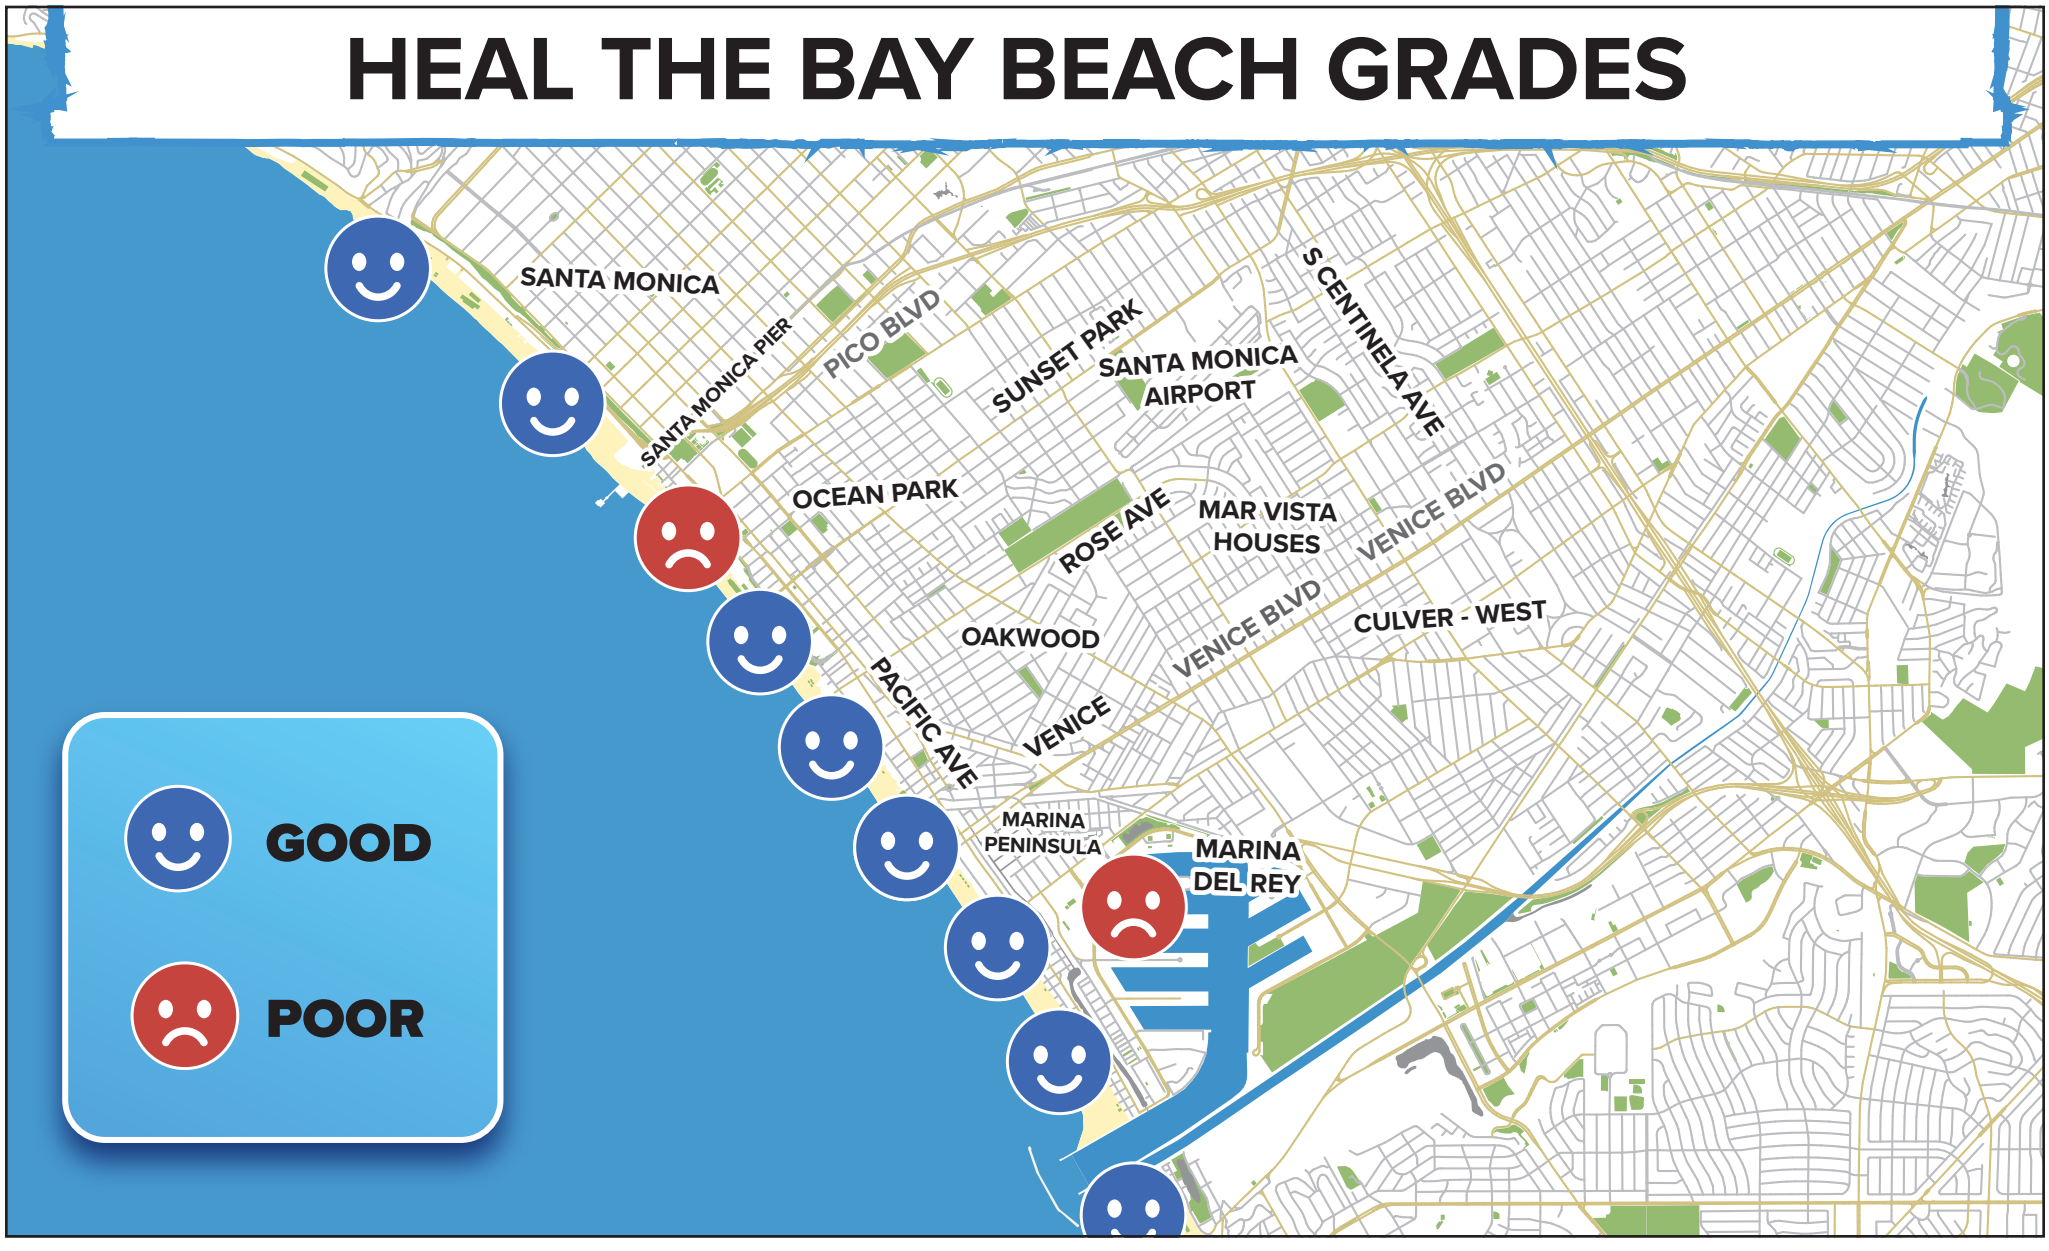

The impacts of the fire weather were not done as of the meeting, as Malibu campuses were closed once again on Monday due to dangerous road conditions and challenges to school access.

who betrayed them to the Nazis, so we were very fortunate," Perlman said. "My life is just a total miracle. We were very fortunate that we were never betrayed, that we (were) helped."

Her family had encountered roadblocks before the Holocaust itself, as her mother could not continue her medical studies at a Berlin university once Adolf Hitler came to power. Perlman's mother received a letter from the university that she was excluded from future studies because of "Marxist activities," an excuse to kick her off campus. All Jewish students at the university were told to leave, some having just 20 minutes to pack up their things.

"My mother was not a Marxist, she was not interested in politics," Perlman said. "All she wanted to do is become a physician. But that was an excuse that they used."

First forced to flee to Paris when the systematic elimination of European Jews began, Perlman's family was then moved to a village southwest of Grenoble in the French Alps when the Nazi invasion of France began. It was in the village where a piece of a German bomb came through their roof and into her father's desk chair, with Perlman adding it was a "miracle" that he was not there and "killed instantly."

In the mountains, post offices would play a dangerous game of phone tag, phoning village-by-village about potential Nazi movement in their area. While her family was "always ready at a moment's notice to pick up a coat and run," Perlman was still able to go to school, with the local boys' school accepting girls "because of the circumstances."

Two close calls occurred during her time in France, first when the family's landlord informed them that two Nazis needed to move into the house for sleeping purposes. There was no stopping this, as Perlman's father was away on business with the French Resistance.

"My mother had to give up our bedroom to the two Nazis who slept in there next to three Jewish children for two weeks in our house, while my mother was (up) in the attic," Perlman said. "She spent her time at the window because she was afraid that my father would come in the middle of the night."

Perlman later pondered why the Nazis in her home didn't say anything about the Jewish occupants, stating that it could possibly be exhaustion from the war, or they potentially were men of moral fiber that were only Nazis because they had to be. Later on, another close call saw her mother have a bicycle accident that "saved her life," because if she kept going downhill, it would have been straight into the German lines.

> My mother had to give up our bedroom to the two Nazis who slept in there next to three Jewish children for two weeks in our house, while my mother was (up) in the attic
> - Eva Perlman

Since the war, Perlman has used her experience in a healthy way, contributing her knowledge via her book and speaking appearances, as well as organizing trips to Poland for the annual International March of the Living from the Auschwitz concentration camp site to the Birkenau site.

"Ms. Perlman has dedicated her life to educating others about the Holocaust and keeping its history alive ... this (was) a unique opportunity to connect with history and engage in meaningful dialogue with our student body," Samohi ASB Treasurer Sadie Gryczman said of the visit.

if needed, or would it build a substantial military of its own? It's one of the many aspects of governance that a California nation would have to address.

The U.S. government now collects more than $560 billion a year in taxes on Californians, so without raising overall taxes, the new nation would have that money to finance not only a military force but other programs now covered by the feds wholly or partly, such as health care and Social Security payments.

The federal government now covers about 50% of Californians' medical costs, paying out roughly $200 billion a year via Medicare, Medi-Cal, Obamacare and coverage for military and federal retirees.

The Social Security system pays about $10 billion in benefits each year to more than a million California recipients.

The Independent California Institute envisions that an independent California would continue its center-left policies, and Canada could be a model for that as well. However, the Canadian economy has been in crisis lately; its budget has a $40 billion deficit and its long-serving prime minister, Justin Trudeau, is being forced to step down.

Trump has suggested that a troubled Canada should become a state. The final question, therefore, is would swapping California for Canada be better for everyone?

NOTICE OF A PUBLIC HEARING BEFORE THE SANTA MONICA LANDMARKS COMMISSION

SUBJECT: 24ENT-0173 Landmark Designation Nomination
1958 20th Street
APPLICANT: Santa Monica Conservancy & Quinn Research Center
PROPERTY OWNER: John Palamarchuk

A public hearing will be held by the Landmarks Commission to consider the following request:

Consideration of designation applications 24ENT-0173 for the property located at 1958 20th Street to determine whether the residential structure in whole or in part, should be designated as a City Landmark and, if designated a Landmark, whether an associated Landmark Parcel should be defined and described in order to preserve, maintain, protect, or safeguard the Landmark. The Landmarks Commission will consider the application based on whether the application, research and public testimony presented demonstrates that the building meets one or more of the required criteria for Landmark designation pursuant to SMMC Section 9.56.100(A). Consideration of compliance with the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA), including an exemption under CEQA Guideline 15061(b)(3) (Common Sense Exemption).

DATE/TIME: MONDAY FEBRUARY 10, 2025 AT 7:00 PM

LOCATION: City Council Chamber, Second Floor, Santa Monica City Hall, 1685 Main Street, Santa Monica, California

those above the age of 34, according to a Public Policy Institute of California statewide survey.

Based on a CNN national exit poll, Harris won over young voters, with 54% of voters ages 18-29 voting for her to Trump's 43%; however, the margin between the two candidates is much smaller than it was between Biden and Trump. CNN's 2020 exit poll showed Biden winning 60% of the youth vote while Trump won only 36%, much less than he got this past election.

While national exit polls reveal some information about the youth vote in 2024, there were no exit polls for California and neither the state nor the federal government release age-specific voting data. This, McGhee explained, makes it difficult to analyze young voters in California but opinion polling and interviews help shed some light on attitudes within this demographic.

Personal finance issues, such as housing and inflation, were top issues for young people who did vote, The Brookings Institution found, with some seeing Trump as the solution.

Samantha Dalby, a 29-year-old financial advisor from Newport Beach, noted her belief that "Trump ran the country similar to a business." This is one of the reasons she and a lot of her peers in Newport's financial space are excited about the incoming Trump administration, specifically the conservative promise of "corporate tax cuts, which are important for a lot of business owners."

While exit polls use age groups as one way to show voting patterns, Alice Siu, associate director for the Stanford Deliberative Democracy Lab, emphasizes being careful about categorizing the "youth vote" as one demographic. She noted that young voters hold diverse characteristics such as geography, identity and finances, not to mention the wide range of experiences within the age range of 18-29.

Party votes varied among various racial and ethnic groups of young voters as well, according to the Tufts University research organization's analysis of an AP VoteCast Survey. Trump appeared to win among young, white voters while Harris won among Black, Latino and Asian young voters. Yet the CNN exit poll still showed 46% of Latino respondents voted for Trump in 2024, a 14 percentage point increase from 2020.

Another way in which the youth vote differed was by gender, with Trump winning big with young men, receiving 56% of their vote nationally while 58% of young women voted for Harris.

Sunjay Muralitharan, national vice president of College Democrats of America and a 20-year-old student at UC San Diego, said the inability to reach young men was one of the Democratic Party's failures this past election.

"When I spoke to more people and took my own crack at kind of figuring out what went wrong, I noticed that a lot of young men felt like they were only treated as allies of women, rather than being represented themselves," Muralitharan said. "I think this was really disheartening because a lot of the policies that we pushed for also benefit young men."

Ethan Petty, a 26-year-old man living in Bakersfield — located in a county that also saw a rightward shift — expressed his support for Harris. He noted that while he did not feel strong excitement for Harris as a candidate, he found her to be favorable to Trump,

> When I spoke to more people and took my own crack at kind of figuring out what went wrong, I noticed that a lot of young men felt like they were only treated as allies of women, rather than being represented themselves noting worries about abortion and LGBTQ+ rights under a Trump administration.
> - Sunjay Muralitharan, national vice president of College Democrats of America

"I'm pretty scared about what, you know, Donald Trump and the fully Republican-controlled government and Supreme Court will do to maybe change the laws of the land in the future," he said. "I'm just kind of fearful of the future at the moment."

Trump's pick for vice president, J.D. Vance, excited some young Republican voters, according to Cynthia Kaui, 30, vice chair of the California Young Republican Federation. At just 40 years old, Vance will be the country's third-youngest vice president.

"The fact that there is some level of representation, you know, in the highest level of government that one can achieve in politics, that was something that, you know, our membership was very excited about," Kaui said.

Some young voters, like Antonia Lopez, were dissatisfied with all their choices at the polls. The 22-year-old resident of San Bernardino expressed her disapproval of the Democratic party's campaign and her view that it was "encouraging right-wing sentiment" through moves such as highlighting an endorsement from prominent Republican Liz Cheney.

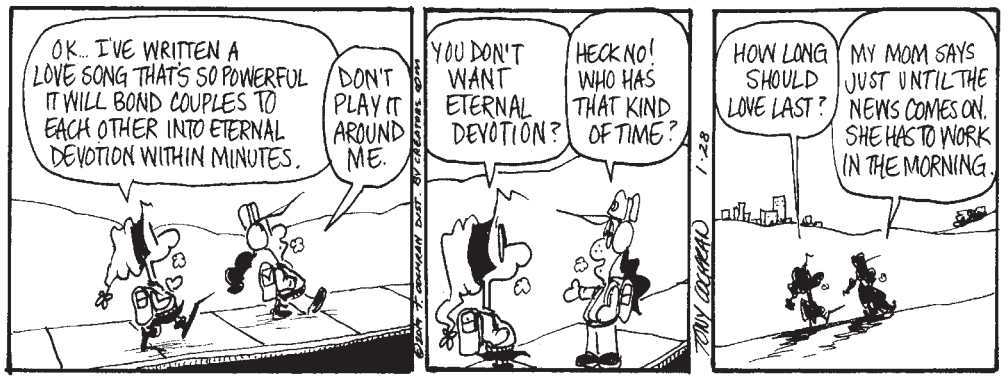

Lopez listed the Israel-Hamas conflict, bodily autonomy, freedom of the press, disseminating misinformation, and health care as some of her top issues. Though Lopez cast a vote for Harris, she didn't feel represented by any candidate in the race and is "pessimistic" about the presidency and policies to come.

"Especially as I'm getting older and these issues become more daunting, I feel like the issues that I care about are being abandoned," she said.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Jan. 28)

It's a year of finding more things to appreciate about yourself and your wonderful life. All that you possess - features, talents and flaws alike - are strengths in the right context, with the right people. Part of the journey will be about curating your audience well. More highlights: Winning teams, fantastic work/life balance and being someone's superstar. Taurus and Gemini adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 21, 1, 18, 6 and 40.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You don't often get to pick your challenges in this lifetime, so when you do have this luxury, as you will in the days to come, pick one that interests you deeply and has just the right size for full engagement.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). As you seek knowledge, you will find the access to information is the easy part, but organization and application will be more involved. It's the hands-on experience that will propel you forward.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You've a thoughtful and reflective nature, so even when you make mistakes, you work through them and learn from them. That's more than many people ever manage. Credit yourself, knowing you've weathered a full range of experiences and deserve to celebrate your wins.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You've been of service, but you can't do everything. Take time for yourself, or you won't have much to give. Let others carry the weight of their own frustrations. You don't need to justify why you're not accommodating their every wish.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). The idealized version of a relationship fades into reality. People are complex, and relationships evolve when you allow for their imperfections. Growth often comes from embracing the real, messy truth.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). As it stands, the situation is not a fit. Your options are to turn it into something custom-suited to you or turn it loose. Essentially, you'll either spend time making this work or spend time finding something else that works better.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You'll seize the chance to clean up what is, technically, not your mess. It's like you're acting in accordance with some higher calling. When you're one with the world, responsibility is somewhat irrelevant.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). You've a heap of charm to apply to an opportunity for making a lasting impression. The ones you find interesting will respond in kind. This could be the start of something mutually beneficial, if not downright magical.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). When you hear the smoke alarm, you argue with it, cry or ponder its inner workings. Your intuition will make a beeping sound, and you'll treat it the same way you would a smoke alarm - find the trouble source and put it out.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You can only deviate from the plan if you have a plan to begin with. You like to fly by the seat of your instinct, but your instincts are strongest when they have an agenda to bounce off of. This is the birth of your new methods.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You are your most important project. Shifting your focus inward - from supporting others to nurturing your own work - is key to claiming the space you deserve. Today, you'll protect your "you time" as sacred, no exceptions.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). People trust you. You keep your word even when it's inconvenient to do so. For all the big and small ways you've come through for others, including promises fulfilled, invoices paid, goals hit and more, you will be rewarded.

PATTY PHILLIPS

through the Big Rock community in Malibu, Phillips attempted to evacuate the area with her dog, Koda. As she drove down a dirt path off Big Rock Road, her vehicle got stuck. She was unable to move her car and feared that leaving the vehicle would risk her going off an embankment.

"Tuesday night, at about 7:30pm, I got lost in the flames in Big Rock, confused with the smoke and the fire surrounding me everywhere," Phillips said. "I ended up on this tiny dirt driveway, and

I realized I was off the main road and the fire was below me, and the hill above me was still blowing with red embers.

"And I realized I could never get out alive, and I couldn't leave my dog, knowing he would never make it, because your instinct is to run … There aren't words to describe what it's like, the idea that you're going to be burned alive in your car. And I was praying to God, please let me die from smoke, please do not let me be burned alive in my car," she said.

Patty called 911 for help while her husband, James, who made it to Pacific Coast Highway, frantically asked first responders for help.

"I was calling 911 and they couldn't help me and they transferred me to the Sheriff's Department and they couldn't help me … And my husband, James, never gave up. He's asking the fireman, you know, you need to save my wife. And they're like, 'We can't get up there, the power lines are down and we can't risk a fireman's life.'"

Without hesitation, and putting his own life at risk, Dicks offered to assist, driving through the fire and past the downed power lines and was able to locate and successfully rescue Patty and her dog, Koda, bringing them both to safety.

"I'm like, 'Please save me, please save me' and he's like, 'We got you.' I've never been so thankful my whole life. And I get in the truck with Malcolm and he's a big guy, he wraps his arm around me, and he escorts me to his truck. And I'm like, 'Malcolm, thank you' and he goes, 'We still might die.' I mean, that's how bad the fire was."

According to CalFire, the Palisades Fire alone grew to be the 10th-deadliest and third-most destructive wildfire in US history, with 11 deaths, 6,770 structures destroyed and 23,448 acres scorched. Fighting back tears, Phillips read out loud a letter she had written to Dicks not long after the incident.

"Dear Malcolm, words cannot describe the way I was feeling as I sat in my car with the hills burning around me and thinking I was going to die while praying that I would be from smoke inhalation rather than burning to death. It was the lowest point of helplessness that I have ever felt in my life and one that I never want to experience ever again.

"As I sat there with my dog, Koda, thinking it was over, I looked up and saw the lights of your truck heading towards me and realized my savior had come to rescue me. Thank you.

What an act of selflessness for you to run into a burning fire to save someone you don't know when you have a family of your own. How proud they must be for what amazing people [like you, do] allowing you to do the incredible, heroic work you do every day, knowing that you risk your life and all the firemen risk their life each and every day to respond to a fire.

Dicks responded like the consummate professional he is, "I'm just doing my job. It's what we're paid to do, and I'm just glad she's safe. Her husband and dog are safe. I felt guilty for a while not knowing if her home had burned down or not, but her home is safe too."

"Today's reunion is truly heartfelt as we join Patty, her family and Koda to reunite with Malcolm. I also want to express my sincere appreciation to Patty's husband James, whose quick thinking and actions were also instrumental in making a positive outcome to what certainly could have been just another tragic story," Marrone said.
