PYFC Awards Gala

Vicente Martín

PYFC: The Pico Youth and Family Center hosted the 14th Annual Hope & Unity Awards Gala, on Jan. 27 at Expert Dojo. Dr. Guadalupe Mireles-Toumayan received the Education Leadership award for her work in the local Latino community, such as leading the effort in sending over 200 boxes full of clothes, toys, and educational supplies to children in detention centers on the border for Christmas. She thanked the PYFC and stated how important it was to her to remind students, parents, and the community of the importance of history and culture. She talked about the challenges she has faced, her pride in Latino culture and role youth play in future representation. Mireles-Toumayan's friends and family praised her work as a community advocate and work empowering Latino students.

DTSM seeks private partner for ice rink

GRACE INEZ ADAMS
SMDP Staff Writer

Just weeks after Santa Monica's annual temporary winter ice rink closed and was reverted back into a parking lot, planning for next season has already begun.

Downtown Santa Monica Inc. (DTSM) currently owns the equipment used to bring the ice rink into existence every year and relies on multiple vendors to construct and operate it. However, DTSM Director of Operations Richard Mongarro said they are considering selling it and hiring just one contractor to take charge of the whole process.

"We're looking at whether or not it's beneficial for us to own our own ice rink and the parts that go along with it, or would it be better to send out with a company that has all of that and can update it, and keep it

Comedy legend is a laughing matter for Samohi theater program

MAGGIE MARKS

SNL alumni and comedian Dr. Tim Meadows has spent the past several months helping Samohi Theater students develop their acting skills, culminating in a comedy skit show last week.

Meadows was asked to participate by Theater Director Kate Barraza who knew of his work with students around the country.

"Dr. Meadows is very funny and makes the people around him more funny," she said. "The students respected and appreciated this opportunity and truly rose to the occasion. It was so fun to be a part of this experience. There were times when the students got Dr. Meadows laughing really hard and it was fun to witness. He's professional, meets students where they are at and pulls their best work out of them. He was both honest and encouraging with students, which gave them the confidence to move forward with their ideas but with clear and specific feedback as to how to improve the ideas and write great scripts."

THEATER: Students performed skits at Samohi last week with the help of actor Tim Meadows.

Ranging from scenes about blind dating shows and the girl scouts, the audience enjoyed the student-run performance. There were both live showings of the sketches and shorter pre-recorded episodes put on display at the Humanities Center Theatre on campus. The young and

Will the state's big Medi-Cal plan really fix mental health care for low-income Californians?

JOCELYN WIENER AND KRISTEN HWANG
Special to the Daily Press

A year has passed since a massive statewide effort called CalAIM began rolling out. Among several significant changes CalAIM promised: An overhaul of the availability of mental health care for young people insured by Medi-Cal, the public insurance program for low-income Californians.

Advocates for youth mental health say they remain enthusiastic about CalAIM's potential, using words like "game-changing" and "transformational."

But they also say the new framework is being born at a tricky time. Three years into the pandemic, provider burnout and escalating patient need have combined to create a severe mental health workforce shortage. Meanwhile, community-based organizations that provide many of the mental health services outlined under CalAIM say they feel left out of the loop in important conversations about coming payment reforms.

Gov. Gavin Newsom's budget proposal — which would delay certain behavioral health investments to combat a projected $22 billion deficit — also risks hampering progress for CalAIM.

"Our members are really panicked right now," said Adrienne Shilton, director of public policy for the nonprofit California Alliance of Child and Family Services. In September 2022, hers was one of a dozen organizations that signed a letter to the state Department of Health Care Services expressing concerns about a lack of transparency around the new rate structure. "Providers must have the ability to plan and prepare alongside their county partners," it said.

Shilton's organization also co-authored a letter Wednesday to legislators, decrying the proposed budget delays.

Shilton told CalMatters earlier that other issues CalAIM is meant to address, including alleviating burdensome documentation requirements, have yet to change the on-the-ground reality for many providers.

CalAIM is about much more than mental health. The initiative, short for California Advancing and Innovating Medi-Cal, is a five-year plan that began rolling out a year ago. It aims to provide children and adults insured by Medi-Cal with better access to a range of health and mental health services. It also strives to use a "whole person care" approach to address social issues that impact health, including housing and food insecurity.

It also redesigns the payment system to more seamlessly integrate the county mental health plans and managed care organizations that pay for those services.

The relevance and urgency of addressing children's mental health is especially clear:

Grand Jury Charges Hairstylist and Actress for Alleged Multimillion-Dollar Caregiver Fraud Scheme Against Malibu-Based Physician

A Fresno hairstylist and an actress have been charged in a 12-count indictment alleging they defrauded a physician out of more than $2.7 million before his death and then attempted to defraud his estate out of an additional amount exceeding $20 million, the Justice Department announced today.

Anthony David Flores, 46, a.k.a. "Anton David," of Fresno, was arrested last week in Fresno by federal agents. He has pleaded not guilty to the charges against him and is scheduled for a detention hearing on February 10 in the Eastern District of California.

His co-defendant, Anna Rene Moore, 39, an actress and former yoga studio owner who currently resides in Monterrey, Mexico, was arrested Tuesday in Houston upon arrival on a flight from Mexico. She made her initial appearance in the Southern District of Texas. Both defendants are expected to appear in Los Angeles federal court in the coming weeks.

Flores and Moore are each charged with one count of conspiracy to commit wire fraud and mail fraud, one count of aggravated identity theft, two counts of wire fraud, two counts of mail fraud, one count of conspiracy to engage in money laundering, two counts of money laundering, and one count of engaging in a monetary transaction in criminally derived property.

According to the indictment, beginning in June 2017, Flores and Moore used false promises and representations to befriend the victim — a physician and successful investor worth more than $60 million, but who suffered from a mental illness and lost the ability to care for himself. Within days of meeting the victim, Flores and Moore moved into the victim's beachfront Malibu home – rent free – and slowly took control of his life by pretending to be his new "best friends" and caregivers.

In September 2017, after the victim suffered a severe mental breakdown resulting in his arrest and detention in Los Angeles County jail, Flores allegedly fraudulently induced the victim to sign powers of attorney granting Flores control over the victim's finances.

Flores allegedly represented that he would only use these powers to access the victim's finances to post bail for release, and that he would immediately rescind them once the victim was free from jail. But after the victim was released from custody, Flores allegedly reneged on this promise and used these powers to open bank accounts in the victim's name, giving himself and Moore access to the victim's wealth.

From September 2017 to May 2018, Flores and Moore allegedly diverted the victim's funds to their own bank accounts, isolated the victim from his family and longtime friends and provided the victim with drugs, including marijuana and LSD.

In the final days of the victim's life, Flores and Moore allegedly gave the victim LSD, which caused his mental state to severely deteriorate. While the victim was under the influence of LSD, Flores allegedly changed the two-step authentication feature on the victim's $60-million online brokerage account after previously changing the phone number listed on the account from the victim's phone number to his own phone number.

Four days before the victim's death and while the victim was still under the influence of LSD that defendants allegedly had provided to him, Flores then allegedly initiated two $1-million wires from the victim's brokerage account to accounts that Flores controlled, including Flores' personal bank account. Flores and Moore then left the victim, who by this time was in mental distress and had evicted them from his home. From a luxury hotel paid with the victim's funds, Flores and Moore allegedly watched the victim's deteriorating mental condition on the video cameras installed throughout the Malibu beach house.

In May 2018, the victim died in his Malibu home at the age of 57 years old. Following the victim's death, Flores and Moore moved back into the victim's Malibu beachfront home and allegedly withdrew large sums of money from his accounts. They allegedly also concealed information about the victim's finances from his mother and sister, both of whom resided in Florida. This prompted the victim's family to file a lawsuit, which uncovered the alleged fraud.

In the ensuing lawsuit in Los Angeles Superior Court, Flores and Moore allegedly violated multiple court orders ordering them to return the funds stolen from the victim. They allegedly attempted to launder the fraudulent proceeds by funneling the money through multiple different accounts to thwart the victim's estate and court-appointed receiver from recouping the money. The lawsuit was settled with Flores and Moore agreeing to repay the victim's estate $1 million, which they have so far failed to do.

An indictment contains allegations that a defendant has committed a crime. Every defendant is presumed innocent until and unless proven guilty beyond a reasonable doubt.

If convicted on all counts, Flores and Moore would face statutory maximum sentences of 20 years in prison for each fraud count, 20 years on the conspiracy to commit money laundering and laundering of monetary instruments counts, 10 years on transactional money laundering count, and a mandatory two-year prison sentence for the aggravated identity theft count.

The FBI and IRS Criminal Investigation investigated this matter.

Assistant United States Attorney Andrew M. Roach of the Cyber and Intellectual Property Crimes Section is prosecuting this case.

Alphabet Posts Lower Q4 Profit Amid Ad Squeeze,Competition

Google's parent company Alphabet on Thursday posted lower profit and a small revenue increase for last year's fourth quarter, as a decline in online ad spending and competition from rivals weigh on the search giant.

While overall revenue grew, advertising revenue fell by nearly 4% and revenue at YouTube declined 8% year-over-year. That appeared to spook investors, who sent the company's stock lower in after-hours trading.

The company based in Mountain View, California, said it earned $13.62 billion, or $1.05 per share, in the October-December quarter. That's down 34% from $20.64 billion, or $1.53 per share, in the same period a year earlier.

Revenue inched 1% higher to $76.05 billion from $75.33 billion.

Analysts expected Alphabet to post earnings of $1.18 per share on revenue of $76.2 billion for period, according to FactSet Research.

Alphabet, like Facebook parent Meta, Amazon and other tech companies, is navigating a rough economic patch that's especially hurting the online advertising market.

Last month, Alphabet announced it was cutting 12,000 jobs, or about 6% of its workforce. It was the company's biggest-yet round of layoffs and adds to tens of thousands of other job losses recently announced by Microsoft, Amazon, Meta and other tech companies that are tightening their belts in the face of a darkening outlook for the industry.

Alphabet is contending with a "challenging" economic climate and is working to reengineer its cost structure to build "financially sustainable, vibrant growing businesses" across the company, CEO Sundar Pichai said.

"Our long-term investments in deep computer science make us extremely well-positioned as AI reaches an inflection point, and I'm excited by the AI-driven leaps we're about to unveil in search and beyond," Pichai said in a statement.

Google is facing some competition in artificial intelligence from Microsoft, which last month announced it is making a "multiyear, multibillion dollar investment" in the artificial intelligence startup OpenAI, the maker of the wildly popular ChatGPT and other tools that can write readable text and generate new images.

The technology could help Microsoft's own search engine, Bing, compete with Google in answering search queries with more complete answers instead of just links.

Pichai also touted "great momentum" in Cloud, YouTube subscriptions, and Pixel devices, signaling to investors that Alphabet has plenty revenue sources outside of advertising to grow its business.

Nonetheless, advertising still makes up the bulk of Alphabet's revenue.

Shares in Alphabet Inc. fell $4.55, or 4.2%, to $103.19 in extended trading.

Apple Suffers 1st Quarterly Sales Decline in Nearly 4 Years

Apple on Thursday posted its first quarterly revenue drop in nearly four years after pandemic-driven restrictions on its China factories curtailed sales of the latest iPhone during the holiday season.

The company's sales of $117 billion for the October-December period represented a 5% decline from the same time in the previous year, a deeper downturn than analysts had projected.

It marks Apple's first year-over-year decrease in quarterly revenue since the January-March period in 2019 when sales also slipped 5% amid slowing iPhone demand and the fallout of a trade war with China that was being waged by then-President Donald Trump.

Apple's profit also eroded during the past quarter, even though the Cupertino, California, company remained a pillar of prosperity. Earnings totaled $30 billion, or $1.88 per share, a 13 decrease from the same time in the previous year. Those results also missed a target of $1.94 per share set by analysts polled by FactSet Research.

Investors reacted to the letdown by driving down Apple's stock by nearly 5% in Thursday's extended trading. That reversed a recent rally that had recently lifted Apple's shares, which lost more than a quarter of their value last year amid a broad slump in technology stocks.

Despite the quarterly downturn in its fortunes. Apple hasn't signaled any intention to resort to mass layoffs — a stark contrast to its peers in technology. Industry giants Alphabet, Microsoft, Amazon and Meta Platforms have announced plans to jettison more than a combined 50,000 employees as they adjust to revenue slowdowns or downturns caused by people's lessening dependence on the digital realm as the pandemic has eased.

Apple CEO Tim Cook had also braced investors for tougher sledding in late October when he warned of "increasingly difficult economic conditions" heading into the holiday season. Then, just a few days later, Apple cautioned that China's attempts to clamp down on the spread of COVID was affecting its production lines and would prevent meeting all the demand for the premium iPhone 14 models during the holidays.

That contributed to an 8% decrease in iPhone sales from the previous year to $65.8 billion in the most recent quarter.

Don't Like Phil's Forecast? Check Out These Rodents Instead

He gets most of the PR, at least nationally, but Punxsutawney Phil isn't the only groundhog to purport to predict the weather. Not hardly. From Staten Island Chuck in New York City to Jimmy the Groundhog in Wisconsin, there are a lot of them. And their predictions, which of course is a generous term, can be all over the map just as they are. And please do remember Charlotte, a groundhog who died in 2014 a week after the New York City mayor dropped her during festivities.

Rodents predicting weather trends. Why?

Just as fair a Groundhog Day question, though, is this: Why not? And more importantly, why should Punxsutawney Phil always get to, well, hog the press?

The spring-heralding (or spring-delaying) small animal has taken firm root in some swaths of American culture. And while Phil and his Pennsylvania ilk are the most celebrated, there is an astonishingly broad selection of other critters who have felt the need (or, at least, their handlers have) to put reputations on the line to "predict" meteorology in the dead of winter. Here we offer just a few.

Before we take a look, pause for a moment to remember one particular groundhog of yore — Charlotte, a stand-in for Staten Island Chuck in 2014. She predicted six more weeks before being famously dropped by then-New York City Mayor Bill DeBlasio and dying a week later.

Do take aboard a disclaimer, though. This is merely a smattering of groundhoggery, offered up in no particular order. Please don't be offended if your animal isn't included. Maybe next year.

JIMMY THE GROUNDHOG, Wisconsin: Caused controversy in 2015 after biting the mayor of Sun Prairie on the ear.

MILLTOWN MEL, New Jersey: Event got caught up in problems with state law this year after the previous prognosticator expired.

WOODY THE WOODCHUCK, Michigan: Emerged from a tiny green door in a small, human-made tree stump on Thursday.

WOODSTOCK WILLIE, Illinois. Saw his shadow Thursday. Site of where the best-ever PR around the day — the 1993 movie "Groundhog Day" — was filmed.

OCTORARO ORPHIE, Pennsylvania: Predicts from a home base in Quarryville in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania. Because of Pennsylvania Dutch folklore, which helped give birth to the Groundhog Day tradition, that region has several on the job, including Mount Joy Minnie and Dover Doug.

STATEN ISLAND CHUCK, New York: Longtime predictor in the New York City borough. This year, the current mayor didn't attend.

BUCKEYE CHUCK, Ohio: Another Chuck, this one further inland. This year, according to reports, the Chuck used publicly was a stuffed one after an animal-rights group objected to how a live one had been treated.

GEN. BEAUREGARD LEE, Georgia: Claims high accuracy rate. Contradicted Phil this year.

Why California's well-intentioned PAGA labor law needs reform

BY JENNIFER BARRERA

Eight billion dollars. That's the amount of money trial attorneys have leveraged from California employers over the last six years in Private Attorneys General Act settlements.

Employees rarely see that money, though. They generally take home a minimum amount while attorneys keep hundreds of thousands of dollars for themselves.

The Labor Commissioner's office agrees. In a 2019-20 budget disclosure, the agency noted that "the substantial majority of proposed private court settlements in PAGA cases reviewed by the (PAGA) Unit fell short of protecting the interests of the state and workers."

So why does the California Legislature continue to defend this law?

In simple terms, PAGA is an 18-year-old law that allows aggrieved workers to file any labor code violation claims on behalf of a group of employees – even if no one has been harmed. Since it is not classified as a class action, they avoid class certification rules.

However well-intentioned, PAGA has evolved into an easy way for trial lawyers to shakedown businesses at the expense of workers and their employers.

State data shows that it's taking much longer for workers' claims to be resolved by trial lawyers than when it's handled by the independent Labor Commissioner's office. Wage claim cases should be timely since many employees are working paycheck to paycheck and can't afford to wait two or more years for a wage claim.

More than a third of all settlements go directly to the attorneys, who sometimes walk away with millions, while workers end up making substantially less.

PAGA-related court cases drag out for years and are extremely costly, especially for small mom-and-pop businesses and nonprofits. Even good-faith employers who haven't harmed their employees or improperly paid them are losing millions of dollars because it is easier and oftentimes less expensive for businesses to settle.

The easy incentive for trial lawyers to slap a PAGA claim on their labor-related cases has turned PAGA into a cash cow rather than a tool to hold employers accountable for violating workers' rights. Several unions have even sought carve-

Police: 'High chance' of Hollywood mass shooting prevented

STEFANIE DAZIO
Associated Press

A "high chance" of a mass shooting in Hollywood has been thwarted by police seizing a cache of guns and ammunition in a high-rise apartment where several rifles were pointed toward a nearby park, the Los Angeles Police Department said.

Braxton Johnson was taken into custody Tuesday after he allegedly made violent threats involving weapons to security staff at the apartment building and people outside, the agency said Wednesday.

> From what we're seeing right now, there's a high chance that the officers — and obviously security staff and the people who called — prevented a mass shooting from happening
> - Leonid Tsap LAPD Lt.

Police searched Johnson's apartment and found two assault rifles and high-capacity ammunition magazines, all of which are illegal in California, as well as three handguns, a sniper rifle, a shotgun and more than 1,000 rounds of ammunition.

Investigators have not said whether they uncovered any additional evidence of a plot to target the park, or Johnson's motive in pointing the rifles toward the area. Details about the threats authorities say he made Tuesday have not been released.

"From what we're seeing right now, there's a high chance that the officers — and obviously security staff and the people who called — prevented a mass shooting from happening," LAPD Lt. Leonid Tsap said Wednesday during a news conference.

Authorities have not identified the park, but online maps show a dog park next to the apartment complex where Johnson lived. The apartment's management company referred media inquiries to police.

The cache of guns and their setup in the high-rise apartment were reminiscent of a 2017 massacre in Las Vegas, where the gunman fired 1,057 bullets from the 32nd floor of the Mandalay Bay resort in the deadliest mass shooting in modern U.S. history. He killed 58 people below the hotel who were enjoying an outdoor country music festival on the Las Vegas Strip.

Johnson, 25, remained jailed Thursday on suspicion of making criminal threats. His bail was set at $500,000. It was not immediately clear whether he had an attorney who could speak on his behalf.

The district attorney's office is reviewing the case for potential charges.

Officers answered a report of a possible mental health situation Tuesday morning and went to the building on Gordon Street at Sunset Boulevard, an LAPD statement said.

Johnson was living alone in an apartment building on the 18th floor with large windows that offer an "unobstructed view of a park and a public area downstairs, and some of the rifles were pointed outside the windows," Tsap said.

While Johnson was unarmed when he was taken into custody, Tsap said the weapons seized had "the ability to inflict a lot of damage to a lot of people."

Johnson had recently moved into the apartment. He already was under investigation in a state on the East Coast for a violent crime, police said. They didn't immediately share other details.

Associated Press writer Robert Jablon in Los Angeles and Researcher Rhonda Shafner in New York contributed to this report.

outs because they recognize that PAGA puts "enormous pressure on employers to settle claims regardless of the validity of those claims," as one bill author puts it.

California voters will have the option to reform this law with the California Fair Pay and Accountability Act initiative on the 2024 ballot. The measure would place wage and hour claims back into the hands of California's independent regulator, giving workers 100% of penalty payments and protecting their access to the courts if employees were unsatisfied with the regulator's decision.

In the meantime, the Legislature could do more to improve the enforcement of the labor code and investigations of wage and hour violations. The number of vacancies in the Labor Commissioner's office makes it clear that they need better tools to hire more staff among other ways to help speed up the ruling process. That means properly funding and outfitting the department.

That is a solution everyone can support, and those positions are funded by employers, not taxpayers.

The numbers don't lie. PAGA is making trial lawyers exorbitant amounts of money while leaving very little for workers and doing nothing to ensure businesses are complying with the labor code. California can bolster enforcement, stop shakedowns and improve the recovery process for harmed workers.

fresh, and bring it in, store it themselves and put it together," he said at a Feb. 2 DTSM meeting. "We're looking at kind of like a one stop shop, potentially, that can do everything."

He said this would save DTSM the trouble of putting the equipment in storage which can be costly and results in damage.

"We pay for the storage of all of that equipment, everything – the boards, the rink, the zamboni – all of that stuff was purchased several years ago and hadn't been used over the past three years, obviously, because of the pandemic," Mongarro said. "So, a lot of it was left in storage in our location in Riverside County, so some of it was damaged just by heat, and cold and things along those lines."

While he said some of the equipment is "beyond repair," DTSM has identified several prospective buyers interested in purchasing the rest. He said he has also been in communication with vendors to determine whether this new approach would make sense financially.

"This is very much in the preliminary stages at this point," Mongarro said. "I've reached out to vendors, we're going to be getting their proposals and then we'll be comparing it to the numbers that we had this year to see how they compare."

> "This is very much in the preliminary stages at this point
> - Richard Mongarro DTSM Director of Operations

If DTSM does decide to proceed with the consolidated, single vendor route, the next step in the process is to put out an official Request for Proposals (RFP) – which Mongarro said they hope to do by the end of March with the goal of choosing a vendor by April.

DTSM is also in the process of identifying a new vendor for the corner of Ocean Avenue and Colorado Boulevard (across from the pier bridge) which was previously occupied by The Lobby food truck. Mongarro said DTSM plans to work with the City to make a decision for that site by March 1.

COMEDY

talented cast were pleased with their night.

Titus Auger, an actor in numerous skits said "Things went very well. I'm proud of the performance everyone put on. It was great."

Scene writer Lara Hunter said, "I think things went very well. I'm happy with the amount of laughs we got."

Meadows was also very satisfied with the performance of Samohi's actors and actresses.

"I thought the show went very well! I was very happy to see such a large turnout of students, friends, family and staff. I really wanted the writers and actors to experience a large reaction from an audience and the crowd did just that" said Meadows.

Being an actor, comedian, and writer, Meadows is known for his long-time work on Saturday Night Live, receiving a nomination for the Primetime Emmy Award for Outstanding Writing for a Variety Series. Starting his career with performing improvisational comedy, he has continued to work with humor in his acting many times, starring in Mean Girls, Coneheads and more.

Holding comedy near to his heart, Meadows said, "Comedy needs an audience. I thought that Ms. Barraza did an excellent job at directing and staging the scenes. The actors really committed to their performances. I am so proud of them and happy that they had fun!"

Meadows began working with students via Zoom before Thanksgiving Break and the students pitch scene ideas to him. Students worked with Meadows on several drafts before casting began after Winter Break.

"I basically explained to them how to write sketches by showing them examples and explaining some of the basic rules of comedy and improvisation that they see when watching a show like SNL or 'I Think You Should Leave' on Netflix, we then took their ideas and found the best way to express that through a comedy scene. It was a lot for them to take in, that's why I was so happy with their show. We met several times to rewrite their scenes." said Meadows.

While Meadows said he doesn't find anything hard about acting, he finds the payoff very rewarding.

"The show is the best part. Seeing an audience laugh at something that was in your head a few days ago is pretty fire," said Meadows.

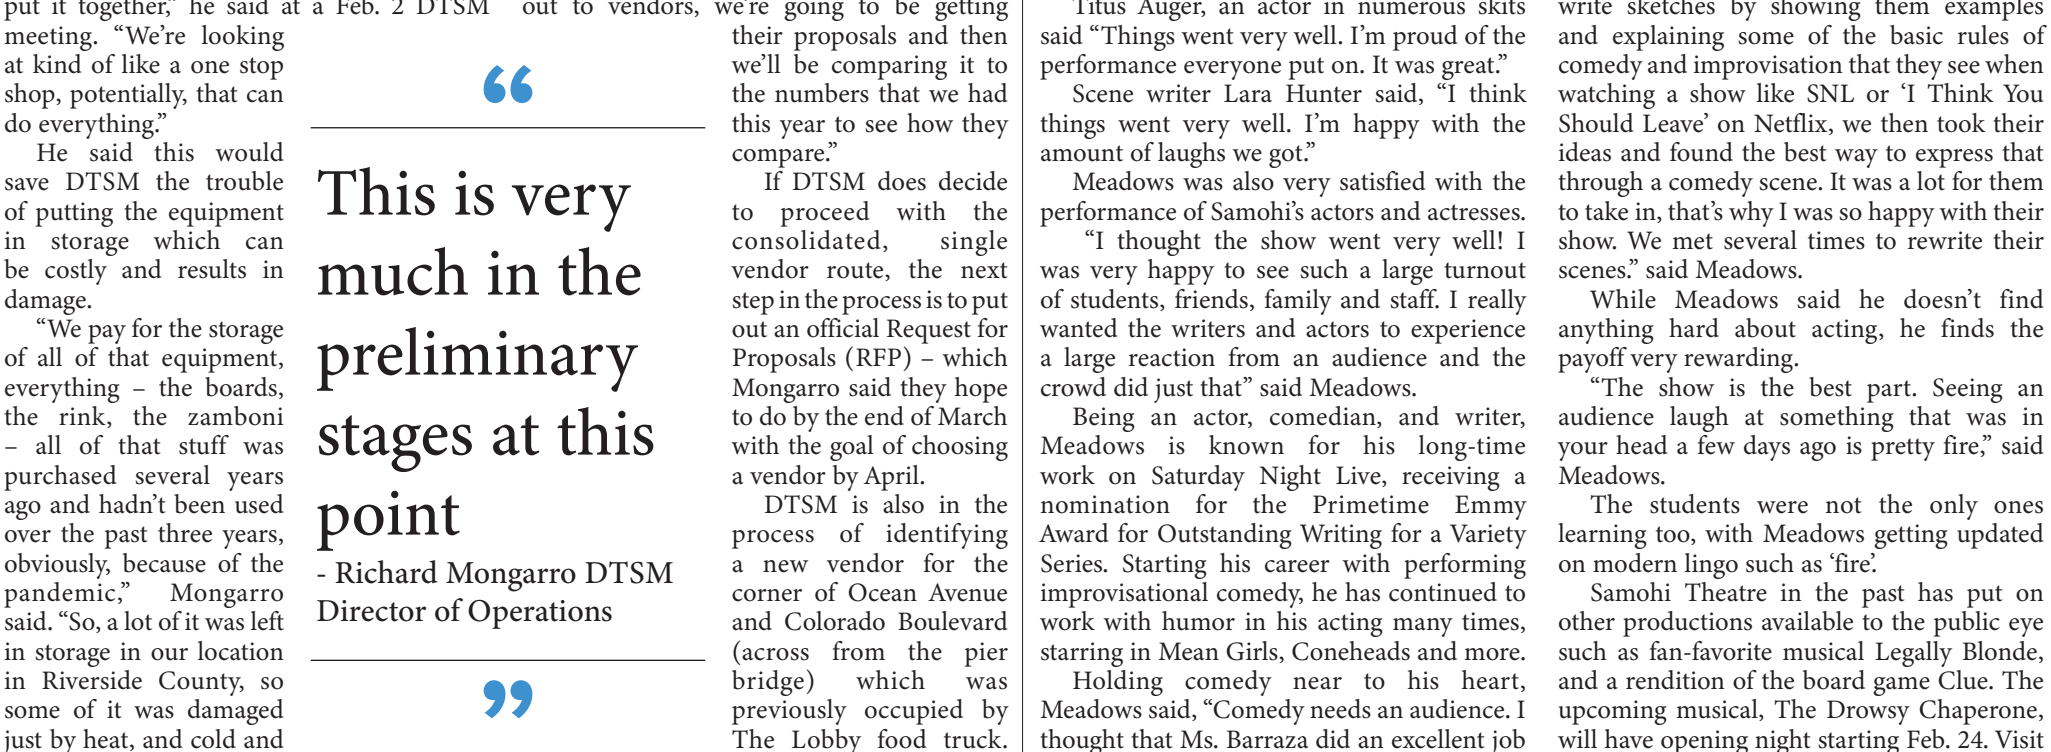

The students were not the only ones learning too, with Meadows getting updated on modern lingo such as 'fire'.

Samohi Theatre in the past has put on other productions available to the public eye such as fan-favorite musical Legally Blonde, and a rendition of the board game Clue. The upcoming musical, The Drowsy Chaperone, will have opening night starting Feb. 24. Visit https://www.samohitheatre.org/ for more information.

MEDI-CAL

Racism. School closures. Online bullying. Climate disaster. A pandemic pocked with grief, loss and fear.

All of these factors have aggravated a youth mental health crisis that's been raging for more than a decade. Incidence of self-harm for young people, which increased dramatically even before the pandemic, has spiked further in the past few years.

CalAIM has not yet significantly shifted the on-the-ground reality for many of these young people, experts say, but a number of important policy changes are officially underway:

About 40% of the state's children and youth are insured by Medi-Cal. They no longer need a formal diagnosis to access specialty mental health services.

The state has simplified behavioral health documentation requirements.

A "No Wrong Door Policy" should make it easier for children and adults to receive behavioral health care no matter where they enter the system, replacing what can feel like a bureaucratic maze that varies by county.

An "enhanced care management" benefit provides services and case management to members of priority populations, including those who are homeless, experiencing early psychosis or involved with the child welfare or criminal justice systems.

Other efforts, including changing the way mental health services are paid for, are also rolling out this year.

Newsom's administration, which early on made behavioral health a signature issue, is simultaneously unveiling several other ambitious initiatives, all of which require additional staffing and funding: a statewide program to set up new court systems to address the needs of people with severe mental illness, known as CARE Court; expanded crisis response services through state funding for a 988 hotline; and a major initiative to improve mental health care for children and youth, parts of which will be affected by the proposed budget delays.

Despite belt-tightening in other areas of the governor's proposed January budget, CalAIM continues to be funded. Newsom's proposal would dedicate more than $10 billion to CalAIM implementation, including $6.1 billion over five years to improve local treatment services and pay for short-term stays in treatment facilities for people with serious mental and behavioral health illnesses.

"We're committed. We're not touching that," he said in a press conference earlier this month.

The budget proposal does, however, delay more than $1.1 billion in other behavioral health investments over the next two years, including money intended to increase treatment capacity for adults and kids in crisis, and money for workforce development. These investments were intended in part to shore up CalAIM's goals, according to state documents.

"We're concerned about the delays," Shilton said. "This is funding outside of CalAIM but … the system is so stressed. Having this additional investment from the state was really beneficial."

The governor's office did not respond to questions about the proposed funding delays. He will revise his budget proposal in May, based on actual state revenue, and hammer out a final funding deal with legislators in June.

While CalAIM is an important step toward meeting the mental health needs of vulnerable young people, experts say staffing shortages, especially, are complicating the picture. As a result, some say, it's not yet clear how and when official policy changes will translate into better mental health treatment for individuals. The proposed budget would delay nearly $400 million for health care workforce training, including some social work and behavioral health pipeline programs.

"Where are the people who are going to be delivering these services?" Shilton said.

Michelle Cabrera, executive director of the County Behavioral Health Directors Association, calls CalAIM "an uber-ambitious reform agenda that's sitting on top of a system that's really been through the storm."

Counties are being asked to implement "ambitious, sweeping new reforms on top of the worst workforce crisis we've ever seen," she said.

In an emailed response to CalMatters, the Department of Health Care Services said the Newsom administration is committed to "collaborating closely" with counties, health plans and others to plan, implement, and monitor the various "unprecedented and intersecting initiatives."

Still, community-based organizations that contract with counties and managed care organizations to provide mental health services say they are worried about the payment they will receive for their services and how that could affect their ability to recruit and retain necessary staff.

Jodi Kurata, chief executive officer of the Association of Community Human Service Agencies, which represents nonprofit organizations in Los Angeles, said the groups she works with are too overwhelmed dealing with workforce shortages to focus on the administrative transformation underway.

"The system right now is just so depleted," she said.

She said she worries that inadequate rates could lead to a further exodus of nonprofit mental health providers from the Medi-Cal system, a concern others have echoed.

The state says a preliminary draft of revised payment rates has been shared with counties. The Department of Health Care Services said it has committed to publishing a fee schedule in the first few months of this year.

Cabrera, of the County Behavioral Health Directors Association, said CalAIM's new payment structure marks an important shift in that the state will now allow counties to pay providers without being capped, and will remove many burdensome documentation requirements. She said counties are just now seeing the new rates, and that the administration's "aggressive" timeline will likely lead to a "bumpy ride this year" before ultimately resulting in a positive change.

WHEN CARE DEPENDS ON YOUR COUNTY

Other longstanding funding problems remain unaddressed. This past fall, Young Minds Advocacy, a children's mental health advocacy organization, published a report showing that longstanding variability in the way the state funds county specialty mental health services has translated into disparities in the kinds of intensive care offered to young Medi-Cal enrollees.

For decades, said Patrick Gardner, an attorney who founded the advocacy organization, the state has underfunded certain counties "and their performance has suffered accordingly, sometimes pretty dramatically."

In his report, Gardner found that counties with significantly lower-than-average state funding generally provided young people with less intensive services than counties with significantly higher-than-average state funding. According to his report, in 2019-20, poorly funded San Joaquin and Madera counties provided just 16% and 17% of the estimated need for care, while the better-funded Santa Clara and Butte counties provided 86%.

While CalAIM is moving "in the right direction," Gardner said, it fails to address this fundamental issue. (Cabrera contends that the analysis fails to capture the services that counties provide without billing Medi-Cal.)

Despite these concerns, many mental health advocates say they are already witnessing important changes to the way care is delivered under CalAIM.

"We are seeing shifts happening already," said Leticia Galyean, CEO and president of Seneca Family of Agencies. She said her organization — which serves youth and families in 14 counties — is especially seeing "an immediate benefit" in terms of faster access to specialty mental health care for foster youth, homeless youth and those involved in the juvenile justice system.

Brian Blalock, a senior staff attorney at the Youth Law Center, which advocates for youth in the child welfare and juvenile justice systems, called CalAIM "the most important thing California has done in a long time."

"There's just tremendous opportunity there," he said.

Now, he added, "we as a state can go in either direction — either we realize that promise, or we let this pass us by."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Feb. 3)

Social flow is your forte. You have a sense for what people want and what they're avoiding, and you use this to create satisfying interactions and thriving relationships of all kinds. You'll make money shaping an experience for others. More highlights: a reunion, fortuitous record-keeping and fascinating moments. Cancer and Capricorn adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 15, 8, 12, 6 and 11.

HOROSCOPES

ARIES (March 21-April 19). When you feel like you're not quite getting the attention, respect or remuneration you're due, it's an opportunity to step up and a chance to refine the skills and techniques that help you attain greater influence over your world.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Deep inside, you know who you are and what you want. But distractions make you forget. When you lose the thread, look inward. Get still and reflect on the core of your being.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). To live in the world is to accept premises all day long. To accept every premise thrown at you would lead to a puppet's life of following a script you didn't write. Today you'll question everything and be better for it.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). You realize that what stands between you and what you want is a habit that is either hard to quit or hard to form. But you are capable of doing either. Much depends on tinkering that first, small move that leads to the bigger ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Because of the negativity bias humans have evolved to, it's probably not your first instinct to look on the bright side. Still, you can guide and train yourself to positivity. Optimism needs to be planned for. Employ environmental cues.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). One definition of trauma is "unprocessed feelings." There's a chance it's not all uncomfortable or painful feelings. There's a chance it all can be handled quickly and gracefully with someone who knows how. It's time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You can avoid mistakes by taking a step back to ask if the job, system or personal agenda before you is in alignment with your own. It will keep you from getting hemmed into a situation you can't get out of without a seam ripper.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). The perfectionist will want to win today, but there is no prize! The perfectionist will never be totally happy because nothing is ever totally perfect. When it's good enough, say so and step on.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Is the thing you like also good for you? Anything can be harmful in the wrong dosage, but some things are harmful in any dosage and better avoided entirely. You'll have a sense of which you're dealing with.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). People have their favorite laments they will return to again and again for the sweet release of commiseration. You like to let people vent to a degree if there's something to bond over, but not enough to dim your bright mood.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Bundled in with praise and admiration will be requests and expectations. If appreciation obligates you, it's not appreciation so much as manipulation. You shouldn't have to agree to anything to be liked.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). The toll to the future is paid with what you're willing to let go of about the past. You'll love the sensation of moving forward. The traffic frees up and you can finally take the highway at the speed limit.

SURF REPORT

WATER TEMP: 57.2

FRIDAY FAIR	SURF: 2-3ft+ Thigh to stomach	Fresh SSW swell picks up all day. Old NW swell mix eases in the AM, but a stronger WNW swell is expected to build in late. Should be some occ. peaks at beachbreaks and the points are rideable. Favorable conditions look to continue.
SATURDAY FAIR	SURF: 2-3ft Thigh to waist	Looking like a decent combo of swells on paper. Increasing potential for new mid-period WNW swell to peak as SSW swell holds. The best wind window is early, so head for a spot that can handle the deep high tide then.

WEATHER

Friday: Partly sunny, with a high near 65. Northeast wind 5 to 10 mph.
Friday Night: Partly cloudy, with a low around 50. West northwest wind 5 to 10 mph.
Saturday: Sunny, with a high near 66. North wind 5 to 10 mph.
Saturday Night: A 10 percent chance of rain after 4am. Partly cloudy, with a low around 52.
