Muir Woods muralist says painting is irreparable

Brennon Dixson

DISCUSSION: Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District leaders recently held a series of community meetings that were hosted by artist Jane Golden to discuss the future of the Muir Woods Mural.

BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

The fate of the John Muir Woods mural has yet to be officially decided by leaders of the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District, but artist Jane Golden said during a series of recent community meetings that the piece is irreparable and must be replaced.

Concerns of erosion, lead paint and environmental hazards first sparked a conversation about the future of the mural a few months ago, but multiple residents appeared at an SMMUSD board meeting to share why they feel the mural should be saved. As a result, the school district invited the artist of the decades-old mural to host a series of meetings last week, which sought to allow anybody with an opinion the opportunity to share it.

After the completion of the three meetings, Golden said in an interview Sunday her team heard a variety of opinions and the school district has a grand opportunity on its hands.

"Overwhelmingly, we heard that people really love the (Muir Woods) mural, which is very nice to hear because I think it's always great when people have an attachment to public art… But we also heard from students that they would like something different and would like their voices to be heard since it's very hard for them to attach to what is now a deteriorating mural," Golden said.

She said members of the community felt it was very important to hear from student voices and take into account that the school is now named after Michelle and Barack Obama and not John Muir.

Two weekend deaths in unrelated cases

Police officers responded to a pair of deaths this weekend with a suicide downtown and a traffic accident on Lincoln Boulevard

A driver struck a pedestrian who fell from the curb on Lincoln Saturday morning, police said.

The driver was traveling north on Lincoln when a pedestrian on the curb fell into the road and was struck near Ocean Park Boulevard at about 7:10 a.m. according to the Santa Monica Police Department. Captain Candice Cobarrubias said the pedestrian, a 35-year-old Asian man, sustained major head trauma and died while being transported to the hospital. The driver stopped and remained on-scene, she added.

"The investigation is still ongoing to see what would cause the pedestrian to go into the roadway," Cobarrubias said.

SMPD has not yet released the name of the victim.

A second man died Sunday morning after jumping from a parking structure in downtown Santa Monica, police said.

A white man in his late 40s to early 50s jumped from Parking Structure 2 at 1235 2nd St. at about 10 a.m. Sunday, according to Cobarrubias. She said he had no identification on his person.

Cobarrubias said officers responded to reports of a suicide at

Drug offenders diverted from jail under new program

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

For the past five weeks, individuals arrested in Santa Monica on nonviolent drug charges have had the option to enter substance abuse treatment before facing a judge.

The Joint Outreach and Linkage to Treatment, or JOLT program, allows individuals in Santa Monica Police Department custody to immediately start a month-long course of treatment at a local addiction center before appearing in court. The city of Santa Monica is funding the program in the hopes that meaningful treatment will divert low-level drug offenders away from the criminal justice system.

Snubbing Iowa, Bloomberg charts his own path in 2020 contest

MICHAEL R. BLOOD
Associated Press

IOWA? WHO CARES.

On the day the 2020 presidential election kicks off with the Iowa caucuses, Michael Bloomberg was half a continent and a leap of faith away in California, where the Democratic candidate sought to bring attention to a campaign that has forsworn early voting states and anchored its ambitions to California, Texas and other delegate-rich battlegrounds to come.

The billionaire former New York City mayor took to the air in a chartered jet Monday, with a retinue of reporters and TV cameras in tow, and touched down around the state to remind voters that California's election, like Iowa's, is underway.

Early voting in the nation's most populous state begins Monday for the March 3 primary election. It is Bloomberg's fourth trip to the state as a candidate.

His first stop was at a coffee shop in Sacramento, the state capital, where in somewhat rambling remarks he encouraged supporters to get out and vote. He later landed in Fresno, in the heart of the farm belt, for an outdoor rally with Latino voters, and afterward was scheduled to head to Compton, the Los Angeles-area city known as the West Coast capital of hip-hop, where he planned to launch a national bus tour for surrogates and supporters.

Joe Biden says democracy begins in Iowa, but Bloomberg told supporters the path to the White House runs through California.

"I'm not running against the other Democratic candidates. I'm running against Donald Trump," Bloomberg said at the low-key appearance in Sacramento, speaking on a stage with a U.S. flag backdrop and "Vote early" posters. "We are going to win this."

In the crowd was retiree Ruth Holton-Hodson, a Democrat from Sacramento who is leaning toward Bloomberg as the most likely choice to defeat Trump. But she said she worries his skip-Iowa plan could alienate voters, who would see a wealthy candidate making his own rules.

"I think it will turn people off," she said.

Nearby, wearing an "I like Mike" sweatshirt, Colorado student Myles Hammond said he was wavering in his decision but is closely focused on Bloomberg and Bernie Sanders. Hammond, who was in Sacramento for a graduate school interview, said he is drawn to the former mayor's push for gun control but also likes Sanders' strong connection with young voters. However, he worries the Vermont senator's progressive agenda might drive off middle-ground voters.

"I don't know if it would push some independent voters away," Hammond said of Sanders. He wasn't sure if Bloomberg's unusual strategy of skipping Iowa would work but said he might have "a better chance" focusing on a large state like California.

Bloomberg's trip amounted to a carefully planned sideshow to the crescendo of campaigning in Iowa, where the crowded and shifting Democratic field headed toward an uncertain finish in Monday's caucuses.

It's unusual, but not unprecedented, for a candidate to turn away from Iowa, the time-honored launching pad for presidential candidates. It's similar to a presidential campaign strategy deployed in 2008 by another former New York City mayor, Rudy Giuliani, who was an early dropout in a year when John McCain become the eventual Republican nominee.

The day of campaigning provided a window into Bloomberg's broader strategy. Financed by his unrivaled personal wealth, he is largely going his own way to secure the nomination to challenge Trump.

But in embracing his conspicuous absence in Iowa, it highlighted the risk: How to stay relevant when you are competing outside the usual playing field of tradition-bound early contests like Iowa, New Hampshire, Nevada and South Carolina?

In Sacramento, Bloomberg said he was planning to enter the Iowa race when he began considering a presidential run, then decided not to become a candidate. When he reconsidered and got in the 2020 race, "it was too late to get in" the Iowa contest, he said.

Later in Fresno, Bloomberg put in a pitch for tougher gun regulation, one of his signature issues. He lamented how disagreements in America too often end in violent deaths. If elected, he promised "gun safety will be at the top of my agenda," he said.

Visiting a region with a large Hispanic population, he told the crowd, "Latino issues are American issues," earning a round of cheers.

No presidential contest awards more delegates than the state of California, the Democratic fortress that is home to 1 in 8 Americans. Iowa's caucuses have 41 delegates at stake, but California will award more than 400.

As a candidate, Bloomberg has gone from curio to competitor with an unmatched torrent of TV ads, paired with traditional retail campaigning, that appears to have pushed him up in presidential polling. Still, he remains unknown to many voters.

But in one sign he is gaining traction, he attracted the attention of Trump, who mocked Bloomberg's height in an interview with Fox News Channel's Sean Hannity and accused the former mayor of making a special request for a box to stand on if he qualifies for future presidential debates. Bloomberg's campaign denied the claim.

Bloomberg campaign spokeswoman Julie Wood said Trump was a "pathological liar who lies about everything: his fake hair, his obesity, and his spray-on tan," she said.

"He's not going to bully me," Bloomberg said in Fresno.

The two rival campaigns ran dueling, multimillion-dollar ads during Sunday night's Super Bowl, with both spending an estimated $10 million for 60 seconds of air time, which Trump used to purchase two 30-second spots.

Man in LA high-rise fire died from smoke inhalation, burns

A 19-year-old man who was gravely injured when flames tore through a high-rise apartment tower in Los Angeles last week died from smoke inhalation and burns, the coroner's office said Monday.

Jeremy Bru died Friday evening at a hospital.

"Following examination, the cause of death was certified as complications of smoke inhalation and thermal injuries and the manner of death is accident," said Sarah Ardalani, spokeswoman for the Los Angeles County Department of Medical Examiner-Coroner

Ardalani did not have a city of residence for Bru.

He was among 11 people who were treated after last Wednesday's fire, mostly for smoke inhalation. Seven of them, including a 3-month-old child, were sent to hospitals. There was no updated word on their conditions.

In addition, two firefighters received minor burns as they scrambled to reach the apartment where the blaze began using bottled oxygen, fire officials said.

The cause of the fire at Barrington Plaza is under investigation.

Kobe tribute game 2nd most watched in ESPN NBA history

The Los Angeles Lakers' first game since Kobe Bryant's death was the second-most watched regular-season NBA game on ESPN.

The game Friday against the Portland Trail Blazers averaged 4.41 million viewers. The only telecast to surpass that since ESPN resumed NBA coverage in 2002-03 was a January 2003 game between the Lakers and Houston Rockets that featured the first matchup between Shaquille O'Neal and Yao Ming (4.88 million).

According to Nielsen, the Bryant pregame ceremony averaged 5.23 million viewers. The audience peaked at 6.07 million between 10:45 p.m. and 11 p.m. Eastern, which was the conclusion of the ceremony and the start of the game.

By comparison, a game between Houston and the Denver Nuggets scheduled during a similar time slot last year averaged 1.6 million.

The "Hoop Streams" pregame – which was streamed between 9:30 p.m. and 10 p.m. Eastern – had a record 2.4 million views, according to the network. The show is streamed on ESPN.com and its app as well as Twitter and YouTube.

Staples Center removes the public's massive Kobe Bryant memorial

A massive memorial created by the public outside Staples Center after the death of former Lakers superstar Kobe Bryant was being dismantled Monday, with an official saying some of the items would go to Bryant's widow and other family members.

The cleanup of flowers, balloons, jerseys, stuffed toys and basketballs began at 4 a.m., Staples Center President Lee Zeidman tweeted. A fence was erected around the site to keep the cleanup out of public view.

Fans spontaneously began creating the memorial in a plaza outside the arena as word surfaced that Bryant, his daughter Gianna and seven other people were killed Jan. 26 in a helicopter crash in suburban Calabasas. The memorial kept growing for a week. Personal messages were written on many of the items.

"Truly amazing the outpouring of love from the City of Angels in honor of the 9 who lost their lives 1/26/20," Zeidman said. By midmorning Monday, he said, more than 1,350 basketballs had been boxed up.

Bryant's widow, Vanessa, had requested items, which were to be cataloged and shipped to the family. Flowers will be composted and spread around plants near Staples Center.

Fans were urged to donate to a Bryant foundation rather than bring more gifts and flowers.

Cold front brings damaging winds to Southern California

A cold front with damaging winds caused scattered power outages in Southern California on Monday and sent temperatures plunging from springlike levels just a few days earlier.

A 747 cargo plane taking off from Los Angeles International Airport was damaged when it struck a trash bin that had blown onto the runway around 3 a.m., officials said. Seven people on board were not injured, according to the Los Angeles Fire Department.

Northerly winds topping 50 mph brought down trees and power lines across greater Los Angeles. A gust of 80 mph was recorded at Warm Springs Mountain in the Angeles National Forest, the National Weather Service said.

Daytime temperatures in Los Angeles hovered in the low 60s.

An overnight freeze watch was in effect for some inland areas including the Coachella Valley, beginning at 10 p.m. Monday through 10 a.m. Tuesday.

Winds were expected to weaken throughout the day Monday. Warmer weather was expected to return at midweek.

A record high of 81 degrees was set at LAX on Saturday, surpassing the previous mark of 79 degrees for the day in 1954.

just nor cost-effective, but letting them out isn't either," said City Manager Rick Cole. "We have to do a better job of helping these folks return to self-respect and self-sufficiency, and with the JOLT program, we can help them unlock the potential that every single one of them has."

The program is completely voluntary, but all 18 people who have been offered treatment accepted, said Brian Hardgrave, who oversees many of the city's homeless programs. In the future, he said, the city and police department will evaluate the proportion of participants that complete the program and whether they return to jail.

To be considered eligible for the program, individuals must be in custody for drug possession, possession of drug paraphernalia or being under the influence of a controlled substance, said SMPD Sergeant. Erika Aklufi said. They may also have another type of nonviolent misdemeanor on their record, but cannot participate in the program if they have been charged with the sale or distribution of narcotics, a violent or sexual offense, or a probation or parole violation.

Each week, police offer eligible individuals the opportunity to speak with a counselor at Clare | Matrix, a local addiction treatment center. If they decline, they proceed through the court system or are released from jail with a citation. Individuals who accept are taken directly from jail to Clare | Matrix to be evaluated and signed up for two outpatient group sessions and two Narcotics Anonymous or Alcoholics Anonymous meetings, Hardgrave said.

"That window of motivation can be really tight, so you sometimes lose folks if you ask them to wait a few days," he said.

Participants make their first appearance in court 45 days after their arrest. The judge considers their treatment progress when deciding their punishment, Aklufi said.

Malik Owens, a Clare | Matrix outreach and retention specialist who coordinates the JOLT program, said many participants have been unhoused in Santa Monica for several years and have been arrested a few times each month. A large proportion are dealing with unresolved sexual trauma and mental illness, he said.

"What I've seen is a lot of sexual trauma among males," Owens said. "People don't realize how common that is and how much it has to do with substance abuse."

Owens said the counseling helps participants understand what made them dependent on drugs or alcohol, how addiction changes the brain and behavior, and the first steps toward recovery.

"They start talking about the trauma that caused their homelessness and substance abuse, which they may never have done before," he said. "Understanding the neurological aspect is also really important — when participants grasp the idea of substance abuse being a disease, they approach it in a different way."

Alongside outpatient counseling, Clare | Matrix provides access to a psychiatrist, therapist and case management services that help homeless participants find temporary and permanent housing, health care and employment. Participants have the option to enter residential treatment, but Owens said most opt to stay in local shelters or remain on the streets.

Owens said the program serves as a fork in the road for individuals who have been on a consistently self-destructive path. As participants start to understand the dynamics of substance abuse, they become more willing to seek outside support and plan for the future, he said.

"When someone is facing multiple charges, you actually have more success in bringing this opportunity to them because there's an ultimatum of a kind," Owens said. "As far as getting people off the streets and opening their eyes to a better future, this is probably one of the most influential programs out there."

A Very Arty Weekend - Photos And Sex

David Pisarra

BOOK TALK: The Writers Bloc Presents crowd at Laemmle's Ahrya Fine Arts in Beverly Hills.

This past weekend I truly indulged my aesthetic side with a tour of PHOTO LA at the Barker Hangar. Over 65 galleries and agents came together under the soaring trusses of the 65,000 square foot facility where photographers from around the world and across the ages came to display and share their photography.

The event was widely supported and on Saturday afternoon when I went social butterfly with Santa Monica's unofficial crime scene tour guide Anne Pearson, we had a wonderful time exploring the endeavors of many artists. The range of photography was from classic photo history that covered the train ride home for Robert Kennedy's body and the way the country came out to honor him, to the high art of homo-erotic artists.

Photo LA is a collective of the globe's most creative artists and their new home at the Barker Hanger is a good thing for those of us who live here. Having another large art event like that to draw both exhibitors and tourists in to our city is crucial for us to expand our global base.

I thoroughly enjoyed the well run event, with two minor exceptions. Ticketing was silly. We stood in line to pay $25 for a ticket, programs were available for an additional fee that I refused to pay, we then walked about 3-5 steps and handed the ticket to ticket taker. Literally, the ticket was in my hand for less than 30 seconds. I didn't even have a chance to read it. I glanced at it and noticed that it was a nicely designed and printed ticket, but it was taken away from me, and now I have no memento of the event. As a divorce lawyer who is a slight marketing geek, I find that type of lost opportunity annoying.

The other annoyance was waiting in line for 10 minutes to get a cup of coffee, only to be told that they were out and I'd have to wait another 5-10 minutes. I realize this is a problem of abundance, after all who would wait in line for 10 minutes to buy a $4 cup of basic coffee? But it was enough of an annoyance that I walked away and purchased nothing.

Now for some sex. On Sunday I attended the Writer's Bloc Presents talk hosted by Madeleine Brand of KCRW fame, and Peggy Orenstein the author of "Boys & Sex," the follow up to her previous book, "Girls and Sex". The Ahrya Fine Arts by Laemmle Theaters was the location, and what a grand place it is! Truly this theater is one of the classic old school movie houses and made me wish I'd seen more movies there.

I've listened to Madelaine Brand for years on KCRW, and yet I've never looked her up, so when she came onstage with her casual flair and chestnut shoulder length hair bouncing, I was taken aback. She wasn't what I had pictured from her voice. It's always like that though when I first see a radio voice in person, I had the same experience last month with Steve Inskeep at the Writer's Bloc Presents event at New Roads for his new book, "Imperfect Union: How Jessie and John Frémont Mapped the West, Invented Celebrity, and Helped Cause the Civil War".

Orenstein's book, "Boys And Sex, Young Men On Hookups, Love Porn, Consent And Navigating The New Masculinity", is an exploration into what is happening in today's world. As many of my child custody cases are a result of the way that relationships and families are formed I was very interested in the topic. Orenstein has a delightfully open and casual manner about her and easily discussed some very difficult topics like consent, body image and what's working and what isn't, in today's open society. She described the dynamics of men and women on college campus and how they engage in relationship building, or not building more often than not, with a deep concern and insight into the fragile workings of male ego and societal expectations of women.

The room was I estimate to be about 85% female, which I found disheartening, but not shocking as part of the problem that Orenstein identifies is that men and boys don't know how to have a conversation around sex, and think that they understand it from pornographic sites. I was hoping to see more young men in attendance, but less than a handful were under 20.

Brand's skillful interviewing was demonstrated with probing questions that allowed Orenstein to delve deep into both her stories of collecting the raw data and to share her conclusions extracted from the years long process of writing this book.

I will definitely be buying the book and look forward to reading and further reviewing "Boys & Sex" by Peggy Orenstein. For more events like this I suggest you check out www.writersblocpresents.com

During Friday's small-group session Golden said she met with nearly 20 students and a number of adults who all had a range of opinions, which will be included in a report that Golden and the Mural Arts team will turn over to the district in a month or so.

Projects with themes related to social and environmental justice as well as issues of equity and representation were but a few of the ideas that seemed to bubble up to the top, Golden said. "But what was nice was I thought a lot of the students seemed really interested in art and would absolutely be interested in working on a project themselves," she said.

In a presentation on Thursday night, Golden kickstarted the discussion process by sharing how her Mural Arts team has assisted in similar school projects in Philadelphia and said the district has an opportunity to make the entire school — not simply a single wall — a work of art.

"There are a lot of areas of opportunity that have not been explored. There's the bottom part of the planters that could be incorporated into a mural and there are some small murals in the playground area near the back area of the school that are quite deteriorated," Golden said. "We walked around and took some photos, and I think that there are opportunities for student voices there as well."

Ultimately it's the school district's decision though, Golden said as she described how a team of artists could make the entire school a work of art. "But I know no matter what is decided — and I want to be really clear on this — the wall needs to be completely scraped and the surface needs to be made really strong because painting over what's currently there would shortchange the entire process."

DEATHS

the parking structure and found the man had jumped off the structure into the 2nd Court alley. The county coroner will investigate the death, she said.

The death marks the sixth suicide or suicide attempt in downtown parking structures, which are owned by the city of Santa Monica, since September 2018.

Four individuals died between September 2018 and August 2019, and in September 2019, SMPD officers talked down an individual who planned to jump from the roof of Parking Structure 3.

Three individuals have taken their own lives at the Santa Monica Pier over the past two years, and a man killed himself last month by stepping in front of a Metro E (Expo) Line train downtown.

If you are having thoughts of suicide, call the National Suicide Prevention Lifeline at 1-800-273-8255 (TALK) or go to SpeakingOfSuicide.com/resources for a list of additional resources.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (FEBRUARY 04)

Like trying to take a picture of the moon with your phone, you'll take flights of imagination that can't be aptly captured, but do try! Describe what you see; invent; be creative. Stop buying into the judgment that it's child's play. It is the most important work you'll do! The sky is closer to your head than it has ever been. Aries and Cancer adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 8, 14, 3, 33 and 27.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). Your personal internal operating system is always updating to keep current with advances of the times and needs of the moment. Today there's a clash with the old programs, but don't you worry; all bugs will get fixed.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). The ones who know you well may notice the weight beneath your apparent whimsy, but more than likely it's the complete strangers who will really see you, which is why it's important to talk to unfamiliar people.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). There are those for whom vulnerability is repellent, as it reminds them of their shortcomings and the cost of being unguarded. Such a condition is unfortunate and not to be personalized by those who do not possess it.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Your logical mind doesn't care that most of the things you worry about never happen. It will still generate as many worrisome possibilities as you want it to. You can and should shut it down with a fun distraction.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). Trying new routines can be like trying on new clothes. They don't always fit right away, but things can be jiggled, smoothed, altered to fit. Maybe it's just one adjustment – like the right shoes – that pulls everything together.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Passivity is not always weakness. Sometimes it's a strategy to buy the time needed to get a better sense of things. An assertive response might be overkill. Do what the situation requires and no more than that.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Familiarity can blind you to how someone really is. That's why spending time with outsiders can have an enormously (and, in your case, pleasantly) enlightening effect.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). When the feeling is strong, it's hard not to act on it, and yet you also pride yourself in having a will that is as strong or stronger than any feeling that could come up. Small acts of self-control build emotional muscle tone.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). You've been praised and encouraged, and you've also known an opposite dynamic. Both have motivated you. You can credit your success to how you interpret, think about and use the things that happen to you.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The reason you make an effort to include those who seem a little uncomfortable or outside of the situation is because you know what that's like. Your kind gesture will make a difference in someone's life.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). If you're competing for position in a group, it might not be the right group for you. People who appreciate what you bring to the table won't make you battle to get it there.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). You're not naive, but sometimes you give your trust before it's earned. This is because there's a certain amount of risk you're willing to take, and you'd rather err on the side of believing in the good of humanity.

Jupiter's Camouflage

Those with famous faces wear sunglasses and hats to avoid being recognized in public, though the disguise sometimes makes blending in even more difficult. The lunar opposition to Jupiter reinforces the idea: The cover can attract more attention than what's being covered. Nothing hides as well as naturalness and honesty in plain view.

ASTROLOGICAL TOPIC, JEALOUSY

Yesterday a Capricorn confessed her trouble staying off of the social media pages of her ex-boyfriends and their girlfriends, which started a conversation about jealousy. See the archives for part one, where I mention that my own relationship with jealousy has changed since I stopped seeing the emotion as a green-eyed monster and started seeing it as a radiologist. Jealousy is a well-trained professional who surveys the landscape, records its features and zooms in on the points of interest. Jealousy is the expert who can point right to the spot and say, "Here's your problem," or "Here's what's amazing."

To blame the radiologist for the issues going on in the body would be absurd, though messengers get blamed all the time. Jealousy lives with that unfair rap, too, all because people don't know what to do with this very specific information that jealousy is just passing on. They don't understand how to use the valuable gift that jealousy brings to make themselves healthier and happier. Truly, what's inside jealousy's message can be turned into a blueprint for a more fulfilling life. More on this tomorrow.

CELEBRITY PROFILES

Gavin DeGraw has already sold out dates for this summer's European tour. The Aquarian artist was born when the moon and Saturn were both in Leo, the sign of entertainment.
