Santa Monica Council approves scaled-back Memorial Park expansion to address budget gap

PARKS: The city is making changes to the plan for Memorial Park to keep the project moving forward.

MAAZ ALIN
SMDP Staff Writer

The City Council voted unanimously on Tuesday to approve a revised plan for the Memorial Park Redevelopment and Expansion Project, eliminating expensive elevated tennis and pickleball courts to save approximately $17 million amid significant funding shortfalls.

The 7-0 vote certifies the project's Environmental Impact Report and directs staff to proceed with on-grade courts instead of the originally planned elevated structure, bringing the long-delayed project closer to its $40 million budget for the initial two phases.

The project, nearly 30 years in development, would expand Memorial Park from 10.3 acres to 13.2 acres by incorporating the former Fisher Lumber site. The park serves as Santa Monica's primary location for baseball and softball and houses the city's only public gymnasium, skate park and

Republican Steve Hilton is pulling in more campaign cash than nearly all other candidates in a tepid fundraising cycle for California governor in a wide-open race with no clear frontrunners, campaign finance reports filed Monday show.

Hilton, a commentator and former Fox News contributor who previously worked for conservative British Prime Minister David Cameron, brought in about $4.1 million in donations in the second half of 2025, according to campaign finance reports. He took a victory lap on social media over the figure, calling it “what momentum looks like.” But he also spent more than half that already, and started off 2026 with about $2 million on hand, only a little more than fellow Republican candidate, Riverside County sheriff Chad Bianco.

Still, his haul was higher than that of several prominent Democrats. Bay Area Rep. Eric Swalwell, boosted by donations from Hollywood entertainers like Jon Hamm, Robert De Niro and Sean Penn, raised about $3.1 million since jumping in the race in November. That’s more than the $3 million that former Rep. Katie Porter raised from nearly 12,000 mostly small-dollar donors from July to December. Former Health and Human Services Secretary Xavier Becerra brought in $2.6 million, in part by transferring money from prior campaign accounts for other offices.

Hilton was second bringing in campaign cash only to Democratic billionaire and self-funding candidate Tom Steyer, who has poured $28 million of his own money into the race since declaring he was running in November.

Steyer has already spent the vast majority of that money — $26 million — blanketing the state in TV and digital ads to become more recognizable. He’s far outspent his competitors, most of whom are not expected to spend big until the final weeks of the June primary race, but a poll released last week by an environmental group showed he’s garnering only about 8% of likely voters’ support.

Starting 2026, Becerra had the most cash on hand, about $3.8 million. Former Los Angeles Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa and Porter had $3.4 million and $3.2 million, respectively.

Political strategists say most of the candidates aren’t raising money quickly enough to be competitive with just four months left.

“No one but Steyer will be anywhere close,” Democratic strategist Garry South said.

It takes tens of millions of dollars to run a statewide campaign in California in large part because the state is home to several of the most expensive media and advertising markets in the country. In the 2018 gubernatorial election, which he won handily, Gov. Gavin Newsom’s campaign spent $30.7 million between January and Election Day, the equivalent of more than $40 million in 2026. That doesn’t include money from

Trump’s $45 billion expansion of immigrant detention sites faces pushback from communities

With tensions high over federal immigration enforcement, some state and local officials are pushing back against the Trump administration’s attempts to house thousands of detained immigrants in jails, converted warehouses and privately run facilities in their communities.

Federal officials have been scouting cities and counties across the U.S. for places to hold immigrants as they roll out a massive $45 billion expansion of detention facilities financed by President Donald Trump’s recent tax-cutting law.

The fatal shootings of Renee Good and Alex Pretti by immigration enforcement officers in Minneapolis have amplified an already intense spotlight on U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement, increasing scrutiny of its plans for new detention sites.

A proposed ICE facility just north of Richmond, Virginia, drew hundreds of people last week to a tense public hearing of the Hanover County Board of Supervisors.

“You want what’s happening in Minnesota to go down in our own backyard? Build that detention center here, and that’s exactly what will happen,” resident Kimberly Matthews told county officials.

As a prospective ICE detention site became public, elected officials in Kansas City, Missouri, scrambled to pass an ordinance aimed at blocking it. And mayors in Oklahoma City and Salt Lake City — after raising concerns about building permits — announced last week that property owners won’t be selling or leasing their facilities for immigration detention.

Meanwhile, legislatures in several Democratic-led states pressed forward with bills barring or discouraging ICE facilities. A New Mexico measure targets local government agreements to detain immigrants for ICE. A novel California proposal seeks to nudge companies running ICE facilities out of the state by imposing a 50% tax on their proceeds.

THE NUMBER OF ICE DETENTION SITES HAS DOUBLED

More than 75,000 immigrants were being detained by ICE as of mid-January, up from 40,000 when Trump took office a year earlier, according to federal data released Tuesday.

In a little over a year, the number of detention facilities used by ICE more than doubled, to 225 sites spread across a combined 48 states and territories. Most of that growth came through existing contracts with the U.S. Marshals Service or deals to use empty beds at county jails.

Trump’s administration now is taking steps to open more large-scale facilities. In January, ICE paid $102 million for a warehouse in Washington County, Maryland, $84 million for one in Berks County, Pennsylvania, and more than $70 million for one in Surprise, Arizona. It also solicited public comment on a proposed warehouse purchase in a flood plain in Chester, New York.

Federal immigration officials have toured large warehouses elsewhere, without releasing many details about the efforts.

“They will be very well structured detention facilities meeting our regular detention standards,” ICE said in a statement, adding: “It should not come as news that ICE will be making arrests in states across the U.S. and is actively working to expand detention space.”

DETENTION SITE FOES FACE LEGAL LIMITATIONS

State and local governments can decline to lease detention space to ICE, but they generally cannot prohibit businesses and private landowners from using their property for federal immigrant detention centers, said Danielle Jefferis, an associate law professor at the University of Nebraska who focuses on immigration and civil litigation.

In 2023, a federal court invalidated a California law that barred private immigrant detention facilities, finding it infringed on federal powers. A federal appeals court panel cited similar grounds in July while striking down a New Jersey law that forbade agreements to operate immigrant detention facilities.

After ICE officials recently toured a warehouse in Orlando, Florida, as a prospective site, local officials looked into ways to regulate or prevent it. But City Attorney Mayanne Downs advised them in a letter that “ICE is immune from any local regulation that interferes in any way with its federal mandate.”

Officials in Hanover County also asked their attorney to evaluate legal options after the Department of Homeland Security sent a letter confirming its intent to purchase a private property for use as an ICE processing facility. The building sits near retail businesses, hotels, restaurants and several neighborhoods.

Although some residents voiced concerns that an ICE facility could strain the county’s resources, there’s little the county can do to oppose it, said Board of Supervisors Chair Sean Davis.

“The federal government is generally exempt from our zoning regulations,” Davis said.

KANSAS CITY TRIES TO BLOCK A NEW ICE DETENTION SITE

Despite court rulings elsewhere, the City Council in Kansas City voted in January to impose a five-year moratorium on non-city-run detention facilities. The vote came on the same day ICE officials toured a nearly 1-million-square-foot (92,903-square-meter) warehouse as a prospective site.

Manny Abarca, a county lawmaker, said he initially was threatened with trespassing when he showed up but was eventually allowed inside the facility, where a deputy ICE field office director told him they were scouting for a 7,500-bed site.

Abarca is trying to fortify Kansas City’s resistance by proposing a countywide moratorium on permits, zoning changes and development plans for detention facilities not run by the county or a city.

“When federal power is putting communities on edge, local government has a responsibility to act where we have authority,”

Gavin Newsom's autobiography adds struggle to a story of a politically privileged past

There's a well-worn playbook for politicians who yearn to occupy the White House. One of its most common tools is to write a book, or have a book written, to introduce the presidential supplicant to voters.

Historians trace the practice to Thomas Jefferson, whose 1785 book, "Notes on the State of Virginia," predated his first campaign for president in 1786.

Using the book as a conscious tool of image-building is a more recent phenomenon, however, leading critic Jaime Fuller to lament the banality of such tomes in his 2019 Literary Hub article.

"These modern election books sag under wet folksiness. They are boring," Fuller wrote.

"The current fashionable campaign book takes the form of a memoir, often ghostwritten, that unsuccessfully tries to argue that a candidate had a relatable American upbringing despite the fact said upbringing made them want to be president," he added.

The latter comment pretty well describes the book carrying California Gov. Gavin Newsom's name, but ghostwritten by veteran California journalist Mark Arax. It'll be published this month.

According to accounts by journalists given pre-publication copies of "Young Man in a Hurry: A Memoir of Discovery," Newsom's autobiography dwells on his life prior to running for governor. It's clearly aimed at moderating, or humanizing, his long-standing image of benefiting socially, financially and politically from his ties to the wealthy Getty family.

Newsom wants us — particularly folks in other states — to believe his early life was a struggle to balance his patronage by billionaire Gordon Getty, achieved through his father's long career as a Getty family consigliere, with the divorce of his parents, his mother's financial struggles and her suicide to end the misery of cancer.

"This is me taking the mask off," Newsom said in an interview with Politico. "And it's not just me taking a mask off and then sanitizing what's underneath. It's scrutinizing what's underneath. It's stress-testing it, and it's trying to crack it open further and further."

Newsom's account of his pre-gubernatorial life also touches on less savory aspects, such as the breakup of

California judges defend their independence and the rule of law

COURT: A judge's bench at Placer County Superior Court in Roseville on Jan. 23, 2026. Judges increasingly are facing threats, including impeachment, doxing or violence.

When the rule of law is under attack, judges are among its natural defenders. But the very nature of their positions prevents them from doing or even saying much outside of their courtrooms. They have to avoid any appearance of bias or partisanship.

That's why it was so noteworthy, nine years ago, when California Chief Justice Tani Cantil-Sakauye stuck her neck out by calling on Trump administration officials to stop making immigration arrests in courthouses. Court is a place where witnesses, litigants, criminal defendants and anyone else should be encouraged to come without fear, in pursuit of justice, Cantil-Sakauye wrote. Using court as "bait" for arrests undermines that purpose, she said.

Her letter resonates today, as the second Trump administration fuses its escalated immigration enforcement with a broad attack on the judiciary, particularly against judges who rule that any individual patrol, arrest, imprisonment or deportation violates due process and other constitutional principles.

ATTACKS ON JUDGES

Trump has called judges who rule against him "crooked." Attorney General Pam Bondi named three who should be removed because in her opinion they cannot be impartial (meaning they ruled against the president). White House aide Stephen Miller branded judges who block Trump actions as "communist." Elon Musk, who briefly had a powerful although unofficial role with the Trump administration, called for "a wave of impeachments" against judges who slowed his attempted mass firings of federal workers.

The verbal abuse was so virulent and the impeachment threats so frequent that U.S. Chief Justice John Roberts told them to knock it off. He reminded the president that the proper response to an unfavorable ruling is appeal, not impeachment. But the administration paid Roberts no more heed than it did Cantil-Sakauye in 2017.

In the face of such attacks, can judges offer anything with more teeth than a strongly worded letter? No, given the limits imposed by judicial conduct code. That leaves it to others to defend the third branch of government and the rule of law.

As it happens, some retired judges (including Cantil-Sakauye, who now heads the Public Policy Institute of California after her term on the bench ended in 2022) have stepped up.

Before examining whether their efforts amount to much, let's consider whether they're necessary. Federal judges have lifetime appointments, and recriminations against them could easily be dismissed as just so much political blather, predating the Trump era by two centuries. Impeachment and removal of federal judges is rare. House Speaker Mike Johnson's recent statement of support for actual impeachment of U.S. District Court Judge James Boasberg for his ruling in an immigration case will most likely amount to nothing. Rep. Andy Ogles' childish "wanted" poster picturing judges he wants impeached was a quasi-successful bid for attention that won't oust any judge.

The rub is that we live in an era in which political blather can quickly turn into intimidation and violence, and can threaten basic American institutions of liberty. Remember that Trump's fact-free insistence that the 2020 election was stolen from him led thousands of his supporters to ransack the Capitol on Jan. 6, 2021, in an effort to prevent the certification of his successor. It was blather with a dangerous bite, and it instantly, if perhaps temporarily, dampened much of Americans' hard-won confidence in the he said.

As other ICE proposals have surfaced, officials in Social Circle, Georgia; Merrillville, Indiana; El Paso, Texas; and Roxbury Township, New Jersey, have raised concerns about a lack of water and sewer capacity to transform warehouses into detention sites.

Officials in Leavenworth, Kansas, are seeking to hold private prison operator CoreCivic to its requirements. A city planning commission on Monday advanced a three-year permit that would be needed for CoreCivic to reopen a shuttered prison as an ICE detention facility capable of housing up to 1,000 detainees.

Nationally, it remains to be seen whether local governments can deter ICE facilities through building permits and regulations.

“We’re currently in a moment where it is being tested,” Jefferis said. “So there is no clear answer as to how the courts are going to come down.”

NEW MEXICO TARGETS EXISTING ICE FACILITIES

The Democratic-led New Mexico House on Friday passed legislation banning state and local government contracts for ICE detention facilities, sending it to the Senate. Similar bills are pending in Hawaii, Massachusetts, New York and Rhode Island.

The Otero County Processing Center, 25 miles (40 kilometers) from downtown El Paso, Texas, is one of three privately run ICE facilities that could be affected by the New Mexico legislation. The facility includes four immigration courtrooms and space for more than 1,000 detainees. The county financed its construction in 2007 with the intent to use it as a revenue source, and plans to pay off the remaining $16.5 million debt by 2028.

Otero County Attorney Roy Nichols said the county is prepared to sue the Legislature under a state law that prevents impairment of outstanding revenue bonds.

Republicans warned of job losses and economic fallout if the legislation forces immigrant detention centers to close.

But Democratic state Rep. Sarah Silva, who voted for the ban, and said her constituents in a heavily Hispanic area view the ICE facility as a burden.

“Our state can’t be complicit in the violations that ICE has been doing in places like Minneapolis,” Silva said. “To me that was beyond the tipping point.”

L. Solis, directs County Counsel to draft an ordinance modifying the county’s existing Rent and Tenant Protections Ordinance. The change would require tenants to owe at least two months of Fair Market Rent before landlords can proceed with eviction.

“This is a modest but necessary increase,” Hahn said. “With this additional month, I hope we can give families some breathing room while not putting the entire burden on landlords who depend on rental income to pay their own bills.”

Hahn acknowledged the measure would face criticism from both tenant advocates and landlords, calling it a middle-ground approach to a contentious issue.

The proposed ordinance would apply to unincorporated areas under the county’s direct jurisdiction, home to about 1 million residents. Fair Market Rent, established annually by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, varies by unit size and ZIP code.

County Counsel has 30 days to return to the board with the proposed ordinance.

Supervisors cited the economic impact of recent federal immigration enforcement actions as a driving factor behind the measure. Some communities have experienced decreased economic activity as families lost breadwinners and businesses lost customers and employees.

“In the face of inhumane federal actions and ongoing threats to immigrant families, the county has taken concrete steps to protect renters,” Solis said. “These are not symbolic gestures, but real action that meets the needs of those impacted.”

Solis emphasized that tenants would still owe back rent to landlords, but the higher threshold provides “important protection against eviction” while the county mobilizes other resources to help families remain housed.

The move builds on earlier action the county took in October 2025, when supervisors declared a local emergency in response to federal immigration raids. The declaration is typically reserved for natural disasters but empowered the county to mobilize resources and request state and federal aid for impacted communities.

The county also launched an Emergency Rent Relief Program in late 2025 to aid residents affected by immigration raids and other emergencies. In September 2025, the board approved nearly $30 million for rent and mortgage relief targeting two groups: residents who lost homes or income in January 2025 wildfires, and immigrant families facing financial hardship due to federal immigration raids.

The program, administered by the Department of Consumer and Business Affairs, provides eligible households up to six months of rent assistance, capped at $15,000. Applications opened Dec. 17, 2025.

The county’s tenant protection efforts have drawn both support and opposition. Tenant advocates, labor organizers and immigrant-rights groups have rallied pressing the county for stronger protections that don’t force tenants to disclose immigration status.

Landlord associations have pushed back, arguing eviction moratoriums strain housing providers. They cite the COVID-era eviction ban as a cautionary example, claiming many tenants never repaid rent, leaving small landlords carrying the debt.

Hahn urged cities throughout Los Angeles County to implement their own tenant protection ordinances, noting that while the county can only act in unincorporated areas, individual cities have authority to enact similar measures.

outside interest groups that spent to help elect him.

The reports show Villaraigosa raised about $2 million in the second half of last year; former Controller Betty Yee pulled in about $342,000, and Superintendent of Public Instruction Tony Thurmond raised $181,000 — less than some campaigns for state Assembly. Both Yee and Thurmond also spent more than they raised.

Having so many candidates still in the race is likely dividing Democratic donors attention, and weak fundraising could further exacerbate Democrats’ fears that a Republican has a shot of winning the race because of the state’s top-two primary system, in which the top two vote-getters advance to the November election regardless of party. Hilton and Bianco, who raised $2 million from July to December, have led some recent polls with about 15% of support each.

Porter has leaned particularly hard on the possibility of a Republican victory, following up on a flurry of weekend fundraising pleas with another message for supporters Monday: “If we don’t consolidate support behind Katie, a Republican has a serious chance of winning this race.”

The lukewarm fundraising figures candidates reported on Monday reflect voter uncertainty in an unusually quiet race for governor. Some donors, Democratic strategist Andrew Acosta said, haven’t narrowed down their candidate of choice yet and may be withholding support until it’s clear who will remain in the race.

“I don’t think we’ve ever had a gubernatorial race like this,” Acosta said. “The race is in flux and there’s a lot of people who are struggling to see how this is all going to end.”

Acosta pointed out that the uncertainty has made the race particularly susceptible to be shaped by wealthy spenders, like Steyer’s entrance into the race or the recent entry of San Jose Mayor Matt Mahan, a moderate who could command sizable support from deep-pocketed Silicon Valley donors. Mahan has not reported any donations yet since he declared his run last week.

“There’s going to be a bunch of hand-wringing from Democrats soon that someone’s gotta get out,” Acosta said. “It’s February. People have got to get moving.”

integrity of elections.

ACTUAL OR IMPLIED THREATS

There is little reason to believe that a president who showed himself so willing to undermine free and fair elections would worry about weakening an ostensibly co-equal branch of government which, by design, has little power to protect itself.

So it is not lost on judges that threats against them could be picked up and acted on. The most cited example stems from a California lawyer's assassination attempt against U.S. District Judge Esther Salas of New Jersey that resulted in her son's murder. The killing in 2020 was apparently unconnected to national politics. But since then a number of judges who have ruled against the Trump administration have been sent pizzas in the son's name. The statement is clear: We know how you ruled and we know where you live.

It's important to note that judges are targeted from multiple political quarters, not just the White House and not just by MAGA Republicans. When Gov. Gavin Newsom was unhappy with a federal court ruling on homeless encampments in 2023, he said he considered posting the judge's phone number on a billboard. "Judges must be held accountable," Newsom said on social media.

Held accountable how, exactly? Rulings that are unsupported by law are overturned on appeal. Judicial misconduct can be sanctioned by oversight bodies. Even Trump administration officials haven't directly threatened to dox judges they don't like, notwithstanding the ominous pizza deliveries.

Unlike federal judges, California state judges are elected and therefore accountable to voters. But that system poses its own dangers to the integrity of the judicial system and the rule of law. If voters are able to oust a judge simply because they don't like a ruling (as Trump would like to do in the federal system), then judges might shape their rulings to win public support, rather than to reflect their best understanding of the law, the facts of the case and the interests of justice.

Does it happen? Yes. Two New York University professors studied criminal sentences from six California counties in the wake of a recall campaign against Santa Clara Superior Court Judge Aaron Persky, after his controversially light 2016 sentencing of a Stanford student convicted of sexually assaulting an unconscious woman. The professors found an "instantaneous" 30% increase in the length of criminal sentences handed down by the 158 judges whose cases were studied. The evidence suggests that elected judges, despite their insistence that they follow only the law, may alter their rulings when under political pressure.

Nor is it rare for elected prosecutors or sheriffs to deflect blame for crimes committed on their watch by pointing the finger at judges whose rulings complied with all laws. Riverside County Sheriff Chad Bianco, currently a candidate for governor, led a misleading campaign to pressure a judge in his county to resign (she didn't) after a defendant she ordered released, in accordance with the law, killed a sheriff's deputy.

BLAMING JUDGES

Retired Santa Clara Superior Court Judge LaDoris Cordell resigned from San Francisco District Attorney Brooke Jenkins' Innocence Commission in protest of Jenkins' sharp criticism of judges. Jenkins formerly blamed her predecessor for public safety problems in San Francisco, but began blaming judges when she succeeded him.

"The place for a prosecutor to disagree with a judge's ruling is in the courtroom, not on social media and not in the streets pandering to voters," Cordell wrote in her resignation letter.

Being a retired judge, Cordell could speak out against attacks on the independent judiciary in a way that sitting judges cannot.

Other retired judges have begun to stir, and to organize, and to fight back.

On Sept. 17 — Constitution Day, a fitting day for defense of the rule of law — 104 retired California judges and justices (including Cordell) signed a "Declaration of Judicial Independence" responding to "unjust public criticism that threatens a fair and impartial judiciary." The declaration was written, and the campaign was organized, by retired superior court judges Brett Alldredge of Tulare County, George Eskin of Santa Barbara County, Suzanne Ramos Bolanos of San Francisco, and Judge John Pacheco of San Bernardino County.

The same day, nearly 50 retired federal judges who are part of the Article III Coalition authored their own letter arguing that threats to "intimidate, harass, and pressure judges, and sway their opinions" are an attack on the Constitution.

DEFENDING A REVOLUTION

And on Dec. 15, Bill of Rights Day (who knew there was a Bill of Rights Day?), 45 retired state chief justices, including Cantil-Sakauye and her predecessor, Ronald George, signed onto a letter pledging to defend a strong and independent judiciary.

None of the documents called out Trump, or Newsom, or anyone else for their attacks on judges, nor did they suggest any possible consequences of continued attacks. So, just a few more strongly worded letters, just like Cantil-Sakauye's from 2017? Big deal.

But hold that thought.

We are six months away from the 250th anniversary of a particularly strongly worded letter, sent to all mankind and laying out a bill of complaints against tyranny.

The signing of the Declaration of Independence was preceded by years of debates, street protests, committees of correspondence and other actions among people of diametrically different political points of view. It took quite a bit of time before American colonists could join and sign on to a register of grievances that included the king making judges "dependent on his will alone" and obstructing the administration of justice.

There was also something about putting troops in the street without the consent of legislatures.

It's important, and timely, that retired judges have mobilized to defend the ideals of the Revolution. It's good that they have spoken up. Perhaps it's now time for them to speak more loudly, and more often.

CHANGES COMING TO YOUR SANTA MONICA RECYCLING AND TRASH 311 REQUESTS

Effective February 1, 2026, please provide your CITY UTILITY ACCOUNT NUMBER when requesting the following recycling and trash services through 311:

- ✓ Container requests (damaged or missing containers)
- ✓ Rent-a-bin (temporary rental bin)
- ✓ Service level changes (changes in collection frequency, size, number of containers)
- ✓ Start/stop service (move in/move out and container removal due tenant vacancy)
- ✓ Additional pickups

WHY?

Account holders or authorized users should be the ones requesting the above services because some of these changes may affect billing or container placement on the property. This also helps us provide better customer service and response time.

HOW DO I FIND MY ACCOUNT NUMBER?

- Option 1: top left corner of your utility bill
- Option 2: email billing.collections@santamonica.gov

Authorized users may attach account number and written confirmation from account holders to 311 requests.

MEMORIAL PARK

Despite the cost-cutting measures, the project faces a substantial funding gap of $45 million to $58 million, even with $28 million in secured or pending funding. The city has $18 million available from Santa Monica College's Measure V bond for Phase 1, pending final agreement, and $10 million budgeted for Phase 0, an underground stormwater harvesting system.

Staff has submitted four grant applications totaling $21.75 million, including requests to the Land and Water Conservation Fund ($6 million), Measure A ($4 million) and Measure W Safe Clean Water Program ($11.75 million). However, a $15 million application to the federal Outdoor Recreation Legacy Partnership Program has been placed on indefinite hold.

The revised Phase 1 construction cost estimate ranges from $34 million to $40 million, while Phase 2 is projected at $18 million to $21 million, according to staff reports.

Council Member Jesse Zwick questioned the value of combination baseball-softball fields that couldn't always accommodate simultaneous games. Staff explained that the current configuration allows perhaps two games at once, while the new combo field design would enable four simultaneous games — two Little League and two adult games, drastically increasing playability.

The approved plan maintains six total fields while adding numerous community amenities, including a 2,800-square-foot off-leash dog run, fitness equipment, a universally accessible playground with natural cork safety surfacing, and barbecue grills. Staff noted that incorporating a seventh field, originally planned, could be considered as part of the future Airport Conversion Project.

All sports fields will feature natural grass rather than artificial turf, following staff analysis of environmental and health impacts. The decision reflects a new city policy stating no new artificial turf sports fields will be installed on city-owned property.

The design firm SWA Group presented renderings showing improved park entries, particularly a new mid-block promenade entrance from Colorado Avenue. The plan also includes an 8-foot-wide shared-use bike path and enhanced pedestrian connections.

Tree removal emerged as a concern during planning. The project requires removing 82 trees, including palms in the middle of planned fields, but will preserve 14 existing trees and plant 110 new native species. Under city policy, 423 restitution trees must be planted, with any that cannot fit on-site planted within a quarter-mile of the park.

The revised plan also increases total parking from the existing 212 spaces to 201 spaces after all phases are complete, with 142 on-site spaces and 59 off-site spaces. The plan proposes angled parking along 16th Street to maximize available spaces.

Council Member Lana Negrete raised concerns about displaced programming during construction, particularly for pickleball players. Staff acknowledged that fully accommodating all displaced programming would be challenging and some reduction in programming during construction is expected.

"I wonder if it's feasible to work with the existing indoor outdoor pickleball courts ... so that people don't lose access to free pickleball space," Negrete said, suggesting the city partner with existing facilities to provide free access during slower periods.

Mayor Caroline Torosis asked for clarification before the vote that the approved plan included "the less expensive at grade pickleball courts" that were "value engineered by the Rec and Parks Commission."

Staff anticipates returning to council in spring 2026 with updates on fiscal agreements with Santa Monica College and the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District, along with a final construction scope and funding strategy. Final design is expected by the end of 2026, with construction potentially beginning in spring or summer 2027, contingent on available funding.

The project also requires a summary vacation of a portion of 16th Street right-of-way to accommodate Combo Field 3/4, a process that typically takes four to six months.

The project gained momentum in 2016 when council identified it as a high-priority initiative. Voters approved Measure V that year, providing up to $20 million from Santa Monica College. In 2019, council approved the master plan, and in 2020 a design-build contract was awarded but never executed due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The project was restarted in 2022 with a reduced scope.

SOLUTIONS TO YESTERDAY'S WORDS PUZZLE.
It's too hot to work outside

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (Feb. 4)

Welcome to your Year of Mesmerizing Charm. Since you’re sure to attract admirers, followers and customers, your first order of business is to focus on what’s worth adding to your life and keep flowing your attention toward the enriching, uplifting and truly interesting pursuits. More highlights: higher learning, intellectual connections, a joining of assets and investments that hit a tipping point. Sagittarius and Leo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 19, 9, 27, 6 and 8.

HOROSCOPES

- ARIES (March 21-April 19). You want to know you’ve made a difference. Today’s endeavor might just be the answer because it’s an opportunity to serve people what they need. The job may pay you, but it’s not about the money.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). As much as you wish people would understand you in real time, it will probably take a beat. Expect the lag and know the right audience will catch up to you eventually.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). When the world gets noisy, you get quiet - not aloof, not superior, just grounded. You won’t feel compelled to fix anything or defend anyone. People will be who they are. It doesn’t have to destabilize your own footing.
- CANCER (June 22-July 22). You can hear confessions, complaints or even jabs without flinching at all because you know that information is simply information. What others say is usually more about them than you. You have strong emotional boundaries and social maturity.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). You already know coping skills that help your mindset. You have insight, gratitude, rituals and regulation techniques. But right now, it’s not about using your mind to feel better. You need structural changes that stop life from demanding more of you than it returns.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You value social integrity and will leave interactions clean. No regrets for oversharing, no silent resentments and no replaying conversations wondering what was right or wrong. You simply observe, register what matters and move on.
- LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You won’t catch everything the first time around, and this is a good thing. If you did, there would be no reason to return. The return visit, the afterthought, the follow-up - that’s where it all starts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). To some, “nirvana” suggests bliss. More literally, it refers to the extinguishing of the mental fires that cause suffering. Today’s happiness comes from loosening your grip on an unhappy idea.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Doing your favorite activities with talented people is a sweet treat, but you could make it a regular fixture in your life. Making your self-development and joy a top priority in whatever way you can will improve much more than a few hours of your day.
- CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). You’re chasing something fast and wild, which makes you incredibly hard to pin down. People would love to have your attention, your work, your commitment and more, but this just isn’t the time. You need spontaneity and freedom.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Your ambition is a feature, not a flaw. It’s a form of optimism that calls a meeting with your strategic mind, your discipline, abilities and tenacious attitude. The gathering culminates in confidence and, ultimately, success.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Could someone else do your job or fill your role in a relationship? Maybe. But no one has your voice, style, timing or appetites. It’s what you want that matters today. The more you follow these cravings, the more original you’ll be.

guaranteeing speakers a minimum two minutes of public comment per agenda item, restructuring when closed sessions occur, and shifting one monthly meeting to a 10 a.m. start time.

"I know it sucks to be here late at night, but this is their only opportunity to talk to the seven council members at one time," Negrete said, noting residents often arrange childcare and travel to City Hall only to receive 60 seconds of speaking time.

Her proposal specifically called for ensuring no speaker receives less than two minutes on any agenda item regardless of how many people sign up to speak. She also requested that closed sessions either start at 3 p.m. or move to the end of meetings, rather than occurring mid-agenda, and suggested holding closed sessions on alternate Tuesdays separate from regular council meetings.

The daytime meeting proposal stems from Negrete's belief that evening-only meetings exclude workers in retail, restaurants and other industries with nighttime hours.

"There's a whole workforce that works after the hours of five," Negrete said, adding that restaurants have had to close to bring staff to evening meetings to testify.

Several council members expressed reservations about the proposals, particularly the daytime meetings.

Councilmember Barry Snell said the current meeting demonstrated the challenge, with 60 to 70 speakers potentially requiring hours of additional time if each received two minutes.

"I'm exhausted," Snell said. "To be on council requires us to keep our day jobs. There's just no way around it."

Councilmember Dan Hall warned that daytime meetings would effectively exclude teachers, city employees and anyone with traditional work hours from serving on council.

"We'd end up with a council that is either fully self employed, their own business owners or retired," Hall said. "I don't think that's particularly representative of our community."

He noted the council's $19,000 annual salary makes it impossible to serve full-time, adding he would need to sponsor a charter amendment for full-time council positions with six-figure salaries before supporting daytime meetings.

Councilmember Ellis Raskin said cities of Santa Monica's size struggle to balance public participation with getting work done, noting some jurisdictions cap total public comment time even on agenda items.

"We're gonna have to make some tough policy choices," Raskin said.

Mayor Jesse Zwick supported moving general public comment, which currently opens meetings, to the end of the agenda to prioritize discussion of items actually before the council.

"I think it's a bit of a fallacy to say that if we give someone an extra minute, suddenly we'll understand so much better what the community thinks," Zwick said.

Hall proposed a substitute motion that council members ultimately supported, directing staff to bring back several options for consideration at future meetings.

The approved motion calls for staff to explore scheduling special closed session meetings on alternate Tuesdays for lengthy agendas, moving general public comment to the end of meetings, and changing speaker time from one minute per section of the agenda to one minute per individual agenda item.

The motion also requests analysis of options to increase collaboration among council members before bringing items forward, such as requiring multiple sponsors for council member requests.

Councilmember Natalya Zernitskaya successfully added a provision requesting staff explore alternative public input methods, such as quarterly town halls potentially held on weekends.

Snell requested that when staff returns with options, the analysis include information about council member compensation in other cities that hold daytime meetings.

All proposed changes would return to council for public comment and further debate before any implementation.

his first marriage to Kimberly Guilfoyle — who later was briefly engaged to Donald Trump Jr. — as well as Newsom's affair with the wife of a close friend and his acknowledged problems with alcohol.

"Is it any surprise that a Democrat considering a presidential run would publish a book emphasizing that he didn't have everything handed to him?" the New York Times asks in its article. "Of course not. Overcoming family hardship has been a quintessential origin story for the last three Democratic presidents."

Interestingly, Newsom's book covers neither what he has done as governor nor any manifesto about what the next president, presumably him, should do.

However, Atlantic magazine attempts to fill in one of those topics — his governorship — in its latest of several recent commentaries on Newsom's ambitions titled "Gavin Newsom's Record Is a Problem."

"His new persona as a fighting moderate, a Democrat in tune with the country's shifting desires and ruthless toward the man at the top, deftly speaks to the needs of a party desperate to regain the White House," Marc Novicoff and Jonathan Chait write.

"But Newsom has a problem: He has been a California politician for decades, and has held the state's governorship since 2019. During his tenure, the state has been a laboratory for some of the Democratic Party's most politically fraught policies and instincts, which has left it less affordable and more culturally radical than it used to be. His record not only raises pressing questions about how effectively he could govern as president; it also provides opponents an endless buffet of vulnerabilities across social and economic issues."

If Newsom wants to ride this rollercoaster, he'd better hold on tightly.

BOOK RELEASE FOR THE INVASION OF PANTOMIME BY TIM XONNELLY

7:30 p.m. Beyond Baroque 681 Venice Blvd. Venice. Please join us to celebrate the release of SoCal/Berkeley poet Tim Xonnely's new book, The Invasion of Pantomime. In these poems, Xonnely reflects upon the surreal quality of the COVID pandemic and entering his seventh decade in an increasingly repressive and violent culture in works replete with dream imagery and queer pride. Also reading will be acclaimed authors antmen pimentel mendoza (My Boyfriend Apocalypse) and Roberto F Santiago (Like Sugar). Of The Invasion of Pantomime, Kirk Read says, "Tim Xonnely's voice is reassuring. No matter how much technocracy encroaches, there are poets wandering the aisles of Costco or navigating the world of online hookups.... All is not lost. There are still poets being poets. This collection is tender and weird and utterly endearing." Visit: <https://www.smdp.com/calendar/#/details/book-release-for-the-invasion-of-pantomime-by-tim-xonnely/17913859/2026-02-05T19>
