Undefeated and undeterred: Samohi looks to make deep push in playoffs

UNDEFEATED: Samohi's girls basketball team is hoping to advance in the CIF playoffs after a strong season.

BRENNON DIXSON
SMDP Staff Writer

With its victory Thursday night over El Segundo High School, Samohi's girls basketball team finished its Ocean League season undefeated in the division. But the Ocean League champs have their sights set on much more as they prepare for an upcoming push in the playoffs.

Currently ranked first in the Southern Section Division 3AA Girls Basketball Rankings, the Vikings finished their regular season Thursday with an exciting game that almost ended in heartbreak. However, the team was able to remain undefeated in league play after El Segundo's 3-point shot bounced out during the final five seconds of the game.

With a respectable overall record of 21 wins and 7 losses this season, Santa Monica High School now hopes to make a deep push in the CIF playoffs, but, before then, the team took some time to reminisce on how far they've come.

Forward Iternite Reed, center Chantal Moawad and guard Allison Lee are three of the team's many seniors who have helped push the Vikings to new heights during their tenure with the team.

"It feels amazing to accomplish a goal that I feel like each and every one of us, especially the seniors, have set out to do since coming in here as freshmen," Reed said. "To go from winning four wins a season to all of a sudden winning (21) and then being first in Ocean League on top — it's a really big accomplishment," and it wasn't easy to do.

"We had to work as a team and

Primer: Conservatorship

HOMELESSNESS: It is difficult to force someone to accept help.

The streets of Santa Monica are filled with homeless people in desperate need of housing and services, but only those with the most severe mental illnesses and substance abuse disorders can be forced into inpatient treatment.

The Lanterman-Petris-Short (LPS) Act, California's guiding conservatorship law, allows an individual to be involuntarily confined and treated if they are a danger to themself, a danger to others or gravely disabled because of their mental illness. An individual is considered gravely disabled if they are unable to provide their own food, clothing or shelter, have no third party to help them meet those basic needs and are unwilling or unable to accept treatment.

Probe: No outward engine failure in Bryant helicopter crash

STEFANIE DAZIO
Associated Press

Wreckage from the helicopter that crashed last month and killed Kobe Bryant, his daughter and seven others did not show any outward evidence of engine failure, the National Transportation Safety Board said Friday.

Bryant, his 13-year-old daughter Gianna, and the others died in the Jan. 26 crash in Calabasas, California. The group was flying to a girls basketball tournament at his Mamba Sports Academy. Gianna's team was coached by Bryant and was playing in the tournament.

The NTSB is investigating the accident, including any role heavy officials are authorized to take an individual to a psychiatric facility for 72 hours, where a doctor decides whether they should be released or kept in the facility for another 14 days.

Under the LPS Act, conservatorships may only be administered by the Office of the Public Guardian, which initiates the process if a doctor determines that an individual is still gravely disabled after the 14-day hold. The Public Guardian reviews clinical evidence from the doctor and petitions the court to approve a 30-day conservatorship.

The office then investigates whether the individual needs to be placed on a one-year conservatorship, taking into account all possible alternatives, and presents the case at a conservatorship hearing.

If the court rules that a one-year conservatorship is necessary, it appoints a conservator, who could be a friend, family member or the Public Guardian. The court also decides whether the individual should live at home, with their conservator or in a local or state facility. Individuals can challenge a conservatorship ruling through a jury trial.

The Public Guardian must decide after one year whether to extend or end the conservatorship. There are no limitations on how many times a conservatorship may be renewed, so some individuals may be put under conservatorship for a number of years.

The LPS Act, which was signed into law by Governor Ronald Reagan in 1967, was intended to prevent people with mental illnesses, developmental disabilities and substance abuse disorders from being forced into state institutions, where patient abuse was rampant.

But lawmakers have sought to reform the LPS Act since the 1980s, when it became apparent that the bill's emphasis on deinstitutionalization and the lack of guaranteed funding for community-based mental health treatment had resulted in thousands of people with mental illnesses and substance abuse disorders living on the streets. In Santa Monica, almost two-thirds struggle with mental illnesses, substance abuse disorders or a combination of the two, according to a 2019 survey.

State legislators and local officials are once again calling for reform as the state grapples with a worsening homelessness crisis, although their approaches have differed.

In 2018, the California State Legislature approved a bill introduced by San Francisco state senator Scott Wiener that created a five-year pilot program in the counties of San Francisco, Los Angeles and San Diego to conserve any individual who has been placed on a 72-hour psychiatric hold eight or more times in one year.

"Too many people are deteriorating and dying on San Francisco's streets, and we have a moral responsibility to help them," Wiener said in a statement after the San Francisco Board of Supervisors voted last June to implement the bill. "It's neither progressive nor compassionate to stand by while people die. We need to offer voluntary services to those in need, but for people incapable of accepting services, we need to consider helping them via conservatorship."

Other bills that would broaden the definition of gravely disabled to include individuals who are unable to make informed decisions about their care have died in committee, with disability rights advocates and progressive lawmakers arguing the definition was overly vague and would threaten the civil rights of people with mental illnesses.

Critics of the bills also said expanding conservatorship would have to be preceded by a huge investment in mental health facilities. In a position letter on a failed conservatorship bill that Orange County state senator John Moorlach re-introduced in January, Disability Rights California legislative director Curtis Child said the bill would bring more individuals into a system ill-equipped to house them and provide services.

"There is nothing in this bill that expands services or creates more housing or physical or mental health care, which is what the real problem is," Child said.

Connie Draxler, deputy director of the Los Angeles County Office of the Public Guardian, said mental health patients, particularly those under conservatorship, get stuck in hospitals for months before they can transition to the next level of care because of a countywide and statewide shortage of beds in state hospitals, psychiatric facilities, residential care homes and supportive housing. The capacity of mental health hospitals has also been impacted as patients languish in what are supposed to be short-term beds.

The county Board of Supervisors voted last December to add 500 mental health beds throughout the county over the next two years, Draxler added.

"The shortage of beds is our biggest challenge, in L.A. and across the state," Draxler said.

Immigrants embrace activism awaiting word on DACA's future

ANITA SNOW
Associated Press

Tony Valdovinos didn't know he was in the U.S. illegally until he tried to join the Marine Corps at 18 and learned he was born in Mexico.

Valdovinos, now 29, channeled disappointment into activism, knocking on doors in Latino neighborhoods and registering people to vote, though he can't cast a ballot himself. He also enrolled in the Obama-era Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals program that allows immigrants brought to the U.S. as children to work and protects them from deportation. He now runs a firm helping elect Arizona candidates.

"This is the greatest nation in the world," said Valdovinos. "I feel a responsibility to serve this country."

DACA recipients like Valdovinos are assuming prominent roles in the 2020 elections. They are becoming leaders in the Democratic presidential campaigns of Bernie Sanders and Tom Steyer and get-out-the vote groups in immigrant communities, using their shared language and culture to build trust.

Jeanne Batalova, a senior analyst for the Migration Policy Institute in Washington, said political involvement helps DACA recipients facing an uncertain future feel empowered.

"They are doing what they can to exercise their agency, to shape their lives and destinies," Batalova said.

The campaigns are heating up as the Supreme Court prepares to decide the future of DACA, which President Donald Trump wants to end for the estimated 652,880 recipients. Like many of them, Valdovinos calls himself an American and wants everyone engaged in an election that may shape their future more than any other in their lifetime.

"The current state of DACA is very precarious," said Arizona Democratic U.S. Rep. Ruben Gallego. "We have to be worried with this administration and this Supreme Court, which are capable of creating a mass deportation of human beings who don't know any other country than the United States."

Gallego has long supported DACA recipients, inviting one, second grade teacher Vanessa Mendez, to be his guest this week at Trump's State of the Union address and recently attending a performance of "Americano!," a new Phoenix musical inspired by Valdovinos' life.

"We cannot give in to the fear," Valdovinos said about the upcoming court decision. "We have to fight for the right to have our lives."

Berkeley, California, journalist and immigrant rights activist Jose Antonio Vargas, who famously revealed he was brought to the U.S. illegally from the Philippines in The New York Times Magazine in 2011, said he identifies with DACA recipients even though he was too old to qualify. Now 39, Vargas discovered his status when applying for a driver's license at 16.

He said he is encouraged by immigrants like Valdovinos who feel American.

"It's part of the maturation of this generation, the sophistication of how we tell our stories," Vargas said. "Many of the DACA recipients are among the most civically engaged Americans you're likely to meet."

They include Argentine-born Belen Sisa, 25, Sanders' deputy press secretary in Washington.

DACA opponents say the program rewards children of families who broke the law. Arizona Republican Rep. Paul Gosar called unsuccessfully for the deportation of DACA recipients who were invited by members of Congress to attend Trump's State of the Union address in 2018.

Precedents exist for activism by non-voters in the U.S., like the women who fought in the early 20th century for voting rights and African Americans who toppled barriers like literacy tests disenfranchising many black people into the 1960s.

The Supreme Court's conservative majority has indicated it will likely strip DACA protections by June. Liberal justices have suggested the Trump administration has not fully justified its decision to end DACA.

If the court lifts protections, Congress could vote to put the program on surer legal footing. But Congress' lack of comprehensive immigration reform prompted President Barack Obama in 2012 to create the program that gives immigrants who are in school, graduated from high school or served in the military two-year reprieves on deportation if they don't commit major crimes.

Trump said in a November tweet that if DACA is overturned, a deal would be made for them to stay, but he also alleged some recipients are "very tough, hardened criminals."

Acting U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement Director Matthew Albence confirmed at a press briefing last month the agency was reopening the closed cases of DACA enrollees "and putting them back on the docket so they can work their way through the immigration courts."

"Ultimately if the Supreme Court rules that these people do not have a lawful right to be here, it is incumbent on us either to execute the removal orders that were already issued by a judge or put the individual through the immigration court process so we can get a decision from a judge," Albence said.

Edder Diaz-Martinez, 29, a DACA recipient originally from Mexico City, is communications director for the Maricopa County Democratic Party in Phoenix. Diaz-Martinez called the program a Band-Aid and said recipients need a permanent solution.

Karen Martinez, Nevada state digital director for Steyer, is renewing her DACA status at a cost of $500, not knowing if the program will exist later this year. Now 30, she came to the U.S. from Hidalgo, Mexico, when it wasn't just about our individual stats," Reed added. "It was about everyone," so if a senior's shot wasn't falling, then the team could rely on one of its freshman shooters.

"Over the years, I think we've developed a lot of great chemistry and we continued to grow as a team more as the seasons went on," said Lee, who hit two clutch shots in Thursday's contest to put Samohi ahead.

Even new players, like Chantal Moawad, who transferred to Samohi last year, recognize the close-knit bond that is shared by players in the local program.

"I just love being on the team because the chemistry is great. We always work as teammates, and we just play basketball," Moawad said. "I know it sounds simple but we're not selfish, which I think has a big impact and really leads to our success."

Most players on the team feel if they take the playoffs one game at a time and focus on the specific opponent then they'll go far in the upcoming postseason, which is a feat the team hopes to achieve because they want to play with each other for as long as possible.

"This is our last year, so it's really emotional because some of us are going off to different colleges. We're going to leave and live our lives and this is the last time that we'll share this moment so I'm personally trying to take it as far as possible," Reed said. "We already accomplished one goal — winning Ocean League — but I'm trying to do more than that. We have a great team. The freshmen are amazing. We have great team chemistry so I feel like we can play with anyone on the court."

While his players are eager to see if they have what it takes to make to the championship, Head Coach Doug Kim said he tries not to focus on winning and losing because there's much more to the game of life.

"I don't think that stuff matters in the big scheme of things. I think it's about the development and I think basketball is a wonderful medium that allows young women and men to grow and mature," Kim said. "And I think that's been the most beautiful part about watching these kids play."

The coach added in an interview this week he has great stories of kids who came to tryouts in pajamas and house slippers. Some couldn't run up and down the court, much less dribble, while others had people tell them they were the greatest thing since sliced bread.

"It was interesting to watch them learn how to be a team, and that's what's probably been most important for us," Kim said. "There's a lot of schools that espouse this idea of, 'Hey, we're family and we're one unit,' but to say it is one thing and to do it is another. We really try to live by that and we try to keep each other accountable, both academically and athletically. So that's where I think that's maybe where these young women have grown the most."

Reed agreed as she remembered her behavior during ninth-grade.

"Not only has coach taught me a game, he's taught me how to be a young successful woman," Reed said. "So now I'm prepared to go to college and I know how to act and can be independent."

Malibu

City of Malibu Offers Free Disaster Preparedness Class for Seniors and People with Disabilities

As part of ongoing efforts to enhance community-wide disaster preparedness, the City is offering two free courses on disaster preparedness for seniors and people with disabilities or mobility issues on Tuesday, February 18, 8:30 AM and Tuesday, March 3, 8:30 AM at Malibu City Hall.

"Malibu has a whole-community approach to emergency preparedness," said Mayor Karen Farrer. "Seniors and people who have mobility challenges are an important part of our community and are particularly vulnerable during a disaster. We have to ensure that they and their families are prepared, and that our emergency planning takes them into account."

Older adults and people with disabilities or mobility challenges will learn how to prepare for wildfires, earthquakes or other disasters. Will you be able to safely and quickly evacuate during a disaster if you rely on a wheelchair, oxygen or other medical devices, or if you do not drive?

Participants aged 55 or older who complete the class will receive a free emergency preparedness kit. Photo ID is required to receive a kit.

To register for either class, visit www.malibusafety.eventbrite.com. For more information or to register by phone or email, call 310-456-2489 ext. 368 or emailskaplan@malibucity.org.

Housing policies have failed

SANTA MONICA'S AFFORDABLE HOUSING POLICIES HAVE FAILED

Santa Monica claims to be a "Sustainable City of Wellbeing." And yet, housing continues to be a severe challenge in Santa Monica. Our communities are dying as more and more of our friends and neighbors leave due to the high cost of homes. For those that remain, housing is a constant worry.

Santa Monica has a rent-burden rate of nearly 50%. According to the recent Wellbeing study, 62% doubt their kids will be able to afford to live in SM in the future. Can we really consider ourselves to be a city of wellbeing when housing creates so much insecurity and anxiety?

On the City's Housing Commission, we are forced to make decisions in "triage mode," trying to allocate a small amount of housing resources to an increasingly large pool of people in need. We are forced to make morally repugnant decisions about what kind of people "deserve" to live in Santa Monica. At the January Housing Commission meeting, while determining how to prioritize the insufficient housing funds available, we discussed whether families or single people have more value to our City.

The housing situation we find ourselves in is deeply wrong and deeply inequitable. And now, the City is required to produce over 6,000 units of affordable housing over an eight year period, which would likely require over $1.6 billion in funding. To many, meeting our affordable housing obligations seems impossible. How did we get to this situation, and how did things get so wrong?

A crisis this massive builds up over time, through a series of policy failures at different levels of government. But Santa Monica's affordable housing failures deserve specific attention.

Historically, Santa Monica, following the trends of cities at the time, created racist land use and zoning restrictions to "preclude from the residential districts the undesirable classes." These restrictions prohibited multifamily housing development in many areas, and some of these restrictions were continued and strengthened in later decades. As demand increased but housing stock was limited, homeowners benefited financially while renters struggled. Those struggling renters mobilized to pass rent control in the 1970s, but a real strategy or consensus on how to address the long-term needs of population growth and production of affordable housing never materialized.

Instead, in 1998, Santa Monica voters approved Proposition R, under which 30% of new housing in Santa Monica is required to be affordable. Santa Monica has consistently met this requirement. From 2018-2019, Santa Monica exceeded this requirement with 59% of affordable housing in new housing construction. Why, then, is Santa Monica becoming increasingly rent-burdened? If we are exceeding our affordable housing goals, why are more and more of our neighbors forced into homelessness?

The problem is that so little housing is being produced overall. From 2018-2019, only 116 housing units were completed. 68 of those were affordable units. This a small fraction of the thousands of affordable units we currently need. It's easy to make more than 30% of our new housing affordable when there is very little new housing. Santa Monica used to build more than 1,000 housing units every year. Now we're lucky to get a few hundred at most.

In 1998, Santa Monica voters approved Proposition I, as a response to the public housing restrictions created by Article 34 of the California Constitution. Proposition I allowed the city to finance a limited amount of affordable housing each year. However, the effect of Proposition I is that it caps financing of affordable housing, and guarantees we cannot finance enough affordable housing to meet our 6,000+ home requirement. Even if we were to repeal Article 34 and Prop I, finding $1.6 billion (the amount necessary to completely fund the 6,000 affordable homes needed) in the city budget will be an enormous challenge.

Put these intersecting policies together, and affordable housing is an impossibility. 30% of new housing must be affordable, but we cannot fund it through government means.

Looking to the private market, In July 2017, Santa Monica implemented a requirement that 20-30% of all new condos and apartments built in Downtown be designated affordable. Unlike Prop R, the requirement applies to each individual housing project, and not overall housing production. The result is that housing construction stalled, causing us to not only lose housing, but the opportunity to create subsidized affordable housing as well.

We can't fund affordable housing to the degree we need using government funds. And a 30% inclusionary requirement on the private market has proven to be a housing killer. So the only thing we can do in the City is to continue to produce very little housing of any kind, deepening our crisis, and forcing more and more of our community to be displaced every year.

What will it take to turn this crisis around in our City and make this once again a livable place of wellbeing? For one, it will take many major interventions. No one policy solution can reverse a problem of this scale. And it will also take some statewide (and regional) changes, so that our municipal neighbors also do their part to create housing. Despite this, none of our Santa Monica leaders endorsed SB 50, the More HOMES Act, even though it would have created a statewide housing production solution and required the creation of much more affordable housing.

First, we need to start supporting state and regional solutions that get all cities to do their fair share. Next, we need to make hard choices and use any potential funding for affordable housing. We need to reevaluate our inclusionary requirements in the downtown, and start scaling them to something realistic so we can see an increase in construction. We need to give affordable

Big plans for 2020

The Santa Monica Lions are ready to make 2020 are best year yet.

The first activity of the SM Club was to celebrate the charter of our new newly formed Leos Club on January 22nd. Last year, students from Pacific Palisades High School wanted to start their own service club. According to Co-President Scarlett Klein, they "wanted to be more active in the community and wanted to be part of a larger organization." After researching the various youth service organizations, they selected Lions, reaching out to the Santa Monica Lions Club. The students meet Wednesdays at lunch and are hoping to focus on homelessness. Co-President Layla Chambers had done a school project on the issue and in sharing it with her classmates, inspired them. They have plans to volunteer at homeless shelter, get donations and learn more about how they can be a apart of the solution.

With the recent wildfire scare in the Pacific Palisades, the Australian wildfires have struck a chord. Growing up in Southern California, which faces numerous fire threats each year, the Leos feel a responsibility to help. They are putting together plans to go to the Palisades Sew Shop and make blankets for the koalas, along with clothes wings for the bats that have been injured.

The SM Lions started off the year with a program focused on health. At the January 26th meeting we were pleased to host Drs. McEwen and Kaiser from the Pacific Brain Health Center, a part of the Pacific Neuroscience Institute associated with the St. John's Health Center and the John Wayne Institute. The topic was brain fitness and healthy aging. One of the most prevalent fears people have is of mental decline, be it for family members or themselves as they age. The presenters were amazing and prompted an engaging discussion.

Next, the Santa Monica Lions, along with other clubs throughout California, will be holding the first rounds of our annual student speakers contest. The topic this year is, "Homelessness in California: What is the Solution?" The student that makes it through all levels of the contest will have accumulated $21,500 in scholarship money. If you would be interesting in hearing the thoughts and perspectives of our Westside students, we will be holding the first round at the Santa Monica YMCA on Thursday, February 20 at 6:30 p.m. with coffee and desert to be served following the speeches. Please contact Carole Mullaney at carolemullaney6@gmail.com or (310) 399-7604 to RSVP.

If you are a person who is interested in serving the Santa Monica and Westside communities, please consider joining us for a meeting. We have community service projects planned for March, April and June. Please contact Marilynn Schalit at marilynnschalit@yahoo.com or (310) 903-8819 or Yoriko Fisher at yorikofisher@gmail.com or 443-883-1101, to learn more about becoming a Lion.

fog played, and a final report isn't expected for at least a year.

A witness told the NTSB that the helicopter was flying forward and downward through the fog before it crashed right into the hillside. The witness said he saw the helicopter for 1 to 2 seconds before it hit the hill.

The helicopter's instrument panel was destroyed in the crash and most of the devices were displaced, according to the NTSB's investigative update. The flight controls were broken and suffered fire damage.

Investigators believe that since a tree branch at the crash site was cut, it appears the engines were working and rotors turning at the time of impact.

Friday's report was merely informational and did not offer any findings about what caused the crash. The victims' deaths have been ruled an accident by blunt trauma, according to the Los Angeles County coroner.

The deaths shook Los Angeles and the sporting world, with memorials spanning the city and tributes at the Super Bowl and other games. A public memorial for Bryant and the other victims is scheduled for Feb. 24 at the Staples Center.

The arena is where Bryant starred for the Los Angeles Lakers for most of his two-decade and the date 2/24 corresponds with the No. 24 jersey he wore and the No. 2 worn by Gianna.

Ara Zobayan was the chief pilot for Island Express Helicopters and had more than 8,200 hours of flight time. He was additionally certified to fly solely using instruments — a more difficult rating to attain that allows pilots to fly at night and through clouds — and was a pilot to other celebrities including Kawhi Leonard and Kylie Jenner.

The aircraft did not have a device called the Terrain Awareness and Warning System that signals when an aircraft is in danger of hitting ground. The NTSB has recommended the system be mandatory for helicopters but the Federal Aviation Administration only requires it for air ambulances. U.S. Sen. Dianne Feinstein and U.S. Rep. Brad Sherman, both California Democrats, have called for the FAA to mandate the devices in the wake of the tragedy.

It's not clear if the warning system would have averted the crash. The helicopter was also not required to have a black box.

A public memorial for Orange Coast College baseball coach John Altobelli, his wife, Keri, and daughter Alyssa will be held Feb. 10 at Angel Stadium of Anaheim. Also killed in the crash were Bryant friends Christina Mauser, Sarah Chester and her daughter Payton.

HUNTINGTON BEACH

Huntington Beach tsunami sirens were false alarm

Tsunami warning sirens wailing early Friday morning in the Southern California city of Huntington Beach were a false alarm, authorities said.

"There is no current threat to our community and we are working to determine exactly how/why the sirens were activated," the Huntington Beach Fire Department tweeted.

All eight fire stations in Huntington Beach have warning sirens for use in the event of tsunami and are normally tested at noon on the first Friday of each month, according to the city's tsunami preparedness website.

Well known for its surf culture, Huntington Beach has about 10 miles of coastline.

LOS ANGELES

1 dead, 5 injured in Los Angeles residential building fire

One person died and five others were injured when fire raged through a two-story residential hotel early Friday in the Mid-City area of Los Angeles, forcing some people to escape through windows, authorities said.

Fire Department spokesman Nicholas Prange said the fire was caused by a space heater that was too close to combustible materials. The blaze has been ruled accidental.

Two victims, described only as male and female, were in serious condition and one male victim was in critical condition, said Fire Department spokesman Brian Humphrey. A male victim who sought treatment for lacerations was in fair condition and another woman was taken to a hospital by a family member.

"I saw smoke when I looked out my door, so I started running to everybody's door and knocking on their door yelling, 'Fire, fire, fire,' " Tamu Khalfani, who lives at the hotel, told NBC Los Angeles. "Three minutes later, it would've been too late."

Fire was reported in multiple units and both floors of the Venice Hotel on Venice Boulevard around 2 a.m. and 105 firefighters extinguished it in 39 minutes, Humphrey said.

"Individuals were actually breaking out windows and going through their windows to escape the fire," said Assistant Fire Chief Jaime Moore.

she was 10.

But if the program crumbles, Martinez said, "I'll still absolutely feel like I'm an American."

Valdovinos said he tries not to think about what the court may do, noting that he lived without protections for many years in Arizona while Phoenix-area Sheriff Joe Arpaio oversaw high-profile raids targeting migrants and a state law made police turn over people suspected of being in the country illegally to immigration authorities.

In those years, Valdovinos belonged to Team Awesome, comprised of mostly DACA recipients, who knocked on doors in the heavily Latino district of Maryvale to get Mexican American Daniel Hernandez elected to the Phoenix City Council in 2011.

"The toughest political work is walking in our communities, getting them registered, getting them to vote," he said. "The absentee ballots come in the mail with the water bill and sit in a pile of papers for years."

Valdovinos later formed La Machine Consulting Firm to help candidates such as Gallego, Phoenix City Councilman Carlos Garcia and Mayor Kate Gallego with their campaigns.

Fellow Team Awesome member Viridiana Hernandez, who ultimately obtained legal U.S. residency through marriage, said being a DACA recipient helped break down barriers while canvassing neighborhoods.

"I was able to speak to the woman of the house in Spanish, and I'd tell her, 'Look, I'm just like you, without papers,'" Hernandez said. She then could persuade any U.S. citizens in the family to register to vote.

While Valdovinos couldn't join the Marines, he said still hopes to gain citizenship.

"It would be so great to cast a vote after knocking on hundreds of thousands of doors," he said.

housing developers in the City every possible advantage and financial break that we can provide. We need to allow more multifamily housing construction overall, which will help us finance affordable housing, and lessen our housing deficit at other income levels. We need to plan longer term to repeal Proposition I (which first depends on repealing Article 34 of the California Constitution).

But first, we need to acknowledge that the status quo we are defending has failed to make housing affordable for our residents. Only then can we start to find solutions that work to meet our goals.

4 found in critical condition at LA homeless encampment

Four people were taken to hospitals in critical condition after they were found unresponsive Thursday at an apparent homeless encampment in South Los Angeles, a fire official said.

The two men and two women were found shortly after 6:30 p.m. at West 115th Street, Fire Department spokesman Brian Humphrey said.

There was no immediate word on their conditions.

"The cause of their medical emergency has yet to be determined," Humphrey said in a statement.

Santa Monica Daily Press office (310) 458-7737

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (FEBRUARY 08)

There's a first time for everything – or at least there ought to be. Fill your year with firsts, as bursts of newness will be the secret to invigorating your experience. Caring for others will, in an unexpected way, provide you with the opportunity to advance private interests. Your family will grow. Sagittarius and Virgo adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 9, 4, 44, 42 and 18.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). There is warm affection around you, and you won't mind if small surprises are part of the fun, although it doesn't take much to get to a level of excitement you'd deem disconcertingly spontaneous.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). All of life is a rhythm. Finding yours can be quite natural, though you shouldn't let nature dictate every move. Don't underestimate your power to change one that's not working for you either.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). Entrances and exits have power you can use. Decide how you want to show up. Visualize what it will look like, who will pay attention and what feeling you want to create by stepping into the room — and by leaving it.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Are the earth, sun, moon and stars in selfless service to you? Probably not, but would it really hurt to move forward as though that were the truth? Certainly, the heavens have no agenda to oppose you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). To like and accept yourself is only the first level of being at peace in the world. True effectiveness comes with moving up the scale. What if you were crazy about yourself? Work on it. The success that rolls in with this is spectacular.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). To check your ethics will be prudent, conscientious and more than most people will do. Most assume they're right without giving a thought to the bigger picture and far-reaching consequences.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Maybe you don't need to feel guilty, especially if someone is trying to make you feel this way in order to forward their own agenda. Relatedly, don't be tricked into taking responsibility for someone else's problems.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Games of chance will favor you. That doesn't mean you should run to the casino and throw the dice, but if you have a little to risk on the whimsy of the fates you might enjoy the outcome.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Ever feel like you're doing a bad impression of yourself? That's social tension for you. To get comfortable, find the cause of discomfort. Probably, it's a story you're telling yourself. Or it's your shoes.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). It's good to be royal! Your approval makes plans roll into motion. This isn't the case in many areas of your life. Even blood-born monarchs aren't the kings and queens of everything. So celebrate what you rule when you do.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). You'll do instead of worrying about what to do. This is where mistakes get made — excellent. Mistakes are the proof of life. Mistakes are the foliage around the roses of success.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). They say that the truth hurts. Though, to be fair, maybe it's the artless way truth is often delivered that really causes the pain. You'll have a message. Think about it, practice it, try and make it land as softly as possible.
