Running home

LA Marathon carries special significance for Santa Monica residents

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN
Daily Press Staff Writer

When she moved to Santa Monica on March 5, 2014, Cortney Jantzer didn't know anyone other than her husband and her young son. She was excited to be in Southern California, but she was nervous about starting a new life away from home.

Four days later, she was surrounded by tens of thousands of new friends.

It was all thanks to the LA Marathon, which has become an annual tradition for the 36-year-old Atlanta native. On Feb. 14 she will join the mass 26.2-mile exodus from Dodger Stadium to Santa Monica, buoyed by support of the throngs of people around her.

Activist memorial saved during mural removal

WASHED AWAY: City workers are removing the mural from Joslyn Park to make repairs to the retaining wall. The city will preserve a plaque dedicated to Valerie Nordstrom Barnard.

BY MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

Safety concerns have prompted the removal of a mural from Joslyn Park, but at least part of the display will be retained and relocated within the area.

The mural is located on a retaining wall adjacent to Kensington Road. Water damage has cracked the wall and damage to the surrounding area has forced the City to remove the painting to facilitate repairs. A plaque at the site honoring a local activist will be saved and relocated at the park.

Jessica Cusick, cultural affairs manager for the city of Santa Monica said the Arts Commission had already removed the painting from its list of preserved works and planned for the work to be painted over when repairs were made to the wall.

SMMUSD outlines preschool plans

Pilot program scheduled to launch at Edison, Grant next fall

BY JEFFREY I. GOODMAN
Daily Press Staff Writer

Imagine a world in which children go to preschool at the neighborhood elementary campus they plan to attend. The Santa Monica-Malibu school district already has.

District officials last month unveiled a proposed early learning pathway and introduced a pilot program that would include preschool programming at two SMMUSD sites this coming fall.

Although the local Board of Education did not take any action following the study session, district spokeswoman Gail Pinsker said

Venice

Venice Historical Society celebrates 30th anniversary with special quarterly lecture

The Venice Historical Society (VHS) has scheduled a classic evening watching the ever-popular video, "Things That Aren't Here Anymore" narrated by broadcaster Ralph Story and hosted by well-known author/historian Marc Wanamaker.

Marc will be talking about his involvement in the making of this wonderful video. This film will be showing well-loved icons of Los Angeles and Venice Landmarks from the 1920's to the 60's that are no longer with us, but certainly not forgotten. This video scrapbook is filled with personal photographs, film clips and home movies gathered from the attics and collective memories of Angelenos who shared their personal experiences.

The event is scheduled for Wednesday, Feb. 17, at 7 p.m., and will be held at the modern Oakwood Recreation Center, 767 California Ave., Venice, CA, 90291. Admission is $5 for VHS members, $8 for the general public. Snacks will be available. Ample street parking is available.

For further information, call (310) 967-5170 and visit the society's website, venicehistoricalsociety.org.

Los Angeles

Los Angeles Central Library hosts lecture by author Anna Sklar

As part of the 24th Annual Marie Northrop Lecture Series, historian Anna Sklar ("Brown Acres: An Intimate History of the Los Angeles Sewers") traces the often contentious and convoluted history of the water supply for Los Angeles residents at 2 p.m. on Sunday, Feb. 21 in the Mark Taper Auditorium on the first floor of the Central Library, 630 W. 5th Street, Los Angeles. This lecture series is co-sponsored by Los Angeles City Historical Society and the History Department of the Richard J. Riordan Central Library.

Author and Santa Monica resident Anna Sklar discusses early private ownership of the Los Angeles River water supply to public ownership in 1902-to the extraordinary and still controversial construction of the Los Angeles Aqueduct in 1913-to present-day water woes and proposed solutions for the longest drought in California history.

For any handicap accessibility accommodations, call the Library at (213)228-7430 at least 72 hours prior to the event. Admittance is free and open to the public.

The library garage is located on the east side of Flower Street, just south of 5th Street. Parking is $1 after 1:00 PM with a library card. For more information about "Brown Acres," visit http://www.angelcity-press.com/products/brac.

Samohi

Samohi student Michelle LaJoie named candidate in U.S. Presidential Scholars Program

Michelle LaJoie, a graduating senior at Santa Monica High School, has been named one of more than 4,000 candidates in the 2016 U.S. Presidential Scholars Program. Christopher Alba and Ben Ross were the only two other students at Santa Monica High School to earn this honor. The candidates were selected from nearly 3.3 million students expected to graduate from U.S. high schools in the year 2016.

Besides receiving a perfect score on the Reading and Math sections of the SAT, Michelle LaJoie also is an accomplished classical guitarist and founder of a Samohi club providing homeless families with the materials to create birthday celebrations for their children. Furthermore, she is a co-principal violist in the Samohi Symphony Orchestra that will tour Europe this March.

Inclusion in the U.S. Presidential Scholars Program, now in its 52nd year, is one of the highest honors bestowed upon graduating high school seniors. Scholars are selected on the basis of superior academic and artistic achievements, leadership qualities, strong character and involvement in community and school activities.

The U.S. Presidential Scholars Program was established in 1964 by Executive Order of the President to recognize some of our nation's most distinguished graduating seniors for their accomplishments in many areas: academic success, leadership, and service to school and community. It was expanded in 1979 to recognize students demonstrating exceptional scholarship and talent in the visual, creative, and performing arts. In 2015, the program was expanded once again to recognize students who demonstrate ability and accomplishment in career and technical fields. Annually, up to 161 U.S. Presidential Scholars are chosen from among that year's senior class, representing excellence in education and the promise of greatness in America's youth. All Scholars are invited to Washington, DC in June for the National Recognition Program, featuring various events and enrichment activities and culminating in the presentation of the Presidential Scholars Medallion during a White House-sponsored ceremony.

A distinguished panel of educators will review these submissions and select 800 semifinalists in early April. The Commission on Presidential Scholars, a group of up to 32 eminent citizens appointed by the President, will select the finalists, and the U.S. Department of Education will announce the Scholars in May.

Scholars will be invited to Washington, DC, for several days in June to receive the Presidential Scholars Medallion at a recognition ceremony and to participate in events and activities.

Have your Bowl, I'll take hoops at sunset

AM I CRAZY?

Maybe, but I'd rather be called crazy than boring.

So I had to throw half of this column in the trash (icon) just a couple of hours before deadline. (I miss getting to angrily crumple up sheets of paper, so satisfying.) Every time I reread it to fix it, I dozed off, so that was a sign.

I think I can sum it up in a shorter, less painful way.

I was whining about the political process in this town that often seems to discount the opinions of sometimes large groups of residents, especially those who come before City Council or other official bodies to speak their minds. It's a big sacrifice, folks. You give up after-work cocktails and TV, cruising the bars, or shopping for hot new outfits. Or having to make arrangements for the evening for the kids you got because of bars, cocktails and those outfits.

Then because there are a handful of genuine crazies who always show up to get their two minutes of fame on Council TV, you get lumped with them and dismissed as the usual group of suspects. (I LOVE "Casablanca.") Dissidents, malcontents, NIMBYs for zero growth, living in the past in a quaint little beach town that never existed. Pay no attention to them.

It's a common theme navigating all sides of the spectrum here: we're not being listened to. How many people have to show up? If 1,000 people rally for a cause, can they be dismissed as only 1-percent of the population? Years of experience in journalism taught me that if you get five angry letters (old school) you're in trouble, if you get 10, the people have spoken. Lots of people feel strongly but don't take action.

And lots of people just aren't informed, about many issues in this town. Some of that is bound to happen, and some of it is engineered by those who don't want their steamroller looked at too closely. That's why you get people horrified at some project about to break ground, and others who say, "There were three years of hearings, where were you?" ("Taking care of my kids. But I really don't want that thing you're about to do. Stop it. Now.")

In at least two one-on-one conversations some time ago with Council members, they strongly let me know (but without the actual words) that I was naïve, uninformed, misinformed, drinking the Kool Aid, ridiculous, maybe crazy-the word "wrong" was employed, I remember that-about a couple of issues that, lo and behold, turns out I was not so wrong about. Intimidation and being fiercely convinced of your "facts" does win some arguments, but doesn't foster cooperation and enrollment and an atmosphere of progress through compromise.

Hell, I'm even trying to force myself to chew on the stuff coming out of Forward/Next/Spoke/etc., as having sincerity and good intentions, from people who care but have a different opinion. Really… force… myself.

I'm writing this before Tuesday's Council meeting and have no idea what happened, so this is not about those issues. But it would be great if it became a starting point for more listening, more transparency, more feeling on the part of residents that they were being represented, not railroaded.

MY SUPERBOWL SUNDAY WAS GREAT!

How about yours? Did your team win? Did you sit inside for five hours on an absolutely glorious beach day? Glued to a screen, eyes off only to reach for too much to eat and drink?

Yes I know I'm using unnecessary roughness and am in the vast minority. 112 million of you indulged, even my basketball buddy who watched instead of playing with me on empty courts. Thanks, Obama. I mean, Joel.

I do glue to the screen for my preferred sport of hoops. Don't even try to phone me during March Madness or NBA Playoffs. But I've never liked football. Violent by design, militaristic in terminology, macho off the charts, more coaches per team than most sports teams have players… I don't know why that bothers me but it does. And also the headsets they wear. It just seems like such a big organized production rather than a more personalized competition. They even wear so much padding they have less personal contact when they do collide. And don't tell me they need it, to avoid injury - tell that to a rugby player, and tell that to all the NFL ex-players with concussion repercussions. Or just watch the opening scene from "North Dallas Forty." Ouch.

There was no one on the courts at Joslyn and I even found a parking space right there (there are only three). Almost no one in the dog park. And not a single soul inside the community center there trying to save their soul by staying off something. (Gosh, I hope they weren't all falling off the wagon at Super Bowl parties.)

And glory hallelujah I got to shoot some hoops on my favorite courts at the beach that are always full, morning to night, with guys who take their basketball much too seriously and apparently have no ego boost other than on the courts so of course they will run over their grandmother to drive to the hoop and look good. They will earn a fine injury some day, I'm telling you. I was there for sunset and there's nothing much better than that. Since I wasn't in a game I had much more opportunity to stop and take it all in. The final stage, a sliver of rose topped with a fading layer of robin egg blue, was exquisite and lasted forever. Then I went to the supermarket and didn't have to steer around a single other shopping cart. I felt camaraderie with my few scattered fellow shoppers. None of us gave a flying frozen fish fillet about that game.

Then I came home and turned on the DVR not expecting much of the halftime show. Instead of Carolina Panthers I got black panthers. I haven't seen that many fros since Malcolm X's funeral. Wasn't a Beyoncé fan until my musically wise daughter told me to wise up. Probably still won't spin her music given other choices, but man she is becoming a force of culture and politics. My black beret is off to her for that show of force.

Housing discrimination in Santa Monica?

WE ALL KNOW IT'S ILLEGAL TO DENY housing to a person on the basis of their race or religion. But there are a lot of less-obvious situations that also violate the fair housing laws.

A single mother of two young sons (we'll call her Liz) rented a second-floor apartment in Santa Monica. One day she heard the mailman downstairs so she walked outside to the landing, waved at her sons who were down playing in the courtyard, and then headed toward her mailbox. Liz's sons had their toy tractors out and were playing "farm" with another child in the complex's well-protected courtyard. Liz didn't know what she would do without the courtyard. Her sons loved playing outside - an activity scientific studies show they need - but she didn't have time to take them to the park.

In her mail, Liz saw that the property management company had sent her a notice. Since it wasn't rent collection time, she unfolded the notice with some dread. Then she read it: a 30-day notice saying that from then on, no children could play, loiter, or otherwise be left alone in the common areas of the complex - including the courtyard. The notice said that the kids' noise was bothering other residents.

Liz wasn't sure what her rights were. So she called the Santa Monica City Attorney's Office. She eventually filed a fair housing complaint with the City Attorney's Consumer Protection Division.

The Consumer Protection Division enforces the fair housing laws in Santa Monica. Those laws protect housing applicants and tenants from discrimination - meaning that landlords and managers can't treat people differently based on their race, religion, age, gender, disability, sexual orientation, or on many other bases.

The main exception is that housing providers must treat persons with disabilities differently to the extent they need accommodations or modifications to have equal enjoyment of their home.

Here in Santa Monica, most fair housing complaints come from tenants with disabilities who were denied accommodations or modifications they needed because of their disabilities. (This topic will be covered in a later column.) The next most frequent type of fair housing complaint comes from families with children. Some Santa Monica landlords are still hesitant to rent to anyone with children, even though denying housing on this basis is illegal. Or, like Liz's landlord, they have rules that prohibit children's equal use of the complex.

Like a rule barring any protected group from equal enjoyment of the property, the no-children rule violated the fair housing laws. On this basis, the Consumer Division was able to persuade the management company to rescind the rule.

Tenants or housing applicants who think they were treated differently because of their race, disability, age, religion, or any other legal classification, should contact the Consumer Protection Division. We also welcome calls from owners who want to do the right thing, or just to know what the law requires. For more information, contact us at smconsumer.org or (310) 458-8336.

The City Attorney's Consumer Protection Division enforces the law and educates the public about tenants' rights, fair housing, consumer protection, and other issues. They can be reached at 310-458-8336 or smconsumer.org.

ART

"At the time, they really said there's no point in continuing to repaint this or trying to conserve this as it's in large part a retaining wall," she said. "There will always be leeching and there's no way a mural can hold up well in those circumstances."

According to a press release issued by the City, Art Mortimer installed the mural in 1980. A plaque dedicated to the memory and community work of Ocean Park resident Valerie Nordstrom Barnard was installed at some point after her death in 1981.

"The mural was substantially repainted by the artist in 1994. And in 2002, the mural was assessed by painting conservators who found that substantial structural damage to the concrete walls continues to affect the overall condition of the mural, particularly in the sections that are sub-grade retaining walls that are not a suitable for a mural," said the release.

Workers began removing the painting on Feb. 9 and Cusick acknowledged a lack of communication between the City and nearby neighbors. She said the preferred plan would have included outreach prior to the start of the work.

"We were hoping for better coordination," she said.

Barnard's family said they were surprised to receive calls from friends and neighbors about the work.

"We didn't find out until this morning, until neighbors saw them pressure washing it," said Barnard's former husband, Russell Nordstrom.

Barnard and Nordstrom were divorced prior to her death. Barnard later remarried and died during complications from childbirth.

Barnard was a longtime activist in the Ocean Park neighborhood with a particular focus on protecting victims of domestic violence. Barnard helped found the Los Angeles Commission on Assaults Against Women, now known as Peace Over Violence. She worked to secure shelters for women throughout the region and her work resulted in substantial recognition from local and state authorities.

Nordstrom said Barnard was also a hands-on activist. He said she and some friends once organized a protest outside the wedding of an alleged rapist. "When the bride got there and saw that, that wedding never happened," he said.

Barnard and his daughter both said they understood the need to remove the painting. They said as long as the plaque is preserved and remounted somewhere within the area, they can support the efforts.

"It's ok, as long as it doesn't get lost and it shows up someplace," he said. "It's a landmark, it's a family thing. Her grandchildren, 7 and 5, they don't know the stories or anything but as they get older they'll learn. It would be nice for them to see their grandmother's name."

Cusick said the City has reached out to the family to begin discussions about a new location for the memorial.

According to Cusick, Santa Monica is in the early stages of a comprehensive public art review. She said the City recently completed the first comprehensive survey of the City's public art, and that various organizations are in the midst of planning for the future of local art.

"We have about a million dollars worth of conservation needs and we're trying to prioritize it, but we're also in the process of launching a public art planning process," she said. "We want to work with the community to identify priorities, what the neighborhoods want to see in terms of art, if that's murals or other approaches."

She said the City will hire a consultant to help develop the plan in the near future and there will be significant opportunities for public participation in the process.

more information will soon be available on the tuition structure and other district expenses related to facility upgrades.

The plans for expanding early childhood education build on years of work by district officials and community advocates, according to Terry Deloria, assistant superintendent for educational services.

"They knew better, before anyone else," she said. "If you start children with a good preschool program, it serves them throughout their life."

Indeed, the study session came amid increased focus by city and state leaders on the impacts and potential benefits of early childhood education as they attempt to close longstanding achievement gaps.

The Santa Monica Cradle to Career initiative has singled out preparation for kindergarten as a priority as it strives to improve youth wellbeing. In June, the school board approved an agreement between the district and Santa Monica College to establish a collaborative preschool program that would serve 108 area children under age 6 at John Adams Child Development Center and Washington West Preschool.

President Obama noted the importance of pre-kindergarten programs in his last State of the Union address. A recent report by the nonprofit American Institutes for Research shows that preschool and transitional kindergarten opportunities give students advantages over their peers.

"Without access to high-quality school readiness programs, low-income children, children of color and English learners enter school at a disadvantage," reads a statement by Early Edge California, an education advocacy group, "and those who start behind often stay behind."

Edison Language Academy and Grant Elementary School have been chosen as pilot sites for fall 2016. Officials hope to launch preschool at Juan Cabrillo Elementary School in Malibu by 2017. They discussed aligning the preschool program with transitional kindergarten and kindergarten options. The preschool and TK programs have been dubbed Seaside and Bridges, respectively.

Transitional kindergarten is currently offered at Will Rogers, McKinley and Webster elementary schools.

Ben Swett, a district parent who has been involved with the Santa Monica Child Care and Early Education Task Force, brought up the district's recently implemented centralized fundraising system, which was touted as a way to improve equity across SMMUSD. He said that discussion is also relevant to issues involving kindergarten readiness.

"If you want to equalize outcomes, the place to do that is invest in early childhood," he told the board. "I'm happy to see you're taking steps in that direction. [This is] another opportunity to push things further and go faster if you want to. Santa Monica leads the world in yoga, but we also have great early education resources."

MARATHON

When you've lived somewhere for 30 years and move so quickly, to be able to connect like that is amazing."

This year's LA Marathon will welcome runners from across the country and around the world. But the race seems to carry special significance for Jantzer and other residents of the beachside city, where Ocean Avenue leads to the finish line.

More than 450 Santa Monicans ranging in age from 14 to 75 participated in last year's LA Marathon, according to a Daily Press review of race results. The cohort was led by Jeffrey Tomlinson, 34, whose time of 2 hours 52 minutes 8 seconds made him the fastest local male entrant and the 89th finisher overall. Also cracking the top 100 were 28-year-old Dave Tassone (99th, 2:53.44) and 39-year-old Kevin Purcell (100th, 2:53.46). The fastest Santa Monica woman in the race was Erika Aklufi, 38, who ran a 2:55.13 to place 107th overall.

Santa Monicans also play big roles as spectators. Homeowners along San Vicente Boulevard have been known to distribute orange slices and shout words of encouragement as runners enter the home stretch.

"I love the support as you get closer to Santa Monica," Jantzer said. "The crowd support around the houses we run, where the kids are handing out oranges, that's monumental to me."

Getting to the finish line is a familiar accomplishment for Jantzer, who has completed 76 half marathons, including 40 in the last year, as well as seven marathons and one 50-kilometer race.

She began running when she was 14, determined to power through the mile loop around her neighborhood.

"It started off as this Zen thing," she said. "I loved being outdoors, and it was a time to think and figure out life."

Jantzer kept running through college and into marriage and motherhood. An operations project manager as well as a running coach and yoga instructor, she moved to Santa Monica for a job opportunity for her husband.

Although she's serious about her sport, Jantzer keeps things light by wearing costumes as she runs, often with advice from her 4-year-old son. In the past she's dressed up as Wonder Woman, Batman and Captain America, among other superheroes.

A perk for Jantzer, who lives about a mile and a half from the pier, is that she can walk home after the race.

"When you turn that corner and you feel the beach breeze, you can smell you're at the finish line," she said. "To know metaphorically and literally that you're running home, there's something euphoric about it. You know you're home."

BANK

preparing low-income people for jobs in the banking industry.

That goal made the program a natural fit for SMC, said Michelle King, the school's director of career and contract education.

"It's part of the mission to help build and prepare the local workforce," King said, adding that the college is always looking for new partners for its extension courses. "That's part of what we're doing. It's an opportunity to work with an organization that has a curriculum built, and they have a history of success. It makes sense. We have a shared goal here."

For JVSLA, the partnership advances its goal of helping adults from traditionally underserved communities pursue careers with good pay and growth opportunities. Earlier this month, the organization held a graduation for its 58th BankWork$ training class at the EXPO Center in Los Angeles.

BankWork$ has been successful, associate director Lisa Meadows said, because the 1,000-plus trainees who have gone through the program are introduced to potential employers and recruiters. More than 800 of them have been placed in jobs with help from JVSLA.

"We're really excited about getting on the Westside more," Meadows said. "We have a class in L.A. near Downtown, and we want to address the Westside too because there are a lot of bank openings."

The partnership came about after officials from SMC's Community Education department reached out to the nonprofit, which was founded during the Great Depression and which now has more than 30 training and counseling centers across the region.

The program resonated with King, who was a vice president of financial management for Union Bank of California before taking a leadership position at SMC.

"She was super excited about getting this kind of program at Santa Monica College to reach more people who would like to pursue careers in banking," Meadows said. "It's wonderful because it helps people achieve self-sufficiency and get full-time positions."

Thanks to support from banks and charitable foundations, JVSLA is able to offer the 8-week program for free. At the local community college, it will be available to students who are actively pursuing degrees, as well as people in the community.

Prospective candidates who apply for the BankWork$ program must be at least 18 years old with a high school diploma or GED certification, speak and write English and have basic computer skills.

"We're hoping for the non-students that we're able to introduce them to the college and that they would consider returning to the college as they seek to advance their career and develop their skills," King said.

CRIME WATCH

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department. These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON JANUARY 25 AT APPROXIMATELY 3:30 P.M.

Loss prevention agents at the Vons Store at 1311 Wilshire Blvd. saw the suspect take a shopping cart into the hair care aisle inside their store and start loading several bottles of shampoo into it. The suspect then walked over to the liquor aisle and began concealing the shampoo bottles inside his pants, before walking out the front door without paying for anything. The agents confronted the suspect outside the store, and then handcuffed him after a brief struggle. Santa Monica police officers were later called to the location to take the suspect into custody and book him at the Santa Monica jail.
The suspect was identified as Melvin Salvador Salmeron, 20, of Van Nuys was charged with shoplifting. Bail was set at $5,000.

Sudoku

Fill in the blank cells using numbers 1 to 9. Each number can appear only once in each row, column, and 3x3 block. Use logic and process of elimination to solve the puzzle. The difficulty level ranges from (easiest) to (hardest).

Difficulty Level ★★★

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ The Job of the Researcher: Taiwanese scientists recently announced the availability of their Infant Cries Translator (iPhone and Android app), which they say can, with 77 percent accuracy (92 percent for those under 2 weeks old), tell what a baby wants by its screeches and wailings. The National Taiwan University Hospital Yunlin doctors first had to create a database of 200,000 crying sounds.

The Latest in Corruption News: (1) Italy's highest court freed a man in January because the bribe he offered a cop to avoid a DUI ticket was "too small" to be serious – 100 euros (about $108). (2) Lawyers for John Bills (former Chicago city commissioner on trial for taking bribes on a traffic-camera contract) said Bills was obviously innocent because everyone knows that, in Chicago, only bribing the mayor (or at least an alderman) will get anything done. (3) A security guard in Nairobi, Kenya, despairingly told a New York Times reporter in November (detailing corruption so rampant that, for example, ballpoint pens were being sold to the government for $85 each) that "If (people)'re going to steal, please, just steal a little."

All smiles tonight, Pisces

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ Should you make a hasty decision today, know that it could backfire. You might be forced to spend a lot of downtime alone to figure out where you went wrong. Do some heavy thinking and decide where your energy would be best placed. Tonight: Go for some extra R and R.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★★ Though others could stumble into hassle after hassle, you will see the situations in your life play out differently. You are OK with a more easygoing solution, whereas a friend or loved one might feel that it is important to make the right decision for you. Tonight: A force to behold.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ You are more centered and direct than usual. This mindset could be more significant than you realize. You might feel like you're at the center of a storm with many crosswinds hitting you. A partner is likely to suggest that you revise your schedule. Tonight: Working late.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Experiencing life unpredictably is easy for you. Your innate shift of moods reinforces a need for constant change. Perhaps the only consistent aspect of your life is change. Use your ability to look at the big picture, and you'll find the right path. Tonight: Use your imagination.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★ No matter what your status is, someone in your life often seems to trigger many romantic thoughts. Follow a suggestion from this person, but only as long as it doesn't get you into too much trouble. This individual serves as a muse in your life. Tonight: Be responsive!

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Continue to defer to those you care about. Whether you know it, or whether you are right or wrong, it really makes no difference. You are giving the other party an opportunity to express his or her individuality. Graciousness will be appreciated. Tonight: Try a new hotspot.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ You might have been on a roll at the beginning of the week, but now you must deal with everything that you have been putting off. As a result, you are likely to be busy with an up-and-coming project, and could have to do some delegating. Tonight: Use your instincts well.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Many people see you as brilliant; however, your ingenuity and great ideas come from a strong imagination. A business meeting could become far more provocative, but only if you run with the moment. Tonight: Acting like a teenager might renew your spirit.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★ Pressure stems from your judgments about what is expected of you. You could be pushing yourself very hard without recognizing why. The good news is that you'll see the results you want. Others seem to admire your success and your drive. Tonight: Out till the wee hours.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ More and more you become in touch with your intuition. You are beginning to understand just how valid this voice can be, even if you don't want to acknowledge it. Stop and think about some of your decisions today and how you got where you are. Tonight: Return calls first.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★ Take charge of your finances. You might not want to, but consider the ramifications if you don't. Someone you admire could be very quarrelsome today. Try to walk in this person's shoes, and you will understand where he or she is coming from. Tonight: Respond to a close loved one.

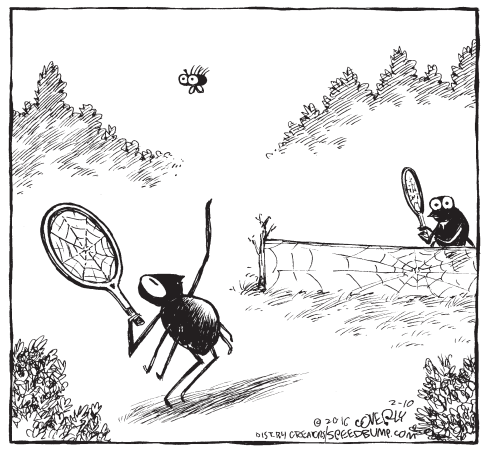

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★ You might experience some anxiety regarding a decision. Worry less, and do more research. You will come up with the right path for you. Understand that each individual is very different and that choices will be very different from one person to the next. Tonight: All smiles.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS
The stars show the kind of day you'll have:
★★★★★Dynamic ★★ So-So
★★★★ Positive ★ Difficult
★★★ Average

This year you often opt for the most feasible decision. You are not a sign that is known to be practical, yet you will be this year. You will be particularly careful about your finances and long-term goals. Frustration often greets you around an authority figure, parent and/or boss. Know when to go along with this person's wishes. If you are single, you could meet someone quite easily. If you are attached, a trip with your sweetie will be significant. Many of you will strengthen the vitality of your bond. SCORPIO will do whatever is necessary to have his or her way.
