Community suggestions on medical pot run gamut

BY KEVIN HERRERA
Editor-in-Chief

MAIN LIBRARY As Los Angeles struggles to decide what to do with its medical marijuana dispensaries, Santa Monica city officials embarked Thursday on the complex process of deciding whether or not to allow them at all, and if so how to regulate them.

Unfortunately, very few people bothered to attend the first public meeting of its kind.

About a dozen people, many of whom owned dispensaries in Los Angeles and West Hollywood, showed up at the Main Library to express their opinions. And while the ideas varied when it came to regulating them, one thing was clear: The majority favored allowing dispensaries to set up shop in Santa Monica.

Filmmaker Len Richmond, who produced the documentary "What if Cannabis Cured Cancer?" was one of them. The Santa Monica resident said he is disabled and can't drive to other areas where dispensaries are already in operation. He needs to get his medical marijuana closer to home to provide relief for the pain he suffers because of kidney stones and shingles.

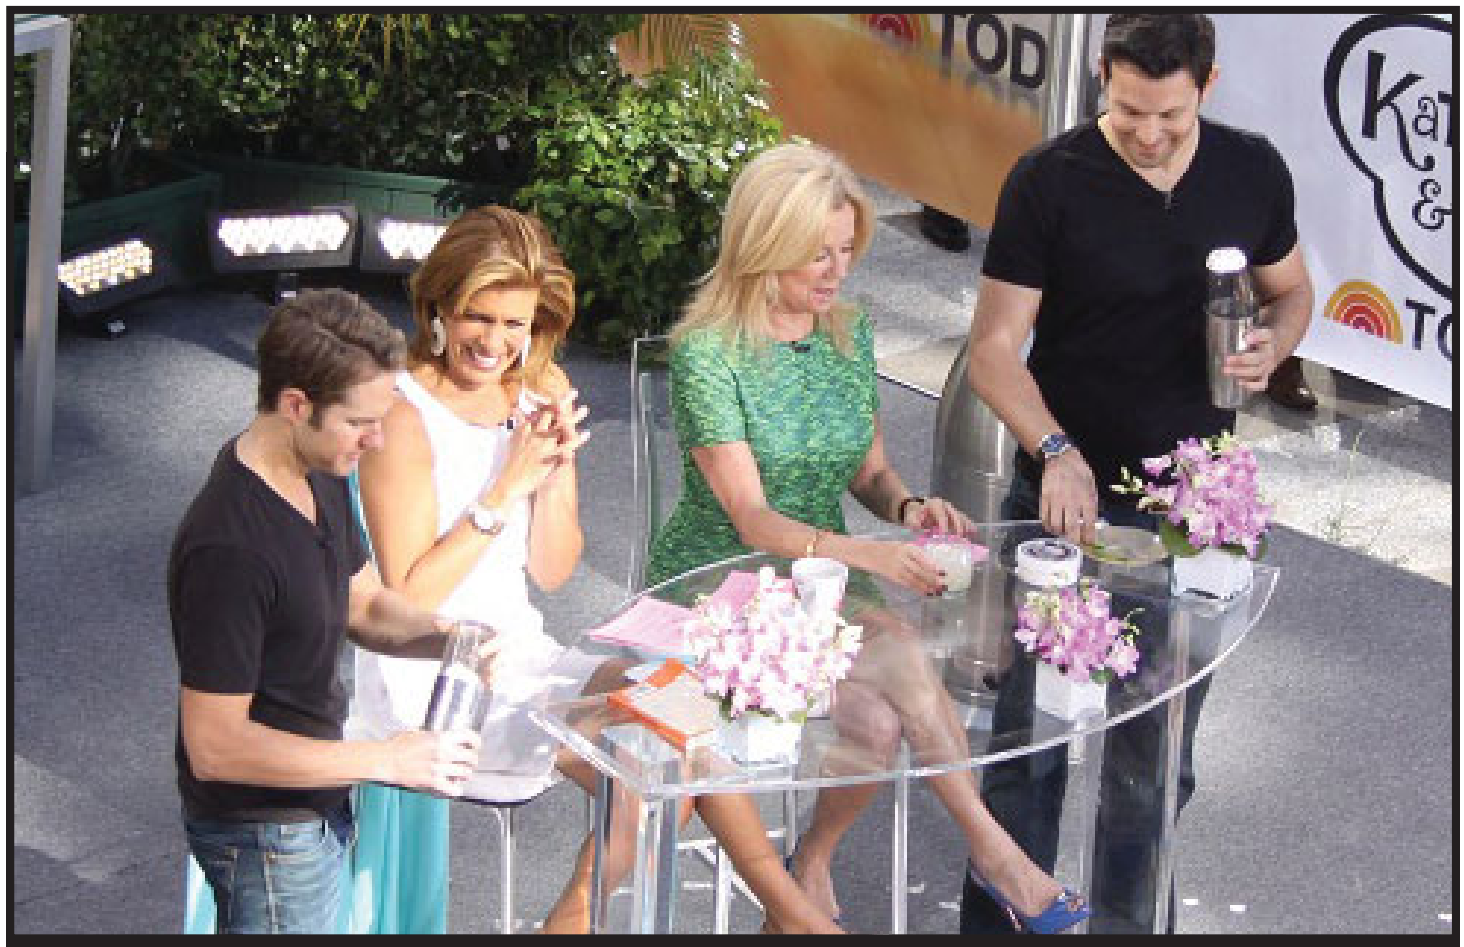

He also said that only a certain strain of marijuana works and without a professional to help guide him, he would have to hit the streets and take his chances.

"Without dispensaries in Santa Monica, you are making it very prohibitive for me," he said.

City officials presented a list of policy-oriented questions to guide the night, beginning with the most critical: Is there a need for medical marijuana in Santa Monica?

If the answer to that is "yes," City Hall needs to lay down other guidelines, including how many facilities should be allowed; the placement of those in relation to schools, playgrounds and other community sites; and whether or not proprietors should be allowed to grow or process marijuana on Documentarian Bill Dumas is facing that question now over his newest release, "Duty, Honor, Country, Betrayal," a film narrated by actor and activist Ed Asner that looks into the decade-long conflict between the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs and those it is meant to serve over the use of land at the VA's sprawling, scenic campus in West Los Angeles.

Although nearly every filmmaker begins a project with the intention that it accrue some kind of success or acclaim, Dumas' film is about more than filled the-

Long-time active senior dies at 75

Santa Monica lost one of its active seniors when Arlene Wagner died on Feb. 3, at age 75.

Wagner, a native Canadian, graduated nursing school in 1957 and got a medical technician job at a Santa Monica hospital in 1958.

Although retired since 2002, Wagner's life was never starved for fun or excitement. The 75-year-old loved competition and led a bowling team to nationals for 35 straight years, friends said.

Wagner was very involved in local sports, and even pitched in an adult softball league just weeks before her passing.

"I can't remember her ever striking out," said Barbara Hornak, a league umpire. "Tough as nails, she would pitch, and take a line drive on the shin, and still try to make the play to first."

Wagner remained an active member in her community, delivering food as a Meals on Wheels driver until her sudden death.

For a Santa Monican who loved to bake, make quilts, drive seniors to doctor appointments, and always ran to first base the journey of life has ended.

'Identity Thief' swipes No. 1 spot with $36.6M

DAVID GERMAIN
AP Movie Writer

LOS ANGELES — "Identity Thief" has turned out to be the real thing at the North American box office.

The comedy starring Jason Bateman and Melissa McCarthy debuted at No. 1 with a $36.6 million opening weekend, according to studio estimates Sunday.

"Identity Thief" opened solidly despite the winter storm that buried much of the U.S. Northeast. Distributor Universal Pictures estimates the storm might have choked off as much as 10 percent of the movie's business.

"It took such a chunk out of the business this weekend. But we can't control Mother Nature," said Nikki Rocco, Universal's head of distribution. "We probably could have hit $40 million if it weren't for the weather this weekend."

The previous weekend's top movie, the zombie romance "Warm Bodies," fell to No. 2 with $11.5 million. That raises its domestic total to $36.7 million.

The weekend's other new wide release, Steven Soderbergh's thriller "Side Effects," had a modest opening of $10 million, coming in at No. 3.

Tom Cruise's 1986 hit "Top Gun" took flight again in theaters with a 3-D reissue that pulled in $1.9 million in narrow release of 300 theaters. The movie has a short run on the big-screen leading up to its Feb. 19 3-D release on DVD and Blu-ray.

Overall domestic revenues were down sharply from a year ago, when four movies had big openings — "The Vow," "Safe House," "Journey 2: The Mysterious Island" and a 3-D reissue of "Star Wars: Episode I — The Phantom Menace."

Receipts totaled $105 million, down 45

Building toward a problem

Editor:

Here they go again. The Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights-controlled City Council wants to give city staff authority to approve development of a 50-unit low- and extremely-low-income rental housing project with no citizen input.

This proposal is clearly to implement SMRR's election platform for "environmental justice." The proposed ordinance recognizes that a disproportionate burden has been placed on the Pico Neighborhood, i.e. there is a low-income housing project on almost every block, 200 low-income housing units surrounding Edison Elementary School, and shootings and drug use close to the projects. By over concentrating the low-income rental housing projects in the Pico Neighborhood the city has violated the right of equality of minorities by denying them better housing opportunities between Wilshire and San Vicente boulevards. The ordinance will provide the city a method of desegregating the Montana Avenue elementary schools. The SMRR platform exempts 100 percent low-income housing projects from height and density restrictions.

Let's desegregate the area between Wilshire and San Vicente by developing hundreds of high-density, low-income rental housing units there. Please attend the council meeting on Feb. 12 and voice your approval for this proposal.

Fan of Vidiots

Editor:

I really like the new "blocks of color" mural by Santa Monica- based artist Joe Nicoletti that is all over the exterior of the Vidiots video and DVD store on Pico Boulevard ("Fresh looks," Feb. 5). But what I also really like is the fact that Vidiots is one of the best community oriented and community supporting businesses in all of Santa Monica. And they have such a fantastic and diversified selection that you just can't find anywhere else. Not to mention the frequent creative public events and screenings in the Vidiots Annex. My point is if you haven't ever been to Vidiots you owe it to yourself to drop on by. They also have the very best and friendliest staff. Vidiots has been supporting our community for so many years. Let's show them how much we appreciate and support them.

City officials dropping ball on Saint John's parking problem

PARKING HAS ALWAYS BEEN AN ISSUE in the Mid-City neighborhood around Saint John's Health Center. Demand for space for hospital employees, patients and visitors far outstrips the available parking at the medical campus.

Hospital staff and visitors alike park on the surrounding, mostly residential streets 24 hours a day. A 1998 development agreement (DA) that allowed Saint John's to build a new hospital required the construction of a 442-stall subterranean parking garage.

Because they didn't want to spend an estimated $25 million to build the garage, Saint John's management asked City Hall for permission to amend its 1998 DA to allow them instead to lease 450 excess parking spaces at the Colorado (formerly Yahoo!) Center two blocks away.

There was just one problem: Saint John's had been leasing parking space since 2009 in violation of the Yahoo! Center's 1981 DA, which did not permit it to lease parking space to non-tenants.

On June 28, 2011, both an amended 1981 Yahoo! Center DA and the 1998 St. John's DA were approved on second reading by the City Council. The amendments allowed Colorado Center to legally lease 450 spaces in its garage to Saint John's.

In reviewing the 10-year parking license agreement (PLA) between Saint John's and Colorado Center a few days ago, local attorney Stanley Epstein noticed it was dated June, 10, 2011 — 18 days before the parties received City Hall's permission.

Epstein also informed me that the PLA has a provision that if the 1981 Yahoo! DA were not amended by Dec. 31, 2011 to permit non-tenant parking leases, an earlier 2009 license agreement with Saint John's that allowed it to lease parking would be reinstated. In other words, City Hall gave its blessings to a clear violation of the Colorado Center's 1981 development agreement.

City staff had reviewed the PLA but apparently never informed council or the public of the provision that allowed a two-year violation to continue, even if the leased parking arrangements in the amended DAs weren't officially approved by year end, 2011.

By knowingly allowing these significant violations, how can we expect City Hall to enforce any other DAs — plus variances — or to do what's right for the community? The record once again shows we can't trust City Hall to look out for our interests.

To make things worse, the PLA allowed the Colorado Center to terminate Saint John's license with 120 days written notice if space was needed for tenant parking. Saint John's informed City Hall last December that it had received notice of license termination effective March 31, 2013.

I had written in these pages on June 13, 2011 that the Colorado Center's owners boasted that there's enough parking available in their garage that "they could lease out 1,053 stalls to non-tenants and still provide sufficient tenant parking." If the center were to fully lease all its office/retail space (one third was unoccupied at the time), its owners claimed, that "even at full tenant occupancy at peak periods they would have parking space left over."

It appears that everyone was fed a pack of lies because the Colorado Center garage has gone from "way overbuilt" to "inadequate" in just 18 months. Did the Colorado Center owners fib in June, 2011 when they claimed that there would be sufficient parking even if the building were fully leased? Or, did they send a possibly invalid termination notice by falsely "claiming" that all 450 leased spaces were needed for tenants?

What's next? Ultimately, Saint John's management is faced with making new shared-parking arrangements or conjuring up a whole new scheme by the end of March to replace its lost parking.

The amended Saint John's DA states that if the PLA is terminated and if an acceptable traffic and parking management plan is not thereafter promulgated, City Hall can force Saint John's to build the parking garage as required by its original 1998 DA — something that should have been done to begin with.

It appears that City's Hall's willingness to waffle and obfuscate on Saint John's parking obligations has encouraged hospital decision makers to avoid providing adequate and permanent parking for all concerned. It's an unfortunate course of action that negatively impacts thousands of neighbors, hospital employees and guests.

Even if Saint John's is eventually forced to build the garage, construction would take years. In the meantime, parking and traffic woes in the Mid-City area will worsen and everyone exposed to this debacle will continue to be poorly served. There's a lesson in this for all those "car and parking lot haters" who want City Hall to reduce parking requirements for new developments. There's never enough parking.

LESS POWER TO THE PEOPLE

Tuesday night the City Council will take action on a new plan that would make it easier for developers to get approval for projects with up to 50 apartments if they are willing to build more low-income apartments into the projects.

The proposal would exempt these fairly large, four- or five-floor housing developments — already permitted in most areas of the city — from public review if 25 percent of the units are for low and very low income tenants. Review and approvals would be handled internally by city planners.

Any proposal that bypasses public input and replaces it with a "behind closed doors" process is a bad idea. Let the council know what you think.

Thanks to Stanley Epstein for his assistance in preparing this column and providing legal information about the amended DAs and Parking License Agreement.

Solar industry grapples with hazardous wastes

JASON DEAREN
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO Homeowners on the hunt for sparkling solar panels are lured by ads filled with images of pristine landscapes and bright sunshine, and words about the technology's benefits for the environment — and the wallet.

What customers may not know is that there's a dirtier side.

While solar is a far less polluting energy source than coal or natural gas, many panel makers are nevertheless grappling with a hazardous waste problem. Fueled partly by billions in government incentives, the industry is creating millions of solar panels each year and, in the process, millions of pounds of polluted sludge and contaminated water.

To dispose of the material, the companies must transport it by truck or rail far from their own plants to waste facilities hundreds and, in some cases, thousands of miles away.

The fossil fuels used to transport that waste, experts say, is not typically considered in calculating solar's carbon footprint, giving scientists and consumers who use the measurement to gauge a product's impact on global warming the impression that solar is cleaner than it is.

After installing a solar panel, "it would take one to three months of generating electricity to pay off the energy invested in driving those hazardous waste emissions out of state," said Dustin Mulvaney, a San Jose State University environmental studies professor who conducts carbon footprint analyses of solar, biofuel and natural gas production.

The waste from manufacturing has raised concerns within the industry, which fears that the problem, if left unchecked, could undermine solar's green image at a time when companies are facing stiff competition from each other and from low-cost panel manufacturers from China and elsewhere.

"We want to take the lessons learned from electronics and semiconductor industries (about pollution) and get ahead of some of these problems," said John Smirnow, vice president for trade and competitiveness at the nearly 500-member Solar Energy Industries Association.

The increase in solar hazardous waste is directly related to the industry's fast growth over the past five years — even with solar business moving to China rapidly, the U.S. was a net exporter of solar products by $2 billion in 2010, the last year of data available. The nation was even a net exporter to China.

New companies often send hazardous waste out of their plants because they have not yet invested in on-site treatment equipment, which allows them to recycle some waste.

Nowhere is the waste issue more evident than in California, where landmark regulations approved in the 1970s require industrial plants like solar panel makers to report the amount of hazardous materials they produce, and where they send it. California leads the consumer solar market in the U.S. — which doubled overall both in 2010 and 2011.

The Associated Press compiled a list of 41 solar makers in the state, which included the top companies based on market data, and startups. In response to an AP records request, the California Department of Toxic Substances Control provided data that showed 17 of them reported waste, while the remaining did not.

The same level of federal data does not exist.

The state records show the 17 companies, which had 44 manufacturing facilities in California, produced 46.5 million pounds of sludge and contaminated water from 2007 through the first half of 2011. Roughly 97 percent of it was taken to hazardous waste facilities throughout the state, but more than 1.4 million pounds were transported to nine other states: Arkansas, Minnesota, Nebraska, Rhode Island, Nevada, Washington, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona.

Several solar energy experts said they have not calculated the industry's total waste and were surprised at what the records showed.

Solyndra, the now-defunct solar company that received $535 million in guaranteed federal loans, reported producing about 12.5 million pounds of hazardous waste, much of it carcinogenic cadmium-contaminated water, which was sent to waste facilities from 2007 through mid-2011.

Before the company went bankrupt, leading to increased scrutiny of the solar industry and political fallout for President Barack Obama's administration, Solyndra said it created 100 megawatts-worth of solar panels, enough to power 100,000 homes.

The records also show several other Silicon Valley solar facilities created millions of pounds of toxic waste without selling a single solar panel, while they were developing their technology or fine-tuning their production.

While much of the waste produced is considered toxic, there was no evidence it has harmed human health.

The Q Line

Something in the air

City officials are actively seeking the public's opinion on medical marijuana dispensaries. There are currently none located in Santa Monica, but there are certainly interested parties who would like to set up shop.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Do you think dispensaries should be allowed in town, and if so, where and under what guidelines?

Contact qline@smdp.com before Friday at 5 p.m. and we'll print your answers in the weekend edition of the Daily Press. You can also call 310-573-8354.

How are droughts and wildfires caused by global warming? I thought warming mostly brought on wet and flooded conditions.

By throwing the planet's climate regulation systems out of whack, global warming is likely to cause more extreme weather events of every kind, including additional precipitation and flooding in some cases and more drying and drought in others-sometimes within the same region.

According to the Union of Concerned Scientists (UCS), a leading non-profit, increased temperatures on the Earth's surface due to global warming accelerates evapotranspiration, an otherwise natural process that takes moisture from land, plants and water bodies and moves it skyward into the atmosphere.

"In drier regions, evapotranspiration may produce periods of drought-defined as below-normal levels of rivers, lakes and groundwater, and lack of enough soil moisture in agricultural areas," reports UCS. "Precipitation has declined in the tropics and subtropics since 1970. Southern Africa, the Sahel region of Africa, southern Asia, the Mediterranean, and the U.S. Southwest, for example, are getting drier." Even areas that are typically wet, says the group, can experience long, dry spells between extreme rainy periods.

This drying trend is expected to continue through mid-century as the amount of land affected by drought grows significantly. Water resources in affected areas are predicted to decline by as much as 30 percent. "These changes occur partly because of an expanding atmospheric circulation pattern known as the Hadley Cell-in which warm air in the tropics rises, loses moisture to tropical thunderstorms, and descends in the subtropics as dry air," adds UCS. "As jet streams continue to shift to higher latitudes, and storm patterns shift along with them, semi-arid and desert areas are expected to expand."

The National Wildlife Federation (NWF) adds that the sea level rise expected to accompany global warming (as the polar ice caps melt) could further complicate matters for water-constrained areas by contaminating critical inland underground freshwater reserves with salt (so-called "saltwater intrusion").

Another effect of unmitigated global warming will be a increased frequency of large wildfires and an expansion of burned over areas in already fire-prone regions like much of the Western U.S. NWF reports that researchers there are already noticing longer fire seasons, drier conditions persisting later into the year, and an increased frequency of lightning as thunderstorms are becoming more frequent and severe. The group adds that forest fires are expected to burn over twice as much of today's affected areas across 11 western states by later this century if conservative predictions about warming come true.

So what can be done? NWF stresses that every one of us can play a role by cutting back on our fossil fuel use (less driving and flying, less home heating and cooling, more efficient appliances, etc.). Another way to help is to take into account our own water use and making a concerted effort to cut back and conserve this most vital of all natural resources. NWF also wants land managers and policymakers to consider global warming when choosing water management strategies to meet multiple demands and to work to protect natural forest and wetland systems that absorb flood waters and provide efficient water storage.

The incline will remain open to both directions of traffic throughout the day. Portions of the three-lane section of the incline will be closed leaving the two remaining lanes open. For more information, contact Zach Pollard at (310) 458-8721.

20th/Cloverfield Improvement Project

Construction activities will take place on 20th Street and Cloverfield Boulevard which will involve lane closures between the hours of 8 a.m. – 6 p.m. Traffic control will be in place during construction and will maintain one lane of traffic in each direction at all times. Impact to traffic should be minimal. For more info, please contact Jim Litzel, Black & Veatch at (310) 863-4991.

There will be periodic sidewalk closures on Second Street between Broadway and Santa Monica Boulevard through Feb. 15. There will be periodic northbound lane closures though Feb. 15 for material deliveries on Second Street between Broadway and Santa Monica Boulevard. Temporary traffic control signs and barricades will be deployed to guide vehicular and pedestrian traffic in and around the work areas. Fencing and deliveries work will take place in the alley behind the parking structure (Second Court), with partial alley closures taking place through Feb. 9. All work will take place Monday through Friday, 8 a.m. – 5 p.m. For more information about the Parking Structure 6 project, visit www.SMConstructs.org or call (310) 458-2205.

Drivers heading eastbound on Michigan Avenue toward 11th Street are advised that right turns onto southbound 11th Street may be restricted intermittently. There will be the loss of one travel lane in each direction through March 1 on 11th Street. Both northbound and southbound lanes will be diverted to the west side of 11th Street between Michigan Avenue and Pico Boulevard and the "no parking" restriction between 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. will remain in effect. Drivers are advised to slow down and use caution when workers are present. Construction is scheduled to take place until March 1. For more information, visit SMConstructs.org or contact Curtis Castle at (310) 458-8721.

Civic Center Parks

Through March of 2013 the majority of Town Square (front yard of City Hall) will be closed so the contractor can continue construction activities. During this time period, the west-facing front door of City Hall will be accessible via a pedestrian pathway that runs north from the sidewalk on Olympic Drive to the front door of City Hall. The sidewalk and parking lane on the east side of Main Street will be closed in front of City Hall; Pedestrians on the east side of Main Street are routed through a barricaded pathway in the Main Street parking lane. The parking lot and City Hall entrance on the north side of City Hall will remain open during construction. One-way vehicular traffic has been implemented turning west from Main Street on to Fujinomiya Douri; traffic must exit behind City Hall south on Avenida Mazatlan and onto Olympic Drive. Caution should be used in this area, emergency vehicles are exempt from the one-way traffic pattern. On Ocean Avenue, through May 10, the sidewalk on the east side of Ocean Avenue between Colorado Avenue and Seaside Terrace will be closed for construction activities.

Hours of operation, security and even limits on how much medicine can be sold at individual sites are also topics to be addressed.

Several in attendance seemed to agree that restrictions on where the shops could operate are needed. One man suggested creating a buffer around schools and places of worship. When the idea of 24-hour security was floated, most were opposed, saying security was only needed during operating hours.

Jon Mann, a perennial City Council candidate, lobbied hard for City Hall to take sole control over dispensaries by setting up a cultivation operation at the Santa Monica Airport and one dispensary to be run by city employees. That way Santa Monica taxpayers could receive all the profits and city officials could ensure that the dispensary is run properly.

That idea fell mostly flat. Some raised concerns that since marijuana is still considered an illegal drug by the federal government, if City Hall were to sell it, city-owned property like the airport could be confiscated.

Others in the group supported a free-market solution in which dispensaries would be able to operate under specific rules dictating hours of operation, security, signage and other factors.

Many pointed to West Hollywood, one of the first and most successful cities to adopt medical marijuana regulations. Officials there put strict controls on marijuana dispensaries, allowing only four locations at any given time, and the businesses can only be located along specific transit corridors set away from neighborhoods.

Locations must be at least 1,000 feet away from other dispensaries and 500 feet from parks, schools, churches and similar facilities.

West Hollywood also bars applicants or property owners from opening dispensaries if they had a similar license revoked or denied for good cause within two years of having applied. Applicants also have to pass a background check by the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department.

Those who attended the Thursday meeting said such restrictions may need to be eased because Santa Monica is more dense than West Hollywood, leaving very few places that would be suitable and not come in conflict.

Santa Monica city planners addressed some of those issues in a 2007 study commissioned by the City Council when the question of medical marijuana dispensaries first arose.

The report came in response to a request to open a dispensary on Main Street. The use was not explicitly prohibited by local rules, but no provisions for dispensaries existed in the zoning code.

Since that time, at least 15 inquiries about medical marijuana dispensaries and one actual business license request have showed up at Santa Monica City Hall.

The intensity of interest in the subject caused city officials to recently bring an emergency 45-day moratorium on dispensaries to the City Council to give planners breathing room to craft a comprehensive policy.

That was later extended by at least 10 months. It is expected to expire in the fall.

Thursday's community meeting was part of the ordinance-drafting process.

City officials have no specific date when they must report back to the City Council. More community meetings and outreach are expected.

BACKGROUND

Santa Monica residents have been permissive of even the recreational use of marijuana in the past.

Voters made the act of an adult smoking marijuana in the home the lowest possible police priority in 2006. That means police have to respond to complaints about barking dogs before a report of someone lighting up a joint.

At that time the Marijuana Policy Project, which sponsored the measure, polled residents and found that 91 percent favored medical marijuana for those with a valid prescription. Santa Monica voters solidly support much broader marijuana policy reform. Nearly two-thirds voted in favor of Prop. 19 in 2010, which would have made marijuana legal for adults' use and allowed its sales to be regulated by cities, according to an analysis of the election results conducted by the group.

presence and wonder when things might return to normal.

Authorities have been working to protect dozens of families considered targets based on Christopher Dorner's Facebook rant against those he held responsible for ending his career with the Los Angeles Police Department five years ago.

Among those the 33-year-old Dorner is suspected of killing is a Riverside police officer, and on the fourth day of the manhunt, authorities put up a $1 million reward for information leading to his capture.

"We will not tolerate this reign of terror," said LA Mayor Antonio Villaraigosa.

After days without resolution, Dorner's fugitive status caused concern among some and downright fear among others in the upscale community that the FBI consistently ranks among the safest cities in the U.S.

"If he did come around this corner, what could happen? We're in the crossfire, with the cops right there," said Irvine resident Joe Palacio, who lives down the street from the home surrounded by authorities protecting a police captain mentioned in Dorner's posting.

"I do think about where I would put my family," he said. "Would we call 911? Would we hide in the closet?"

The neighborhood has been flooded with authorities since Wednesday. Residents have seen police helicopters circle and cruisers stake out schools. Some have responded by keeping their children home. Others no longer walk their dogs at night.

Dorner's background added to the anxiety. The former LAPD officer also served in the Navy, earning a rifle marksman ribbon and a pistol expert medal. He was assigned to a naval undersea warfare unit and various aviation training units, according to military records. In his online post, Dorner vowed to use "every bit of small arms training, demolition, ordnance and survival training I've been given" to bring "warfare" to the LAPD and its families.

As tense Irvine residents went on with their lives, police looked into a taunting phone call to the father of the woman they believe Dorner killed last week.

Two law enforcement officers who requested anonymity because of the ongoing investigation told The Associated Press they are trying to determine whether Dorner made the call telling retired police Capt. Randal Quan that he should have done a better job protecting his daughter.

The bodies of Monica Quan and her fiance were found shot dead last Sunday in Irvine, marking the start of the high-profile case.

Things escalated early Thursday morning, when police say Dorner got into a shootout with police in Corona, grazing an LAPD officer's head with a bullet before escaping. Authorities believe he then used a rifle to ambush two Riverside police officers, killing one and seriously wounding the other.

About 65 miles away, the manhunt continued in the San Bernardino mountains near the ski resort town of Big Bear, where authorities found Dorner's burned out pickup truck Thursday. Police have since said they discovered weapons and camping gear inside the vehicle.

The search scaled down as the weekend went on, but a helicopter with heat-seeking technology scanned the area as two-dozen officers went back to some of the 600 cabins they earlier visited door to door.

With little apparent evidence pointing to Dorner's whereabouts, worrisome questions emerged: How long could the intense search be sustained? And, if Dorner counties to evade capture, how do authorities protect dozens of former police colleagues whom he has publicly targeted?

LAPD Cmdr. Andrew Smith said the department has deployed 50 protection details to guard officers and their families who are deemed targets in Dorner's manifesto.

"It can't be one guy with a gun in a living room," Smith said, suggesting that more officers would be necessary to keep families safe.

The department, however, is looking for alternatives if the search for Dorner stretches on, whether it's reducing the numbers of officers or something else, he said.

There were no plans to reduce protections until Dorner was in custody, said Los Angeles police Sgt. Rudy Lopez.

As long as Dorner's whereabouts are unknown, the police department must provide protection to those named in his rant, said Chuck Drago, a Florida-based police consultant.

"We realize it costs money and it gets expensive, but this is as clear of a threat as you can get," he said. "We know that if he's able to get to these targets then he's probably able to hurt them. The money is always an issue but not when it's somebody's life at stake."

If the search drags on, the LAPD will likely find safe houses for the targeted individuals, much as they would for witness protection participants, instead of posting officers outside their homes, Drago said.

LAPD remains on modified tactical alert, responding only to priority calls and not to those for lesser issues such as public intoxication or business disputes.

Authorities Sunday morning had six cars protecting Capt. Phil Tingirides, who chaired a disciplinary panel that stripped Dorner of his badge. Black and white police cruisers were posted on each end of his street and four more were parked outside his home. At least a half-dozen officers were visibly standing guard.

Meanwhile Palacio, who has to navigate the heavy police presence to get to and from his home, said his family is trying to keep routines normal.

"Life goes on," he said, "and we're doing our thing."

ater seats and concession sales. He and those who took part in its creation believe it could save lives.

For the past three years, Dumas has been following the struggles of engaged citizens and homeless veterans as they try to tell the story of the West L.A. VA campus, a 387-acre plot of land home to public parks and commercial laundry facilities, but not many homeless veterans.

The VA itself reports that 8,000 veterans live on the streets of Los Angeles, the highest concentration of homeless veterans in the United States.

The government touts figures showing that number has dropped 22 percent in 2012, but activists like Santa Monica's own Bobby Shriver, a former Santa Monica mayor, feel that not enough is being done to support veterans, many of whom are mentally ill and need more support than access to medical prescriptions.

Dumas got hooked by Bob Rosebrock, a spunky 70-year-old who organizes protests outside of the VA campus at Wilshire and San Vicente boulevards every Sunday, and has done so for the last four years.

Although the two would eventually part ways over differences in vision for the documentary, Rosebrock made crucial introductions that got the film going, and allowed Dumas to see the complex web of relationships that he feels has shut the VA's door to homeless veterans for years.

The West L.A. VA campus is in Brentwood, one of the wealthiest communities in Los Angeles County.

Senator John P. Jones and Arcadia B. de Baker donated 300 acres of property in 1888 to the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, an organization created by Congress in 1865, for the purpose of creating a permanent home for veterans at the site.

According to a lawsuit filed by the American Civil Liberties Union of Southern California, the property was used to house over 1,000 veterans until the 1960s and 1970s when it appears that the U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs — an evolution of the National Home — stopped accepting new residents.

Since, the property has been used primarily for medical care and for leases by the VA to private, for-profit and nonprofit organizations, like a commercial laundry business that services the Marriott hotel chain or a private school that built sports facilities on the site.

Buildings once used to house veterans have fallen into disrepair, the documentary states, and Brentwood community members have worked hard to create a public park on the property in the name of veterans, but seem less willing to have them as neighbors.

"They don't want ... veterans there," said John Keaveney, the founder of the nonprofit New Directions, which provides services to homeless veterans. Keaveney is currently not on the staff or Board of Directors of New Directions.

It means that the VA is an excellent place for veterans to get medical care, but not much else, said Terence Lyons, a Vietnam-era veteran who appears in the documentary and helps produce the Strawberry Gazette, a publication dedicated to documenting the VA response to homeless veterans.

"One of my principal differences with the VA is that they've turned the whole place into a medical care facility," Lyons said Friday. "Under the deed of 1888, it was given to be a home for veterans. The VA simply disavows any responsibility for providing any of the services or aspects of home other than medical care."

That's a problem for people like George Billingslea, a homeless veteran and former Marine featured in the documentary.

In one scene, Billingslea struggles with over 20 bottles of prescription medications given to him by the VA, each stored in the shopping cart that he uses to collect bottles and cans to feed himself and help his mother and grandson.

The VA is making progress on the homeless front, as evidenced by the reduction of homeless veterans on the street and the recent groundbreaking at Building 209, which is expected to house 65 of the most-needy veterans and provide them access to services on the campus.

There are also plans to rehabilitate two more buildings — 205 and 208, respectively — and ramp up efforts of direct intervention, moving homeless veterans into apartments and using transitional housing to meet the nationwide goal of ending veteran homelessness by 2015, said Bill Daniels, chief of Mental Health at the VA of Greater Los Angeles Heath Care System.

"We continue to work diligently with the community to expand all areas of service through various methods including outreach with our community partners. All of our long-term housing is geared toward having the veterans live in the community. This is what our veterans have told us; this is what our veterans like," Daniels said.

Many activists believe that changes have only come because of the pressure applied to the government agency through protests, the very public ACLU lawsuit and things like Dumas' documentary. Otherwise, the history of the West L.A. VA campus remains a mystery to most, Dumas said.

"In fact most people don't even know what that is," he said. "They say, 'Oh, I've driven by that place on Wilshire.' They aren't even aware of the VA property, let alone the issues and land use."

To encourage real progress at the site, that has to change.

Dumas is a one-man-band with his low-definition Sony camera, a hardy piece of equipment that has served him as he tailed Ron Paul through his unsuccessful presidential bid and now through a hike in the Hollywood Hills with nonprofit volunteers to meet the Godfather, a vet in the film who has lived above the Hollywood Bowl with his dog for the past 16 years.

He finished editing the footage roughly six months ago, but wasn't able to premiere the piece until Feb. 1 at Beyond Baroque, an independent arts center in Venice that supports literary and cultural production and community building.

There just wasn't the money to do it, Dumas said, and that means that knowledge of the issue remains relegated to a committed few, unless he finds other ways to get the documentary out to the public.

He's in the process of burning DVDs for people to provide funding for the project, and is considering putting the film up on Vimeo or another streaming site to try to get it out to a wider audience.

Lyons participated in a panel discussion after the Beyond Baroque premiere. People seemed genuinely concerned by the issues raised, and asked what they could do about it, Lyons said.

percent from the same weekend last year — which was the only non-holiday weekend to have four movies open with more than $20 million, according to box-office tracker Hollywood.com.

"The same weekend a year ago was such a tremendous weekend," said Hollywood.com analyst Paul Dergarabedian. "It's really tough to live up to a weekend like we had last year. It was sort of a foregone conclusion that this was going to be a down weekend."

"Identity Thief" came in above industry expectations despite the storm and poor reviews for the comedy, which stars Bateman as a man chasing down a con artist (McCarthy) who has racked up thousands of dollars of charges in his name.

The combination of the actors and the premise made it a review-proof comedy, Rocco said.

"I think people just want to be entertained," Rocco said. "The chemistry between Jason and Melissa is the reason why this picture is doing so well."

Estimated ticket sales for Friday through Sunday at U.S. and Canadian theaters, according to Hollywood.com. Where available, latest international numbers are also included. Final domestic figures will be released Monday.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria — enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms — that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

"The other reaction from the panel was that we don't have a lot of political power or money. If the other guys have the power and the money, the only way to counter that is with some sort of groundswell of public opinion involving large numbers of people if you can't muster the dollars," Lyons said. "That again goes back to what can we do to spread the word, and get as much exposure for the film and for other methods of publicizing the problem."

Late night, Leo

ARIES (March 20-April19)
★★★ Know that much is brewing behind the scenes. You might not know any or all of the details, but you sense that something has changed. Trying to get to the bottom of the situation might not work. Tonight: Not to be found.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Many ideas come from you, but keep in mind that just as many ideas come to you. This ebb and flow could interfere with your normal schedule. Decide what your priorities are as others seek you out. Tonight: Chat with a friend.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Issues seem to be contagious today. Don't fight the inevitable -- just choose to work through it. By late afternoon, you'll see the dust start to settle, and you'll feel a greater sense of self-worth. Tonight: Get a head start on tomorrow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Keep reaching out for new ideas, where you are forced to break the ice. Accept what is happening, and try taking a new path. Experiment with different directions before making a final decision. Information keeps coming in. Tonight: Let your imagination run wild.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Take news with a grain of salt, especially if it comes from an associate. You usually take this person at his or her word, but if you ask more questions, you'll build a more solid relationship. Don't challenge him or her -- just demonstrate more interest. Tonight: Out late.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Others will find you, even if you close your door and pretend you're not there. You are needed for feedback. Be flattered and understand your worth to others. Events taking place now will reveal others' opinions. Tonight: Visit with a loved one, and catch up on news.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Recognize your physical limits. You are a wise sign, and you'll work on organization and priorities right now. Accept your limitations, and others will, too. Tonight: Finish up work, but get much-needed sleep.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ You have the creativity and knowledge to come up with the right solution and make it work. You might hesitate to take an active role, as others want to brainstorm. Welcome this exchange of ideas. It will help you to think outside the box. Tonight: Fun and games.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 21-Dec. 21)
★★★ Stay centered, and know what you need to accomplish. You have many ideas brewing right now. See if they are workable before deciding to put them into action; you will be a lot happier as a result. Understanding evolves. Tonight: A roommate and/or family member needs your time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You will say what you need or want to say, but be sure to choose your words carefully in order to prevent triggering someone. This person could have a strong reaction anyway, but the effort is good practice. Keep communication open. Tonight: Hang out with a friend.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Your hand is forced. You have a lot to do that you would prefer to postpone. No such luck! You need to deal with these matters here and now. Understand that you will feel better as a result. Tonight: Take care of your bills.

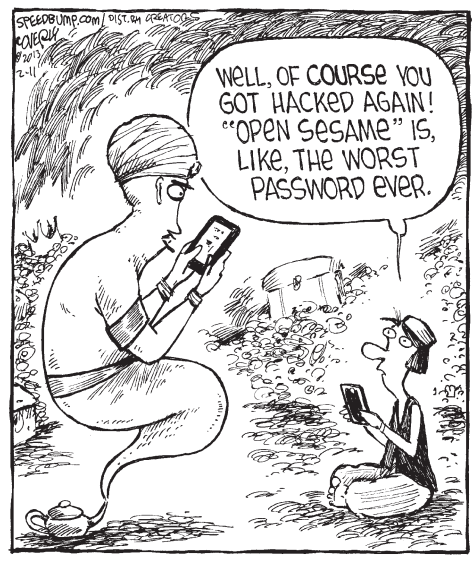

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ You might be capable of nearly anything right now. Settle in by organizing your priorities and by understanding what is happening with others. Emphasize the group, but do not lose sight of the fact that this is your life. Tonight: Where the action is.

Happy birthday

This year you have a lot to say, and you'll say just that ... provided you have a receptive audience. Your way of thinking changes in the course of the year, and something that irked you in the past no longer will be an issue by 2014. Curb any sarcasm if you want your message to be heard. If you are single, you could meet someone unexpectedly. Check out this person carefully, as he or she might be emotionally unavailable. If you are attached, avoid struggling over money by keeping separate checking accounts. Understand the role that jealousy plays in your relationship. PISCES knows how to evoke a response.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Cliche Come to Life: The Kerry, Ireland, county council voted in January to let some people drive drunk. The councillors reasoned that in the county's isolated regions, some seniors live alone and need the camaraderie of the pub, but fear a DUI arrest on the way home. The councillors thus empowered police to issue DUI permits to those targeted drivers. Besides, reasoned the councillors, the area is so sparsely populated that such drivers never encounter anyone else on the road at night. (The councillors' beneficence might also have been influenced, reported BBC News, by the fact that "several" of the five voting "yea" own pubs.)

■ Spare the Waterboard, Spoil the Child: William Province, 42, was arrested in Jefferson County, Mont., in December and charged with waterboarding four boys, two of whom were his own sons, at his home in December. (Also in January, Kirill Bartashevitch, 52, was charged with making "terroristic" threats to his high-school-age daughter after he allegedly pointed his new AK-47 at her because her report card showed 2 B's instead of all A's. He said he had recently purchased the gun because he feared that President Obama intended to ban them.)

TODAY IN HISTORY

1987 - The Constitution of the Philippines goes into effect.

1990 - Nelson Mandela is released from Victor Verster Prison outside Cape Town, South Africa after 27 years as a political prisoner.

1997 - Space Shuttle Discovery is launched on a mission to service the Hubble Space Telescope.

2008 - Rebel East Timorese soldiers seriously wound President José Ramos-Horta. Rebel leader Alfredo Reinado is killed in the attack.
