What's for lunch at local schools?

School district offers diverse mix of choices

BY MELODY HANATANI
Daily Press Staff Writer

WILMONT Everyday when the clock strikes 12:06 p.m., the tranquility of the central courtyard at Lincoln Middle School is disrupted — a sonic boom of enthusiastic schoolyard chatter erupts as hundreds of students file out of their classrooms, some with brown bags in hand, others forming lines in front of strategically placed carts.

Lunchtime has just commenced.

While it doesn't have the moniker of being the "most important meal of the day," the mid-day food break is nevertheless considered just as vital to the physical and educational nourishment of students in the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District. The quality of the food provided in lunch in the nation's schools was recently called into question by federal officials when reports surfaced of inhumane cattle handling practices at a Chino slaughterhouse.

Once one of the largest suppliers of beef to school districts nationwide, Hallmark Meat Packaging's operations were suspended by the federal government earlier this month, prompting districts across the country to pull beef from their programs as a precautionary measure, including, reportedly, the SMMUSD.

So what's in the lunch?

SMMUSD is among 12 school districts in the South Bay area that is part of a purchasing cooperative agreement, all buying food through the same local distributors and vendors.

All items, whether it is milk, vegetables or even bread, is purchased from a local Los Angeles-area vendor, according to Orlando Griego, the director of Food Services for the district.

The lunch menus for all the elementary schools are planned centrally at the district's headquarters, while the middle schools and high schools have the option of serving various lunch options from a list that is approved by the district's nutritionist, Donna Richwine, who studies each item to be sure it is compliant with state and federal standards.

The reason for giving students the option of choosing their own lunch starting in the middle school years has to do with the maturation process of becoming young adults, Griego said.

"The youngsters are becoming adults and are able to make choices for themselves," Griego said.

Each campus also offers after-lunch snacks, whether it's cookies at the elementary schools or vending machines at the middle school and high schools, the latter of which still serves soda but will be phased out completely by July 2009.

The students at Santa Monica High School also have the added option of buying their lunch from the Vikes' Café, a venture operated by the student organization, Students for the Advancement of Global Leadership (SAGE).

SAGE began operating the Vikes' Inn Student Store in 1994 and two years later, INNOVATIVE EDUCATOR: SMC's Christine Schultz brings a joy of teaching into each and every one of her classes.

COMMUNITY PROFILES | CHRISTINE SCHULTZ

Professing a love for the classroom

BY NATALIE EDWARDS
Special to the Daily Press

SMC Christine Schultz, chair of the philosophy and social science department at Santa Monica College, had a particularly good day teaching class last week. Extemporizing on the scientific method, emphasizing the importance of the process of solving questions over the value of answers, Schultz got her students to howl with laughter.

The blond haired and cerulean eyed political science professor related to the students in the introductory state government class through their variety of majors. What mattered, she told them with the spontaneous vitality that continuously animates her delivery, was not what organism was in the petri dish or the identification of the hero in the novel — she, a history buff, didn't care — but how they arrived at the solution. For the moment to be funny, of course, you would have had to witness the professor's irreverence among the 45 otherwise sleepy-eyed students enrolled in the 8 a.m. class.

"I've never done that before and yet that was exactly the right thing to do. I'm always seeing that there are new ways to teach something," Schultz said.

It is a testament not just to Schultz's charisma but her willingness to learn and adapt her teaching style that she was among four winners of the 2008 Hayward Award for Excellence in Education, considered the highest honor for California community college faculty. The last time an SMC faculty member won the award, given out by the state's Academic Senate, was in 1989.

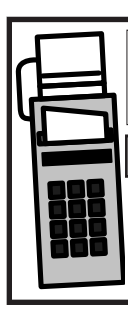

Schultz is appreciative of the recognition, even if she has already long been satisfied just with the extent of student feedback she has received over two decades of teaching.

"I've always said for 24 years that I would do what I do for free. There are a couple days when I want to be paid but I really do love teaching. I've always said that you don't need to be

Pair charged for abusing cattle

Legal problems continue to mount for SoCal distributor

BY GREG RISLING | Associated Press Writer

SAN BERNARDINO Two former employees of a Chino slaughterhouse were charged Friday with abusing ailing cattle that were forced into a slaughterhouse that provided meat to school lunch programs.

Bench warrants for the arrest of Daniel Navarro, 49, of Pomona and Luis Sanchez, 32, of Chino were issued after they failed to attend an afternoon arraignment.

The case came to light after undercover video surfaced showing crippled and sick animals being shoved with forklifts.

"The facts of this case are horrendous," San Bernardino County District Attorney Michael Ramos told a news conference at which the charges were announced. "It makes your stomach turn to see what they did to these cows."

Five felony counts of animal cruelty and three misdemeanors were filed against Navarro. Three misdemeanor counts were filed against Sanchez.

The misdemeanors allege illegal movement of a non-ambulatory animal.

If convicted, Navarro would face up to eight years in prison and Sanchez would face up to three years.

The district attorney's office did not know if they had retained lawyers.

The slaughterhouse is operated by Westland/Hallmark Meat Co., which supplies meat to the federal school lunch program. The U.S. Department of Agriculture suspended operations at Westland/Hallmark after the video surfaced, and on Thursday lawmakers in Washington called for an investigation.

No charges have been filed against company management. The district attorney said prosecutors would have to show management had knowledge of the activities and that had not been determined.

The video showed, among other things, cattle being rammed with forklifts and workers kicking, shocking and otherwise abusing "downer" animals that were apparently too sick or injured to walk into the slaughterhouse.

USDA recalls frozen beef

By the Associated Press

LOS ANGELES The U.S. Department of Agriculture on Sunday recalled 143 million pounds of frozen beef from a Southern California slaughterhouse that is being investigated for mistreating cattle.

Officials said it was the largest beef recall in the United States, surpassing a 1999 ban of 35 million pounds of ready-to-eat meats.

The federal agency said the recall will affect beef products dating to Feb. 1, 2006, that came from Chino-based Westland/Hallmark Meat Co., which supplies meat to the federal school lunch program and to some major fast-food chains.

Secretary of Agriculture Ed Schafer said his department has evidence that Westland did not routinely contact its veterinarian when cattle became non-ambulatory after passing inspection, violating health regulations.

"Because the cattle did not receive complete and proper inspection, Food Safety and Inspection Service has determined them to be unfit for human food and the company is conducting a recall," Schafer said in a statement.

Federal officials suspended operations at Westland/Hallmark after an undercover video surfaced showing crippled and sick animals being shoved with forklifts.

Two former employees were charged Friday with animal cruelty. No charges have been filed against Westland, but an investigation by federal authorities continues.

No so fast, Obama

Editor:

I was sitting in a coffee shop in Santa Monica the day before Super Tuesday. Standing next to my table were two men. They looked to be in their '50s, affluent and educated. They were talking about the upcoming vote. One was supporting Hillary Clinton the other Barack Obama. The Obama man was trying to convince his friend to vote for Obama. The dialog went something like this:

"What's wrong with Clinton?"

"Nothing, but there's something about Obama. I have not felt this way since Bobby Kennedy."

This phenomena is not new, but it seems to be affecting an unusual percentage of the voting population this election year. I am referring to the Obama campaign. This is not so much about Obama but more about his supporters. I will admit that I never thought Obama had much chance of getting elected. But he has proven to be an amazingly skillful orator and campaigner.

Obama is being compared to John and Bobby Kennedy. Even more so with the endorsement of some very prominent members of the Kennedy family. I was and am a great admirer of JFK. His Inaugural Speech was one of the greatest. It was full of that vision thing. I went back and read it again. Here's a line from it. "Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe, in order to assure the survival and the success of liberty. This much we pledge – and more."

Heavy stuff, here is another: " And so, my fellow Americans: ask not what your country can do for you – ask what you can do for your country."

Still gives me a shiver after all these years. His words inspired, not only for their moral clarity and idealism, but also because of the tasks they compelled us to.

Obama also has the ability to fill that need for a vision. But when you get beyond all the great speeches about change and bringing people together, what are the goals?

In a nut shell, entitlements for everyone. Now that will inspire you to glory! But he is able to evoke feelings in people. After his victory on Super Tuesday, I was watching his victory speech on TV. There was a blonde middle aged woman just over his left shoulder. She had her hands clasped adoringly, hanging on to his every word and frequently jumping for joy. She reminded me a teenage girl in the early '60s at a Beatles concert. And then there's Robert De Niro speaking at an Obama rally. This is a quote: "I'm here because finally one person has inspired me, one person has given me hope, one person has made me believe that we can make a change – that person is Barack Obama."

Take it easy, Bob!

Boy, if Obama should ever disappoint him, I would worry about him. He might turn into that uncontrollable emotional character he played in "Analyze This."

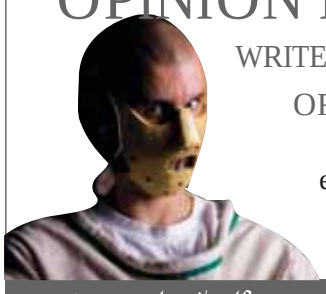

Voting for a president based on feelings is risky business. Ask yourself one question before you vote for Obama. Besides getting elected, what major thing has he accomplished? Make a list, and see what you come up with.

I am visualizing President Elect Barack Obama's inaugural speech. It could go something like this: " Ask not what you can do for your country – ask what your country can do for you. We will not pay any price, will not bear any burden, not meet any hardship and not oppose any foe in the support of liberty."

Sends a shiver up your spine. Doesn`t it?

Old and new collide in SM developments

I'D BEEN HEARING RUMORS THAT the Albertsons/Big 5 Sporting Goods property in the 3100 block of Wilshire Boulevard had been sold. This large property between Berkeley and Franklin streets on the eastern edge of the city is at the "Gateway to Santa Monica."

I've shopped at Albertson's for well over 30 years — even when it was a Lucky Market. I was curious to find out who the buyer was and their plans for the property. Then I'd heard Macerich Company who also owns Santa Monica Place had bought the property.

I called Robyn Young, who is Macerich's senior manager of development relations in Phoenix. She confirmed Macerich had indeed recently purchased the property. As far as the fate of Albertson's and Big 5, she said nothing will change for a while. "We are focused on our remodel of Santa Monica Place, which is very important to the company, at the moment," She told me. "We're not planning any changes at that property at this time."

Emphasizing that any redevelopment of the property would involve extensive input from the community Young said, "Before we were to come out with any design or plan for the property, we would be reaching out to the community and doing so very early on."

At a Neighborhood Council meeting two months ago, city planning director, Eileen Fogarty discussed the "hypothetical" redevelopment of a commercial parcel such as the Albertson's/Big 5 property, explaining the kind of developmental elements the city favors.

Fogarty told the group retail developments such as Albertson's with a blank wall to the street (with the store entrance from the parking lot in the back of the property) are undesirable. Fogarty described an ideal redevelopment as one being open, harmonious with the neighborhood and pedestrian friendly to the street, having inner courtyards, landscaping and a variety of stores, restaurants and community serving businesses. Parking would be below grade with housing — either condominiums or apartments above. Of course, the whole project would be environmentally state-of-the-art.

I asked Young about Fogarty's "hypothetical" and she replied that Fogarty's comments could apply to any larger commercial property and that her "wish list" were all elements the city favors in new developments. "Nothing has been designed and we haven't even started preliminary planning," I was reminded.

What's to become of Albertson's and Big 5?

Noting that both retailers have leases, Young said, "Nothing for now and probably not for a few years until we can devote our full attention to it."

Albertsons is now owned by Minnesota based Supervalu, Inc., and was purchased for $17.4 billion in cash, stock, and debt in a deal completed in June, 2006. Past speculation concerned converting some Albertson's into higher end, Bristol Farms Markets and other rumors whispered that some Albertson's may become discount super markets.

Needless to say Albertson's and Big 5 aren't going anywhere for now. But it will be interesting to see if they will "fade away" or be included in any new Macerich development.

UNKIND TO HISTORY

Last Tuesday, the Santa Monica City Council deadlocked, thus letting stand a Landmarks Commission "OK" to demolish a "turn of the century" style house and allow the construction of a "modern" single-family residence in the heart of the Ocean Park Third Street Historic District.

On Dec. 10, 2007, The Landmarks Commission approved demolition of a small "period style" 1953-era duplex with garage and construction of a new, 2,365 square foot, International style/modern, single-family home at 2642 Second St. Neighbors concerned that another non-period structure would forever alter the "turn-of-the-century" feel of their historic district, appealed the commission's decision to City Council.

GOT OP-ED?

Say it loud, say it proud, but keep your guest commentary to 800 words or less. Send submissions to EDITOR@SMDP.COM.

With council person, Pam O'Connor absent, Mayor, Herb Katz, and Council persons, Bob Holbrook and Richard Bloom voted to deny the appeal and against remanding the project back to Landmarks Commission for review, proving that they aren't any more sensitive to the concept of a historic district than, apparently, the Landmark's Commission is.

The appeal boiled down to whether the proposed "modern" house would be compatible with district character or consistent with district design guidelines for new construction. The dominant character of the contributing structures in the district can be best described as early California Beach, California craftsman/bungalow, Queen Anne or Victorian, although not all of the buildings in the neighborhood are "period." And, the Ocean Park Neighborhood Development Guide specifies that new construction in the district must be designed in historical style which includes International style/modern.

I don't think International/modern architecture is compatible with "turn-of-the-century," no matter how much one tweaks massing, setbacks, heights and architectural details. Maybe it's time to amend the zoning codes to outlaw "modern" or "International style" in historic neighborhoods where we're trying to preserve the quaint feel of Santa Monica's early days as a beach town.

America the violent: The school shootings

IT MAY WELL BE THAT STEVEN Kazmierczak, a former student at Northern Illinois University, was simply a deeply disturbed individual. But we cannot ignore the fact that he was also a product of the American culture of violence.

America is a nation plagued by violence — in our homes, in our schools, on our streets and in our affairs of state, both foreign and domestic. Violence permeates our entertainment culture with its glamorization of death and destruction in movies and video games. Indeed, it is estimated that by the time a child reaches 18, he or she will have witnessed 200,000 acts of violence, including 40,000 murders on television.

But why is America so violent?

Some choose to lay the blame on our proliferation of weapons, increasingly impersonal technologies, a disparate distribution of wealth, materialism, the erosion of families, drugs, isolationism and so on. Others decry easy access to guns as the reason for our nation's predilection for violence, especially when it comes to school shootings, and champion gun control and zero tolerance policies as solutions — albeit Band-Aid fixes.

Certainly, these are all factors. However, I would suggest one more: we are teaching violence to our young people. Younger generations are consuming forms of media communication that both desensitize and attract them to unhealthy and dangerous behavior. The American Academy of Pediatrics has reported that children's prolonged exposure to media violence normalizes the violence and leads to increased acceptance of it. This is likely to result in increased levels of fear, depression, sleep disturbance and aggressive behavior.

We then come to violent video games. Because of their nature, which reinforces the learning process, video games affect children more strongly than other media. They have reward systems for behavior that often involves violence, and which is repeated over and over. Violent video games not only increase aggressive behavior in children but also encourage them to actively rehearse and hone violent behavior through which they can act out their aggression. In a study conducted on high schoolers, researchers were "surprised to find that exposure to violent video games was a better predictor of the students' own violent behavior than their gender or their beliefs about violence."

Clearly, violence begets violence. But it is more than that. To borrow from Shakespeare, the fault is not in our stars but in ourselves. The problem lies with us, in our communities, our families, our growing isolation from one another and our lack of spirituality and values.

Materialism has eclipsed both spirituality and community, stripping us of the very things that once gave our lives meaning and worth. As Holocaust survivor and psychologist Victor Frankl has pointed out, "People have enough to live by but nothing to live for; they have the means but no meaning."

The American community that once bound us together has been shattered. The loving relationship between parent and child is now separated by mom and dad's 24/7 connection to work in the form of a BlackBerry, computer or their maniacal attachment to a cell phone. More and more children grow up living out of a suitcase, shuttled between households of divorced parents.

Dr. James P. Comer, professor of psychiatry at Yale University's Child Study Center, suggests that in order to treat the damage done to the next generation, "We're going to have to work at systematically recreating the critical elements of community that once existed naturally. We can't go back to the past, but there was a time when people cared about each other and would look out for each other."

Restoring the elements of community is a critical part of the process. However, we remain a society that is armed to the teeth. Our culture glorifies violence. Our government is especially guilty of using violence as a quick fix. Thus, if we are to reverse the tide of violence in America, the principles of nonviolence must also be taught — in our homes, churches, schools and communities.

Unless we want America's future to be plagued by violence, we will have to commit to drastically altering the way we act, think and relate to one another. The solution will not be found in gun control; nor is it metal detectors in the schools. It's time to get our children away from headphones and video games, get parents away from cell phones, stop hiding behind technology and be human again.

Kosovo declares independence

BY NEBI QENA AND WILLIAM J. KOLE
Associated Press Writers

PRISTINA, Kosovo — Kosovo's parliament declared the disputed territory a nation on Sunday, mounting a historic bid to become an "independent and democratic state" backed by the U.S. and European allies but bitterly contested by Serbia and Russia.

Fireworks lit up the night sky over Kosovo's capital Pristina, where thousands of giddy ethnic Albanians braved subfreezing temperatures to ride on the roofs of their cars, singing patriotic songs and chanting: "KLA! KLA!" the acronym for the now-disbanded rebel Kosovo Liberation Army.

"Kosovo is a republic — an independent, democratic and sovereign state," Kosovo's parliament speaker Jakup Krasniqi said as the chamber burst into applause.

Serbia immediately denounced the declaration as illegal, and Russia also rejected it, demanding an emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council.

President Bush said the U.S. would work to prevent violence after the declaration and the European Union appealed for calm, mindful of the risk that the declaration could plunge the turbulent Balkans back into instability.

Hours after the declaration, an explosion apparently caused by a hand-grenade rocked a U.N. courthouse in the Serb-controlled north of Kosovo, but no one was injured.

In Pristina, however, the mood was jubilant. Revelers danced in the streets, fired guns in the air, and waved red and black Albanian flags and American flags. Many dressed in traditional costumes and played trumpets and drums. Thousands of ethnic Albanians streamed into the city from neighboring Macedonia.

"This is the happiest day in my life," said 68-year-old Mehi Shehu. "Now we're free and we can celebrate without fear."

The new nation's leaders signed their names on a giant iron sculpture spelling out "NEWBORN" before heading to a performance of Beethoven's "Ode to Joy" by the Kosovo Philharmonic Orchestra.

"I feel stronger," said Ymer Govori, 36, carrying his daughter on his shoulders. "I have my own state and my own post code, and it won't say Serbia any longer."

The declaration was carefully orchestrated with the U.S. and key European powers, and Kosovo was counting on swift international recognition that could come as early as Monday, when EU foreign ministers meet in Brussels, Belgium.

But by sidestepping the U.N. and appealing directly to the U.S. and other nations for recognition, Kosovo set up a showdown with Serbia — outraged at the imminent loss of its territory — and Russia, which warned that it would set a dangerous precedent for separatist groups worldwide.

Ninety percent of Kosovo's 2 million people are ethnic Albanian — most of them secular Muslims — and they see no reason to stay joined to the rest of Christian Orthodox Serbia.

Krasniqi, Prime Minister Hashim Thaci and President Fatmir Sejdiu signed the declaration, which was scripted on parchment, before the unveiling of a new national crest and a flag: a bright blue banner featuring a golden map of Kosovo and six stars, one for each of its main ethnic groups.

"From today onwards, Kosovo is proud, independent and free," said Thaci, a former leader of the guerrilla Kosovo Liberation Army, which battled Serbian troops in a 1998-99 separatist war that claimed 10,000 lives. "We never lost faith in the dream that one day we would stand among the free nations of the world, and today we do."

Thaci pledged the new nation would be "a democratic, multiethnic state" — an attempt to reach out to Serbs who consider Kosovo the cradle of their medieval culture and religion.

But he also had stern words for the Serbian government, saying in the Serbian language: "Kosovo will never be ruled by Belgrade again."

Thaci on Sunday signed 192 separate letters to nations around the world — including Serbia — asking them to recognize Kosovo as a state.

Serbian President Boris Tadic rejected the independence bid immediately, declaring Sunday's proclamation "unilateral and illegal." Kosovo's 10 minority Serb lawmakers boycotted the parliamentary session in protest.

And Serbia's government minister for Kosovo, Slobodan Samardzic, said Sunday that Serbia would increase its presence in the roughly 15 percent of Kosovo that is Serb-controlled — an apparent attempt to divide the province.

Serbia's government ruled out any military response as part of its secret "action plan" drafted earlier this week as a response, but warned that it would downgrade relations with any foreign government that recognizes Kosovo's independence.

Russia's Foreign Ministry said Moscow supports Serbia's "just demands to restore the country's territorial integrity."

Russian President Vladimir Putin has argued that independence without U.N. approval would set a dangerous precedent for "frozen conflicts" across the former Soviet Union and around the world. He is pressuring the U.N. Security Council to intervene, and the council planned to meet in an emergency session Sunday afternoon at Russia's request.

Before Kosovo's parliament voted, President Bush said the U.S. will work to prevent violent clashes after the independence declaration. The State Department was reviewing the development with European allies as the province sought swift recognition from the West.

"The United States will continue to work with our allies to do the very best we can to make sure there's no violence," Bush said several hours before Kosovo's parliament approved the declaration.

"We are heartened by the fact that the Kosovo government has clearly proclaimed its willingness and its desire to support Serbian rights in Kosovo," Bush said. "We also believe it's in Serbia's interest to be aligned with Europe and the Serbian people can know that they have a friend in America."

The EU's foreign ministers plan to meet Monday. While all 27 EU nations endorse an aid plan for Kosovo, several — Greece, Romania, Spain, Cyprus and Slovakia among them — say they will not recognize the territory's independence.

"We appeal to all parties in Kosovo and in the wider region to remain calm and not to respond to any provocation," EU spokesman Jens Mester said.

What does Clinton have to do to win?

BY NANCY BENAC
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON Ask a dozen die-hard Democrats around the country what Hillary Rodham Clinton can do to beat Barack Obama and win the presidential nomination and they have plenty of ideas — some of them contradictory.

The question generates strong sentiment, though, that Clinton simply can't compete on charisma, that there are forces at play beyond her control. Going negative could backfire, they warn. Laying out nitty-gritty policy details isn't enough, they say.

There's no shortage of advice, but also no shortage of head-scratching. Add it all up, and there doesn't appear to be a secret plan to save her candidacy.

A sampling of Democratic voices from the field:

SHOW PASSION:

"The challenge for Hillary Clinton is to be seen as an agent of change, to recapture the passion that the people who support her really have for her," says Kari Chisholm, a political consultant in Oregon who blogs at http://www.blueoregon.com. "I'm not sure that I'd want to be in the shoes on her team. ... She's considered the same old, same old, and she's not. But she's having trouble communicating that." Chisholm said Clinton should hit her universal health care message harder, stop using Washington insiders to defend her on cable TV and "find a way to communicate some excitement." Chisholm supported John Edwards, and says he could go either way between Clinton and Obama.

IT'S THE ECONOMY. AGAIN:

"HRC's firewall must be predicated on message," says Chris Lehane, a political consultant in California and former aide to President Clinton. "She is THE candidate who the public, press and pundits by instinct, temperament and history believe is the best on the economy at the exact time the economy is THE brooding, omnipresent force hovering over both the primary and general electorate." Lehane is backing Clinton.

GO NEGATIVE

"She needs to come in strong," says Judy Carpenter, a third-grade teacher from Delaware, Ohio, who turned out at a Clinton rally at Ohio State last week. "I don't like vicious attacks. But gosh darn, she needs to call him on some things." Carpenter supports Clinton.

MAYBE NOT:

A candidate goes negative "at great risk," says Mitch Ceasar, the party chairman in Florida's Broward County. "You can alienate people. It's less of a risk for Republicans, because they're better at it and everybody expects it from them." Clinton, he says, should "talk about the distinctions" between herself and Obama on the issues .

DEFINITELY NOT

Going negative "positively would be the absolutely wrong thing to do," says Ed Treacy, a former county party chairman in Indiana. "Democrats do not want to see them fighting at all. ... I'm not sure what she can do. So much of it is his momentum." Treacy hasn't endorsed a candidate.

THE FORCE:

"The most important thing is that the force is with Obama," says Glenn Browder, a former Alabama congressman and now professor emeritus at Jacksonville State University. "The election seems to be moving in his favor, and I don't believe that issues have much to do with it right now. It's not as if she could all of a sudden start pointing this or that out about his positions or his votes, and that would change things very much. He is a movement that goes beyond issues." Going negative could backfire on Clinton, Browder says, but it might help if the media or independent groups took on Obama. Browder is neutral in the race.

REMEMBER IRAQ:

"If she could come up with a more specific war plan," says Marcia Mainord, president of Texas Democratic Women. "That's what I hear people talking about. Who's going to end the war." Mainord is personally supporting Clinton but hasn't made a formal endorsement.

BE YOURSELF:

"She's a very engaging, very warm person if she lets that side of her be seen," says Warren Tolman, a former Massachusetts state senator. "There's a very warm, compassionate side that isn't often enough seen." Three things Clinton should do, according to Tolman: "Be yourself. Show compassion. Look like she's having fun." Tolman has endorsed Obama.

READY TO DELIVER:

"There is a narrative to be told that she hasn't quite put all together," says Tom Swan, who directs a citizen action group in Connecticut. "But she's close, on health care and her experience and her scars make her the one who can deliver now." Swan voted in the Connecticut primary but hasn't publicly endorsed anyone.

GRASS-ROOTS ORGANIZE:

"I am obsessive about precinct-based organizing," says Michael Dukakis, the 1988 Democratic nominee who lost to George H.W. Bush. "We've got to get serious about this stuff. It's not just money and media." Dukakis, teaching a course this winter at UCLA, says Obama has done more local organizing than Clinton. He adds that neither candidate should be faulted for failing to do much of it in Ohio and Texas, which vote March 4, because no one thought the nomination race would extend beyond Super Tuesday. Dukakis hasn't endorsed a candidate.

STEADY AS SHE GOES:

"You've got a strategy, stick with the strategy," says Jim Crog, a longtime party operative in Florida. "Ride it and make it work. One of the most detrimental things a campaign can be involved in is a what-if campaign.

Students fight back against Web site

BY JUSTIN POPE | AP Education Writer

The Cornell University junior was in his dorm between classes when the text message came in from a friend. Check out JuicyCampus.com, it said.

The student found his name on the Web site beside a rambling, filthy passage about his sexual exploits, posted by an anonymous student on campus. The young man could only hope the commentary was so ridiculous nobody would believe it.

"I thought, `Is this going to affect my job employment? Is this going to make people on campus look at me? Are people going to talk about me behind my back?" said the student, who asked not to be identified. He also wondered about his 11-year-old sister, who is spending more time on the Internet. "What if she Googles me? What will she think about her big brother?" he said.

JuicyCampus' endless threads of anonymous innuendo have been a popular Web destination on the seven college campuses where the site launched last fall, including Duke, UCLA and Loyola Marymount. It recently expanded to 50 more, and many of the postings show they've been viewed hundreds and even thousands of times.

But JuicyCampus has proved so poisonous there are signs of a backlash.

In campus debates over Internet freedom, students normally take the side of openness and access. This time, however, student leaders, newspaper editorials and posters on the site are fighting back — with some even asking administrators to ban JuicyCampus. It's a kind of plea to save the students, or at least their reputations, from themselves.

"It is an expression from our student body that we don't want this junk in our community," said Andy Canales, leader of the student government at Pepperdine, which recently voted 23-5 to ask for a ban.

The vote came after a long and emotional debate on the limits of free speech, and was swayed by stories from students such as Haley Frazier, a junior residential adviser. She had recently come across a teary transfer student who had been humiliated on the site barely a week after arriving on campus.

"I can't imagine the disgust she must have for Pepperdine if that's what (students) say," Frazier said.

College administrators say they are appalled by the site but have no control over it since students can see it outside the campus computer network. They say all they can do is urge students not to post items or troll for malicious gossip — and hope that in the process they learn about how to get along.

> "IT IS AN EXPRESSION FROM OUR STUDENT BODY THAT WE DON'T WANT THIS JUNK IN OUR COMMUNITY."
> Andy Canales
> Leader of the student government at Pepperdine

That tactic may be having an effect.

At a number of campuses where JuicyCampus was a hot topic even just a few weeks ago, students and administrators say use and complaints have tapered off sharply. That's hard to confirm; Internet tracker comScore Inc. says the site's visitor numbers are too low to be counted by its system.

But more and more postings criticize the site, with comments like, "let's not ruin each other's lives," and, "If you can't personalize any of the stuff you read or write here, imagine it happening to your sister or your best friend."

"People have gotten just extremely sick of hearing all this stuff," said Rachelle Palisoc, a freshman at Loyola Marymount in California, who joined a Facebook group called "Ban Juicycampus!!!!" that has about 850 members.

Free to use and supported by advertising, JuicyCampus is a simple conduit urging users to post gossip and promising them total anonymity. There are threads on campus hookups, who's popular and who's overweight.

"Top ten freshman sluts" reads one typical thread, and "The Jews ruin this school" another. Homophobia is common. Many postings combine the cruelty of a middle school playground, the tight social dynamics of a college campus and the alarming global reach of the Internet.

JuicyCampus pledges that it blocks its discussion boards from being indexed by search sites like Google, and that appears to be true.

"College students are clever and fun-loving, and we wanted to create a place where they could share their stories," said Matt Ivester, the site's founder, who agreed to answer questions by e-mail.

"Like anything that is even remotely controversial, there are always people who demand censorship," he said in response to calls he has rejected — including one from his alma mater, Duke — for him to shut down the site. "However, we believe that JuicyCampus can have a really positive impact on college campuses, as a place for both entertainment and free expression. Frankly, we're surprised that any college administration would be against the free exchange of ideas."

Duke's vice president for student affairs, Larry Moneta, said the school asked Ivester to consider "moderating the venom or at least moderating the opportunity for venom." However, "my sense is that's not that person's interest," Moneta said.

Under U.S. law, sites like JuicyCampus generally bear no responsibility for what their users post, said George Washington University law professor Daniel Solove, author of the recent book "The Future of Reputation: Gossip, Rumor, and Privacy on the Internet."

But Solove believes Congress and the courts have gone overboard protecting such sites. It's one thing to protect the owner of a Web site when someone posts a defamatory message unbeknownst to the operator.

Report says brigade should stay

Army environmental study favors keeping Strykers in Hawaii

BY AUDREY MCAVOY
Associated Press Writer

HONOLULU An Army environmental study due to be released next week favors keeping a Hawaii-based Stryker brigade in the islands, the military said Friday.

The Army plans to release the study, which says the central Oahu Army base of Schofield Barracks is the "preferred alternative" to bases in Alaska and Colorado, next Friday. Army leadership will consult the report before making a final decision on where to put the brigade.

The Army initially hadn't planned on carrying out the environmental study as it didn't think it was necessary. But it did so after a federal appeals court sided with Native Hawaiian and environmentalist groups who sued demanding a study be conducted.

The groups alleged the brigade would hurt Hawaii's fragile environment and desecrate cultural sites. They also said the Army failed to adequately consider alternative basing options.

Hawaii's Democratic senators both welcomed the report's findings.

POWERFUL FRIENDS: The Army's Stryker has received support from both of Hawaii's senators.

Sen. Daniel Inouye said the study underscores Hawaii's strategic importance.

"This asset is critical to protecting the lives of our soldiers who must be able to adequately train prior to their deployment to faraway and dangerous lands," Inouye said in a statement.

Sen. Daniel Akaka said he was confident the Army carefully considered the strengths and weaknesses of each alternative location.

"I remain committed to protecting our environment in Hawaii and across our great country," Akaka said. "I firmly believe we can preserve our state's natural and cultural resources while meeting our military's training and national security needs."

David Henkin, a lawyer for Earthjustice who lead the legal case against the Army, said he wouldn't be able to provide an informed analysis of the study — and where the Army went wrong — until the military issues the report next week.

But he said the Army would need to explain why it didn't consider more mainland alternatives for the brigade, including bases in Washington state, Texas and New Mexico.

Henkin said the brigade, and the 19-ton Stryker vehicles, would have a greater impact on the environment than the infantry brigade it is replacing.

"We want appropriate federal moneys and projects flowing into the state," Henkin said. "The Stryker brigade is not an appropriate one."

Dispute over guns in national parks threatens Senate vote

BY MATTHEW DALY I Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON An election-year dispute over whether to allow loaded guns in national parks is holding up a vote on a massive bill affecting public lands from coast to coast.

Democrats accuse Republicans of trying to score political points by injecting a "wedge" issue like gun rights into a noncontroversial bill.

Republicans counter that Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid is trying to protect the two leading Democratic candidates for president by shielding them from a politically difficult vote on an issue that many rural voters consider crucial.

Arizona Sen. John McCain, the leading Republican contender for president, is a co-sponsor of the amendment, which would allow gun owners to carry loaded, accessible firearms into national parks and wildlife refuges. Current regulations ban gun owners from carrying easy-to-reach firearms onto lands managed by the National Park Service and Fish and Wildlife Service.

Spokesmen for the two leading Democratic presidential contenders, New York Sen. Hillary Clinton and Illinois Sen. Barack Obama, declined repeated requests to comment.

The gun amendment is sponsored by Sen. Tom Coburn, R-Okla., a longtime gun-rights advocate who has endorsed McCain. A spokesman for Coburn accused Reid, D-Nev., of bad faith in refusing to allow a vote on the issue, despite an earlier agreement between the two senators.

Reid "is going to go against his word because he wants to protect Hillary Clinton from a tough vote rather than protect the Second Amendment rights of all Americans," said Coburn spokesman Don Tatro.

Reid spokesman Jon Summers called that absurd.

"You take tough votes in the Senate regularly," he said, accusing Coburn of "a transparent attempt to stop the bipartisan package" of relatively non-controversial land measures.

The bill combines nearly 60 separate proposals to expand wilderness protection in several Western states and establish the Abraham Lincoln National Heritage Area in Illinois and Niagara Falls Heritage Area in New York state, among dozens of provisions. Coburn considers the bill bloated and expensive and has blocked it for months.

Sen. Patty Murray, D-Wash., whose measure to create a 100,000 acre wilderness protected area outside Seattle is among those being blocked, called the dispute disheartening.

"It's sad that individual political interests are working to hold up an effort that is broadly bipartisan and so obviously in the public interest," Murray said. "Surely we can all agree that creating wilderness land for future generations should not be held hostage by ideology or political gamesmanship."

The fight over guns comes as nearly half the Senate is pushing the Bush administration to let gun owners carry firearms into national parks and wildlife refuges.

Forty-seven senators have signed a letter asking Interior Secretary Dirk Kempthorne to lift the Reagan-era restrictions requiring park visitors to render their weapons inaccessible. Guns do not have to be disassembled, but they must be put somewhere that is not easily reached, such as in a car trunk, said Jerry Case, the National Park Service's chief of regulations and special park uses.

Thirty-nine Republicans and eight Democrats signed the letter seeking to overturn the regulations, which were approved in the early 1980s by then-Interior Secretary James Watt.

Coburn's amendment would take that a step further and write into law a requirement that guns cannot be restricted in national parks. "Unloaded and disassembled guns locked in your trunk are of no use when a rapist is attacking your family," Tatro said.

But a coalition of park rangers and park service retirees say the amendment could jeopardize public safety and make it more difficult to stop poaching.

"There is simply no legitimate or substantive reason for a thoughtful sportsman or gun owner to carry a loaded gun in a national park unless that park permits hunting," the groups said in a statement.

The conflict over the amendment has caused bruised feelings on both sides.

"A lot of things are done in the Senate on agreement, and for people to go back on their word would really be detrimental to the body as a whole," said Tatro.

Bill Wicker, a spokesman for Democrats on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, agreed — but he blamed Republicans for the rift.

District known for fresh offerings

a local businessman approached the district about starting a joint venture to allow students to operate their own café.

In 1996, the Vikes' Café opened in a snack bar in the school cafeteria, selling items that aren't otherwise offered through the district-operated and owned lunch carts, according to Anita Kemp, one of the instructors for SAGE.

Both ventures bring in a combined $200,000 a year.

But perhaps one of the most popular attributes of the lunch program at the district is the salad bar whose ingredients are purchased twice a week at the Downtown Santa Monica Farmers' Market.

It was 10 years ago that the salad bar was launched at McKinley Elementary School, a program initiated by a school parent who thought it would be interesting to tap into one of the city's most famous resources — the Santa Monica Farmers' Market — and make it available to the students.

Today, the salad bar is offered at all the schools and is open every Thursday at the elementary schools and every day at the middle and high schools.

Aside from fruits and vegetables, the bar also serves pasta — the most popular item for the elementary age audience — baked potatoes and occasionally, taco salads.

The bar continues to be one of the most popular lunch-time areas at the schools with the district having served more than 19,900 salads in January, which is an average of 1,100 a day.

On average, the district purchases roughly 200 heads of lettuce, 120 cucumbers and 80 bunches of broccoli every week.

"It's always fresh, it's pesticide free and it's from local farmers in Southern California," Richwine said.

The success of the program has led to a DVD and a workbook created by Richwine who has often been approached by other school districts interested in creating a similar program.

"Imagine that you're getting farm fresh fruits and vegetables every day," Richwine said, referring to what makes for a successful salad bar. "The taste is unlike the other produce — it's in season, the farmers pick it the day before they bring it to the market."

The immense success of the salad bar has even warranted itself a celebration — the district plans to bring back key figures in the launch of the salad bar together for a May 8 event at where it all started — McKinley Elementary School.

The salad bar is just one of the various components that keep the 75-staff member Food Services department running every day at the school district. Operating off a $3.5 million budget this fiscal year, Food Services is a self-sustaining department, everything from the salaries and supplies being purchased using revenue.

> "IMAGINE THAT YOU'RE GETTING FARM FRESH FRUITS AND VEGETABLES EVERY DAY. THE TASTE IS UNLIKE THE OTHER PRODUCE – IT'S IN SEASON, THE FARMERS PICK IT THE DAY BEFORE THEY BRING IT TO THE MARKET."
> Donna Richwine, District's nutritionist

The reaction of parents about the quality of the lunch program appears to be a mixed bag, some preferring to see healthier options, others impressed.

"I'm probably in the minority but I know an awful lot about how food services operate and I know how hard it is to get good food out there for the kids," Lori Whitesell, the PTA president at Will Rogers Learning Community, said. "I'm quite impressed with the job the district does."

Whitesell, who once worked in food sales for a meat manufacturing company, has two sons at Will Rogers and both buy the school lunches about 70 percent of the time.

"I never get complaints from them," Whitesell said. "Some of the stuff they actually really like."

LUNCH TIME MADNESS AT LINCOLN

What is considered perhaps the most popular period of the day for students has just commenced at Lincoln Middle School, which on this Thursday afternoon, just happens to be Valentine's Day.

The students, many wearing Valentine's Day themed colors, are busy killing two birds with one stone — eating their lunches and handing out cards to their BFFs.

One of the biggest lines forms in front of the barbecue where students wait for burgers to cook off the grill.

Sixth grader Alex Talley is among the students waiting to grab a burger, one of his three favorite lunch options, along with the salad bar and the occasional Asian food served during the week.

Talley usually prefers to buy than opt for the brown bag, mainly because he thinks it's less time consuming and better.

"The food is good, but it shouldn't be so fattening," Talley said. "I like most of everything they serve here."

The students at Lincoln seem to have a variety of opinions about the quality of food served to them day in and day out, some saying they like the variety, others wanting to see fresher offerings.

One thing that the students here seem to have in common is that they're health conscious for their age, something school administrators say is a result of a nutrition program offered as part of the physical education curriculum.

Seth Morgan, a seventh grader, said he has been watching what he eats ever since he had an adverse reaction to a Rice Krispies Treat. He checked the snacks' label and was surprised to see the high sugar content.

"I didn't feel good so now I watch what I eat," Morgan said.

Many of the students who buy lunch every day say they do so because of how little time they have in the morning.

Francesca Pezzullo, a seventh grader, gets up at 6:30 every morning and said she never has time to prepare lunch.

Instead, she starts her day buy eating a bagel purchased from the school, followed by a trip to the salad bar or barbecue grill for lunch.

"I don't think it's the greatest quality of produce and it's not as fresh as it could be, but in the end it all tastes good," Pezzullo said.

Others students say they like to bring lunch to school because of their own eating habits, preferring to have control over what is available to them that day.

"I'm a picky eater," seventh grader Edie Cote, who brings seaweed, rice cakes and leftover rice to school every day, said.

Chloe Meisner is one of the few students who work at the lunch cart every day, helping one of the lunch staff members to serve pizza and nachos in an expeditious manner.

She started helping out last year as a sixth grader at the salad bar, bringing the empty dishes to the cafeteria kitchen when a counselor approached the student and asked if she be interested in helping serve pizza and nachos.

By the time she's done on Thursday, there's about 10 minutes left in the lunch period, a time when she normally pulls an Asian pork bun or peanut butter and jelly sandwich out of her lunch bag.

But on this Thursday, she opted for a school lunch.

"It's pretty good here," she said. "I don't have much to complain about."

The goal of the lunch program here, according to administrators, is to encourage kids to make the best nutritional choices.

"I see kids make good choices," Lincoln Principal Tristan Komlos said. "For the most part, kids here eat well.

USDA officials have put a hold on meat products from the facility

Calling it "waterboarding," Ramos said some animals had water forced down their throats to choke them.

Prosecutors said Navarro and Sanchez were seen in the video. They were fired and their supervisor was suspended.

The video was shot by a person working undercover for The Humane Society of the United States.

Wayne Pacelle, president and chief executive of The Humane Society, said he couldn't estimate how many animals were mistreated at the plant.

He said a USDA inspector was at the plant for about two hours each day and the case should be a wake-up call to the government to do better monitoring.

Pacelle noted that downed animals are protected by federal laws.

"Our duty is to see that they aren't abused," Pacelle said. "It's wrong and unacceptable. We hope the message is sent to slaughterhouses across the nation that this kind of behavior is out of bounds."

USDA officials have put a hold until Feb. 19 on meat products from the facility, which are also used by major hamburger chains around the nation.

Investigations have found no evidence that meat from disabled animals has entered the food supply.

Federal regulations call for keeping downed cattle out of the food supply because they may pose a higher risk of E. coli, salmonella contamination or mad cow disease because they typically wallow in feces and their immune systems are often weak.

About 150 school districts around the nation have stopped using ground beef from Hallmark Meat Packing Co., which is associated with Westland. There have been no reported illnesses linked to the beef at any of the schools. Some fast-food chains also have halted using products from Westland/Hallmark.

Westland President Steve Mendell said in a letter posted on the company's Web site that he was "shocked and horrified" by what he saw on the video.

The USDA inspector general is looking into Westland's procedures and could turn over information to the Justice Department for criminal charges.

Schultz tries to learn from her SMC students recognized. The students do so much of it. I get notes all the time and phone calls, students letting me know where they are," Schultz said.

The professor has not had to rely solely on the feedback of students. Juggling multiple commitments, unabashedly admitting that even though administrators would disagree, it is the professors that run the school, Schultz has been recognized for her dedication in the past. While teaching at UCLA, a post she held, for years concurrently, from 1979 to 1997, Schultz was twice named Professor of the Year; and at SMC, she was twice awarded the Alpha Gamma Sigma Outstanding Professor of the Year.

Schultz did admit, "When you are recognized, all of a sudden, you realize it does validate what you are doing."

The professor traces the development of her teaching style and thorough love for leading a classroom to her youth spent at a strict all-girls Catholic school. The nuns there taught her precisely how not to teach and endowed her with a knowledge of the importance of empathy in connecting to and effectively instructing students.

"Going to such a rigid Catholic school, I really did learn the value of kindness. I think I am a kind teacher. I really try to understand my students, particularly in this environment. A lot of teachers get mad when students are sleeping in class, but most of them are working two jobs. This isn't a cakewalk for them. Most don't have a lot of parental support, their parents certainly aren't funding them, and their parents may have never gone to college. I try to be really understanding without being easy," Schultz said.

Despite the poor example set by the nuns, Schultz knew since she was "the littlest girl" that she wanted to teach. The desire drove her through an undergraduate degree in polical science, specifically American politics, at USC and a doctorate combining psychology, American politics, and comparative politics at UCLA.

Her focus on the nexus of media and election campaigns — what she terms her "real love" — has kept her humbled by giving her an appreciation of the way in which youth keep informed of and drive current events. Contrary to those who dismiss the twenty-something set as apathetic, Schultz is thrilled to research the modern technology most readily utilized by her students. In 2004, that meant researching blogs and the way politicians took advantage of the Internet to galvanize support and raise money; in 2008, that means studying video-based media Web sites like Youtube.com.

"If you're going to teach American politics, you better stay up on how young people are communicating. It's really a very different source that nobody has studied yet. I find it very exciting," Schultz said.

One example she uses is the Democratic campaign of Barack Obama. He, said Schultz, came from nothing, with no Democratic party support behind him. He became one of the two foremost candidates mainly with the use of blogs and Youtube.com.

"That's how he started, just netroots. That's amazing, that a young man like Obama can jettison himself onto the international scene, now, just from young people," Schultz said.

The professor made an exclusive move to SMC in the late '90s to further cement her ties with students. She was tired of large lecture halls and wanted to have a more proactive presence on campus. Her bright third floor office overlooking the college, a container of homemade brownies crowns her desk in anticipation of co-workers and students seeking out sweets. Schultz pauses and smiles, musing over a word she has used that was coined only half a decade beforehand.

"'Netroots' — so cool, isn't it?"

LUMPED IN WITH OIL: Coal is our cheapest, most abundant — and dirtiest — fuel source. 'Clean coal' proponents want to purify and liquefy it for use in diesel-powered autos. But green groups say producing liquid coal pollutes more than petroleum-derived fuel and that using it in autos would be like 'turning a hybrid Prius into a Hummer.'

Can coal really be clean energy?

Dear EarthTalk:

As I understand it, coal that is used to fuel power plants and other industrial activity is a key culprit in pollution and climate change. So what is "clean coal" and is it really?

– Matthew Oliver,
Minneapolis, MN

THE TERM "CLEAN COAL" DESCRIBES various processes that remove pollutants from coal, our cheapest, most abundant — and dirtiest — energy source. By reducing coal's environmental footprint through technological wizardry, the coal mining industry and the Bush administration hope to keep coal, which currently produces more than half of all U.S. electricity, a big part of our energy picture for many years to come.

Clean coal proponents also want to liquefy coal to turn it into a form of automotive fuel that, according to the industry-sponsored Coal-to-Liquids Coalition, costs less and burns cleaner in some ways than the traditional diesel fuel it could replace. Several members of Congress from coal states are keen on having the government subsidize the production of so-called liquid coal — which can be used anywhere diesel fuel currently goes — as a "homegrown" alternative to foreign oil.

Industry analysts say there is enough coal in America to last hundreds of years, saving us untold expense and trouble obtaining regular petroleum from unfriendly foreign governments.

But major environmental groups, from the Sierra Club to the Natural Resources Defense Council, say that "clean coal" is anything but. The process involves heating coal to 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit and mixing it with water to produce a gas, then converting the gas into diesel fuel. Although the Coal-to-Liquids Coalition says that carbon dioxide emissions from the entire production cycle of liquid coal are "equal to, or slightly below, those of conventional petroleum-derived fuels," its claims are based on a single federal study, now six years old, that environmental leaders disagree with profoundly.

Jim Presswood, federal energy advocate of the Natural Resources Defense Council says, "Liquid CO2 emissions are twice as much as emissions from conventional petroleum-derived fuels." He says that even if CO2 emissions were captured as part of the process, at best liquid coal would be 12 percent worse than the gasoline equivalent. As some environmentalists have put it, liquid coal can turn any hybrid Prius into a Hummer.

The Washington Post editorialized, "To wean the U.S. off of just one million barrels of the 21 million barrels of crude oil consumed daily, an estimated 120 million tons of coal would need to be mined each year. The process requires vast amounts of water, particularly a concern in the parched West. And the price of a plant is estimated at $4 billion." Also, in recent years, particularly in Appalachia, mining companies have gone from simple excavation to blasting off the tops of mountains in an ecologically devastating process known as "mountain top removal."

For their part, greens acknowledge the importance of cleaning up coal and other dirty energy sources, but would rather see more funding devoted to researching, developing and implementing alternative and renewable energy sources that don't come with so much environmental baggage.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

Hawks send four players to Kings

Bibby the centerpiece of a trade between pair of losing teams

BY CHARLES ODUM
AP Sports Writer

ATLANTA The Atlanta Hawks are trying balance out their backcourt and make a playoff push by bringing in Mike Bibby.

Hawks coach Mike Woodson said Bibby, acquired from the Sacramento Kings for four players on Saturday, will provide scoring help for Joe Johnson. Atlanta's All-Star shooting guard often faces gimmick defenses because he's the team's only outside shooting threat.

"There's another option now," Woodson said. "It'll be like a one-two punch in the backcourt."

Bibby has averaged 16.7 points for his career and is making more than 36 percent of his 3-point shots for the ninth straight year.

The Hawks sent starting point guard Anthony Johnson, 2007 first-round pick Shelden Williams, backup point guard Tyronn Lue, veteran forward Lorenzen Wright and a 2008 second-round pick to the Kings.

The Hawks, in ninth place in the Eastern Conference and percentage points behind the eighth and final playoff spot, are trying to make the postseason for the first time since 1999.

Woodson and Michael Gearon Jr., one of the team's owners, were pleased the team did not have to touch its core of promising young players to acquire Bibby.

"We've still got Marvin (Williams) and Josh Smith and Josh Childress; we were able to keep the core group together, along with Al Horford and Zaza (Pachulia)," Woodson said.

The trade is pending league approval and physicals.

Hawks spokesman Arthur Triche said Bibby is expected to join the team in Los Angeles on Monday, where he will have his physical. The Hawks play at the Lakers on Tuesday night and play at the Kings on Wednesday night.

Bibby, a 10-year veteran, missed the start of the season with a thumb injury but is averaging 13.5 points and 5.0 assists in 15 games.

"I want to thank Mike for his terrific all-around play," Kings president Geoff Petrie said in a statement. "He's had a great run here as a King and has participated in and contributed to some great moments on the court and I wish him all the best."

With Bibby gone, the Kings have cut almost all ties to their highly successful teams of the early part of this decade.

Bibby came to the Kings from the Vancouver Grizzlies in a trade before the 2001-02 season and helped Sacramento reach the Western Conference finals that season, establishing himself as a go-to-guy late in games.

With Bibby, Chris Webber, Peja Stojakovic and Vlade Divac, coach Rick Adelman's Kings were one of the best and most entertaining teams in the NBA for five seasons, but they never reached the finals.

Now the Kings are in the midst of a major rebuilding project. They're 23-28 at the All-Star break and have no need for a 29-year-old point guard.

Gearon said his team's new backcourt of Bibby and Joe Johnson "will be as good as any in the East."

"I think Bibby will be one of the top three point guards in the East," Gearon said.

"He's capable of going one-on-one, hitting clutch shots, breaking defenses and leading this team."

> "FROM OUR STANDPOINT IT'S A BIG COMMITMENT FINANCIALLY AND ONE WE FEEL GOOD ABOUT ... WE'RE EXCITED ABOUT GETTING HIM IN A HAWKS UNIFORM."
> Michael Gearon Jr.
> Hawks owner

Bibby is making about $13.5 million this season and will earn $14 million in 2008-09.

"From our standpoint it's a big commitment financially and one we feel good about," Gearon said. "We've got a guy to take a lot of pressure off Joe, and he's a leader. We're excited about getting him in a Hawks uniform."

By trading Anthony Johnson and Lue, the Hawks also are committing to rookie point guard Acie Law, who should receive more consistent playing time as Bibby's backup.

"I think it's a good move or us to get a guy who's run a team for many years," said Woodson of Bibby. "It's an opportunity to start fresh in Atlanta, for a different team, and put a stamp on our team."

Also on Saturday, the Kings requested waivers on forward Justin Williams and guard Dahntay Jones.

Shelden Williams averaged 5.5 points and 5.4 rebounds, with eight double-doubles, as a rookie, when he started 31 games. He has no starts while averaging only 2.9 points and 2.9 rebounds this season.

Williams has another year remaining on his rookie deal that is paying him $3.3 million per year. The contracts for Anthony Johnson, Lue and Wright expire at the end of the season.

"We're excited about adding another young frontcourt player who was the fifth pick of the 2006 draft in Williams, along with some experienced veterans to the team," Petrie said. "We're looking forward to seeing how they integrate in with the rest of our roster."

County has second thoughts about $500K investment in unreleased film

PAUL SORVINO

First-time director PAUL SORVINO doesn't understand why his investors are so jittery.

More than two years ago, Lackawanna County agreed to partner with Sorvino on "The Trouble with Cali," an independent film the "GoodFellas" star is producing and directing in northeastern Pennsylvania.

Shot in the Scranton area in 2006, the low-budget movie has yet to hit theaters, prompting the cash-strapped county to ask Sorvino what he has done with its $500,000 investment.

Sorvino says he's happy to provide a full accounting of the money. But, he adds, elected officials don't necessarily have a good understanding of the movie business. And he resents any implication that he has been less than forthright.

"To have my honesty impugned has never happened in my life," the burly character actor said in a phone interview. "The record of how the money was spent was always available, to the penny."

Sorvino, 68, describes "Cali" as a black comedy about a young ballerina and her dysfunctional family. His Oscar-winning daughter, Mira, has a cameo; another daughter, Amanda, wrote the script; son Michael also appears.

Sorvino, who lives in the nearby Pocono Mountains, says he has completed a "very rough cut" of the film and hopes to have it ready for a distributor in three or four months.

Donning copper-colored bra and wig, Walken gets Harvard award

CHRISTOPHER WALKEN sang a song from "Hairspray" and spoofed a "Saturday Night Live" skit Friday night to earn Harvard's Hasty Pudding Man of the Year award.

At a roast before the presentation, Walken, who serenaded John Travolta last year in the latest film version of "Hairspray," sang to a Harvard student dressed in drag.

Another cast member of the Hasty Pudding Theatricals at Harvard University, the nation's oldest undergraduate drama troupe, came on stage banging a cow bell, evoking the "SNL" skit in which Walken played a music producer who called for "more cow bell."

Walken, who joked afterward that he'd "have prepared or had a couple of drinks" if he had known what was in store, donned a copper-colored bra and brown wig. He couldn't get into a pair of blue pumps that were supposed to be part of the outfit, doing a dance in his street shoes instead.

The Hasty Pudding roasters also had Walken read the recipe for "hasty pudding," and asked him to show off his "psychic powers," a play on his role in 1983's "The Dead Zone."

"I hope nobody's watching," Walken said. "I acted on this stage in a play about 20 years ago."

In a more serious vein, he said he was "amazed and thrilled" by the honor.

The 64-year-old actor won a best supporting actor Oscar as a troubled Vietnam veteran in 1978's "The Deer Hunter." He was nominated again for 2002's "Catch Me If You Can."

Last year, he was featured in the film "Balls of Fury."

Talisa Friedman, press manager for the Hasty Pudding drama troupe, said Walken exemplifies the Hasty Pudding spirit and the value it puts on fun.

OWNERS TIRE OF FANS

Owners of THE CARPENTERS' former home aren't feeling on top of the world about the legions of fans who keep stopping by to pay tribute.

The five-bedroom tract house, where siblings Karen and Richard Carpenter lived and penned some of their greatest hits, was featured on the cover of their 1973 hit album "Now & Then."

Owners Manuel and Blanca Melendez Parra have apparently grown weary of the parade of fans paying homage.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ Events take on an erratic tone, and wildness could set in toward the end of the day. Getting going this Monday could take discipline, but in hindsight, it's worth the effort. Confusion could peak before it clears out. Tonight: Act as if there is no tomorrow.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Make calls early, as fatigue could become a factor. However, if you think about it, you could have the energy to be mischievous. With that knowledge, eye your routine and work. What would it take to fuel your enthusiasm? Tonight: Happy at home.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★ Confirm financial matters. You could be taken aback by the possibilities that pop up in your life. What might seem to be an extreme situation will right itself. Keep communication flowing. Tonight: Hanging out is fun to do.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ You wake up knowing you are the big cheese. Use the p.m. to check out the financial pluses and minuses of an investment. Someone who has been aloof or difficult could suddenly start talking in the next few days. What a relief! Tonight: Chat over dinner.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Though you might have a difficult time getting moving this morning, you'll perk up quickly, a force to behold. Your personality encourages others to let go. Communication that has been marred is about to be straightened out. Tonight: Happy as a big cat.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Refuse to respond to social pressure or assume any more responsibilities. Your emotions could be like a runaway train if you aren't careful. Feel but don't act. You need time for yourself. Tonight: Take some long-overdue private time.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★ You could feel like you are at a taffy pull and you are the taffy! Relax and understand that for now, you might need to spread yourself thin. A problem could rapidly eliminate itself given openness and a lack of being judgmental. Tonight: Zero in on what you want.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★ Step up to the plate. Understand that your sense of commitment often puts you in a leadership position. Know when enough is enough, and say no to a weighty and unnecessary responsibility. Tonight: It could be a late night.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Make it your business to seek out more information and different opinions. Your awareness that your ideas might be limited allows you to aim for greatness, be it an idea or a situation. Tonight: Your imagination comes into play.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★★ Relate to people as individuals, not groups. You will be much happier with the end results. Others respond much better when you express your appreciation. Tonight: Special time with a special person.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Others express their personality, wants and expectations. You might be flattered, but whether you want to pursue another's suggestions could be a different issue. Keep conversations open and expressive. Tonight: Do what you want.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ Dig into work as if there is no tomorrow. You might be more than delighted by the end results. Don't feel a need to comment. Just do what you want. Be careful, as you could be overly sensitive and take another's words too seriously. Tonight: Early to bed.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD

BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Among the accusations that emerged from an FBI investigation of the U.S. government's beleaguered Special Inspector General for Iraq Reconstruction (according to a December Washington Post report) is that the deputy director of that office, Ginger Cruz, a self-described Wiccan, had been threatening to place hexes on employees if they co-operated with outsiders' evaluations of the agency. (She was cleared of those charges by the internal SIGIR staff.)

■ A commercial, pre-packaged ham-and-cheese sandwich using one slice of bread is regulated by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, which conducts daily inspections under its jurisdiction, but a ham-and-cheese sandwich on two slices of bread falls to the Food and Drug Administration, which inspects plants about once every five years. That anomaly surfaced in the current presidential campaign and was verified by a Congressional Quarterly-St. Petersburg Times "Politifact" researcher in December. A USDA official admitted to the Times that there "is no rationale or logic" behind the distinction: "(I)t's an issue that makes it look like we don't know what we're doing."
