Police are searching for suspects connected to a Friday night shooting in Downtown Santa Monica.

According to SMPD, officers received multiple calls regarding an active shooting at the West End located at the corner of 5th and Arizona. When officers arrived, they found a man lying on the street and determined he was the victim of a fistfight.

However, multiple witnesses reported a pair of vehicles connected to the incident. Officers found one at the corner of 5th / Arizona outside the bar and the second trying to enter the freeway. In the second vehicle, officers found a victim with a gunshot wound to the ankle.

The suspects were seen running south in Alley 5 but where gone by the time officers arrived.

The shooting victim was transported to the hospital with non life-threatening injuries and the victim of the physical fight declined any medical treatment.

Detectives responded and the investigation is on-going.

Anyone with information can call the Santa Monica Police Department at (310) 458-8491.

Man dies after jumping from The Pier as cold weather blows in TOUGH MORNING: Emergency responders had to fight a small fire on the PCH and look for a man that jumped from the pier on Monday.

KATE CAGLE

Daily Press Staff Writer

Cold temperatures and windy conditions complicated rescue efforts for firefighters Monday who searched for a man who jumped off the Santa Monica Pier and battled an early morning brushfire above the Pacific Coast Highway. A Los Angeles County helicopter eventually located the body of the missing swimmer 600 yards south of the Pier and officials declared the man dead on scene.

The National Weather Service issued a warning for Gale Force winds late Sunday night as a cold front moved into Los Angeles County. The alert warned of dangerous sea conditions and encouraged boaters to seek shelter within a harbor. Hours later, the Santa Monica Fire Department responded to a brushfire on the bluffs about a quarter of a mile south of the Annenberg Beach House.

"My dad woke up and saw the red and blue lights reflecting on an outward facing wall inside our house," said Molly Philbin who grew up in a house right across from the fire. "When he walked out the fire was pretty high on the cliffside, maybe like 100 feet. It had spread to some of the palm trees."

Philbin said the fire department had recently cleared brush from the area. No one was hurt and firefighters were able to contain the fire.

A few hours later, a fisherman called 9-

1-1 from the Santa Monica Pier, saying he saw a man throwing rose petals into the Pacific Ocean before jumping off The Pier.

"When we first got on the scene it was kind of dark still and we weren't able to locate him," said Los Angeles County Fire Lifeguard Public Information Officer AJ Lester. A search and rescue team immediately deployed, including divers, paddleboarders, the Baywatch Rescue Boat from Marina Del Rey and Copter 18. However, with gusty winds up to 20 knots, choppy waves and a water temperatures around 58 degrees, Lester says hypothermia would have set in quickly for the jumper.

Venice
The 34th Annual Music Business Seminar “Independent Spirit”

California Lawyers for the Arts’ (CLA) 34th Annual Music Business Seminar, “Independent Spirit,” will be held on Saturday, February 24, at Electric Lodge in Venice (1416 Electric Avenue) from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m.

This year’s featured guest is guitarist Gilby Clarke (Guns ‘N Roses and Rock Star Supernova). Gilby will speak about his expansive career as a musician and as a producer. The event will also feature topics such as how to make it as an independent musician; how to get your music into games, apps, and ads; metadata for musicians; the future of the music business; and a year-in-review of 2017’s music legal issues.

Guests will enjoy the opportunity to gain invaluable insight from entertainment attorneys, music industry experts, and professional musicians. Local musicians will perform live throughout the day including Sunny War, recently named as one of “10 New Artists You Need to Know” by Rolling Stone. Her unique sound is described as inviting yet melancholy – made up of hard-earned blues, with an emotional realism usually reserved for punk and hip-hop.

This year’s acclaimed Keynote Speakers are the talented and successful music industry executives, professors, and authors Jeff Brabec (VP of Business Affairs for BMG Rights Management) and Todd Brabec (former EVP and Worldwide Director of Membership for ASCAP). A copy of the Brabecs’ book, Music, Money & Success, will be given to every paid attendee (a $29.95 value).

Musicians who register for the seminar will have the chance to meet one-on-one with an entertainment attorney (first come, first serve). Lawyers can earn 3 hours of MCLE credit. Register online today at musicbusinessseminar.org.

SACRAMENTO
California to Ban Wasteful Take-Out Food Packaging at State Parks and Beaches

Senator Ben Allen (D - Santa Monica) has introduced legislation to reduce waste generated by take-out food packaging at state parks, beaches, and facilities. SB 1335 would require that all take-out food containers sold at these public places be recyclable or compostable in the jurisdiction in which it is provided by January 1, 2021.

“There is no reason for the state to continue selling take-out food packaging that clogs our landfills, and pollutes our parks and beaches,” said Allen. “The solution to wasteful packaging is here, it’s affordable, and the public is ready for it.”

Take-out food packaging in California generates tons of non-recyclable and non-compostable waste every day, much of which finds its way into the natural environment. Once there, plastic packaging breaks down into impossible-to-clean-up pieces and is ingested by fish and other marine life. A recent study by UC Davis surveying fish and shellfish sold at local fish markets found that a quarter of fish and a third of shellfish intended for human consumption contained plastic debris. Stemming the stream of take-out food packaging is a necessary step in beginning to address the global environmental health crisis of plastic pollution and assist California in meeting its goal of diverting 75% of waste from landfills by 2020.

“State parks, beaches, and facilities are the natural place to begin this transition at the state level,” said Kelly McBee, Policy Analyst at Californians Against Waste. “This policy provides an opportunity for the state to lead by example and exemplify the feasibility of sustainable take-out food packaging policies.”

California has the opportunity to take a leadership role on this issue in strong contrast to the regressive policies of the Trump administration, which rescinded an Obama-era policy to reduce the use of disposable water bottles in National Parks.

“Many communities across California have been working to reduce the pollution from single-use take-out food packaging since the 1980s. Recent actions at the national level, our unsustainable reliance of fossil fuels, and the plastic pollution crisis tell us that we can no longer afford to wait on this issue. It’s time for state government to ‘walk the walk’ on sustainability, and show that we don’t have to permanently harm our environment every time we get food to-go,” added Allen.

Ben Allen represents California’s 26th Senate District, which includes the Westside, Hollywood and the South Bay communities of Los Angeles County.

Houston Man Indicted by Federal Grand Jury for Cyber Attack on Los Angeles County Superior Court

A federal Grand Jury has indicted Oriyomi Sadiq Aloba, 32, of Houston, Texas, on multiple counts of unauthorized impairment of a protected computer, unauthorized access to obtain information and aggravated identity theft for a multi-stage phishing attack on the Los Angeles County Superior Court (LASC) computer system.

According to the indictment, over the course of a week in late July 2017, Aloba used the stolen username and passwords of multiple LASC employees to log into the LASC servers and send phishing e-mails to e-mail addresses outside the LASC system, as well as to send test e-mails to himself to test the security features and ensure full access to the account. The phishing e-mails included an e-mail purporting to be a communication from American Express that led to a webpage that asked victims to provide their American Express login credentials, personal identifying information, and credit card information. The link for the fake American Express website used a source code that designated Aloba’s account as the delivery address for the information that the victims input into the website.

In total, Aloba allegedly accessed at least 18 different LASC employee accounts and sent out approximately 2 million phishing e-mails.

A criminal complaint contains allegations that a defendant has committed a crime. Every defendant is presumed innocent until and unless proven guilty in court.

If Aloba is found guilty of the charged offenses, he would face a maximum sentence of 17 years in prison -10 years for unauthorized transmission, 5 years for the unauthorized accessing a protected computer, and 2 years for the identity theft.

The matter was investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The case is being prosecuted by Assistant United States Attorney Robyn Bacon of the Cyber and Intellectual Property Crimes Section, National Security Division.

It's Our Turn

2017 HAS BEEN HERALDED AS “A YEAR of the woman.” The year was kicked off by the first annual Women’s March on the day of President Donald Trump’s inauguration, and finished with the momentous #MeToo movement.

Brentwood School’s It’s Our Turn: Young Women’s Conference, held on Jan. 27, just a week after the second annual Women’s March in Downtown Los Angeles, showed that 2018 promises to build on the momentum of the previous year. was thus manifested at the perfect time.

As a female and high school junior who helped plan the conference, I am acutely aware of what appears to be a wave of change surrounding women in the workplace and around the world. More men in positions of power are being held accountable for deplorable actions inside and outside of the office. Women are less likely to be shamed or silenced when relaying their stories of marginalization.

The Young Women’s Conference’s website proudly proclaims: “Young women today can be significant forces of change—in their own lives and in society. This conference is designed to empower them to take charge of the future in positive ways that influence and inspire others.”

Over 1,000 participants from more than 90 schools and organizations were represented at the event. I was excited by the day’s inclusivity; several speakers remarked that the event’s attendees reflected Los Angeles’ diversity.

The conference featured a series of keynote speakers, including Amy Wakeland, the First Lady of Los Angeles; NBC news anchor Katy Tur; journalist, activist, and former First Lady of California Maria Shriver; director, producer and entertainer Debbie Allen; and former California Senator Barbara Boxer.

The day celebrated what women are capable of accomplishing. Panels and breakout sessions covered a wide variety of topics, including politics, journalism, athletics, arts, entrepreneurship, social media, beauty and body image, Hollywood, and comedy.

My peers and I were energized by the event’s atmosphere of positivity and empowerment. Several speakers encouraged young women to lose their commitment to perfectionism, be bold, and make mistakes. That advice felt particularly applicable to the conference attendees; I am aware that my female friends are less likely to take chances or fly on instinct. We tend to over-prepare in comparison to our male peers. Katy Tur, a Brentwood School alumna, urged, “If it scares you, it’s worth doing.” As she reflected on her critics (including President Donald Trump), she said that she had a revelation: “They’re going after you because you’re making an impact ... they’re scared of what you have to say.”

Originally conceived after Brentwood students were inspired by Maria Shriver’s Women’s Conference in 2008, the first conference planners branded their event “It’s Our Turn,” conveying the young women’s desire to take on the mantle of responsibility and change.

Eight years later, many of those student leaders have graduated from college and entered the workforce, experiencing firsthand the shift happening across the country and across the globe. Will the movement continue? Or will this change be viewed by history as a short-lived moment of self-reflection and correction?

Let us hope that the momentum continues to build. We need to cultivate the next generation of trend-setters, rule-breakers, record-smashers and activists.

The next conference will be held in Jan. 2020. Time will measure our progress.

LILY RICHMAN is a student at Brentwood School and an intern at The Santa Monica Daily Press.

paign season. On Monday, the first City Council challenger, local restaurant owner Greg Morena, announced his candidacy and launched a website. On Wednesday, community activist Mary Marlow will host a kick-off event to hand out petitions for her ballot initiative to put term limits on the City Council.

Marlow has been meeting with neighborhood groups since she quietly filed the application for the initiative in January. The measure would limit Councilmembers to three terms (12 years) over the course of their lifetime. Since the measure is not retroactive, current members would still be able to run for three more terms, including Councilmember Sue Himmelrich, who is running for reelection and backing the measure.

"I'm reaching out to everybody who may be interested in the city because I want their feedback whether they're for or against it," Marlow said. "Either way, I want to know what's going on."

Marlow founded the Santa Monica Transparency Project in 2008, a government watchdog organization that reports on financial contributions to political campaigns and political action committees (PACS). She has already met with Northeast Neighbors, Wilmont, the Ocean Park Association and Friends of Sunset Park and has reached out to more groups to speak at their meetings about her initiative.

At Wednesday's kick-off event at the Main Library auditorium, supporters will get copies of petitions to begin gathering the approximately 10,500 signatures needed to get the measure on the November ballot. The event starts at 6:30 p.m. Marlow hopes to finish the process in about three months.

She says most of the initial reaction has been positive. After she spoke at OPA this month, Marlow said one member realized two sitting councilmembers had been serving since she was in kindergarten.

"You want new blood and you want fresh ideas and you don't get it if you don't get new people," Marlow said. "We need solutions. We've had a traffic problem for years. Do you see anything new coming from our current council? I don't. That's why most legislative organizations have term limits. The turnover gives you new people, fresh ideas, new perspective."

The language in the measure amends the city charter and was drafted by public policy specialists at the Los Angeles law firm Strumwasser and Woocher. Appointees to Santa Monica boards and commissions are already limited to three terms.

The initiative faces criticism from sitting councilmembers, including Kevin McKeown who is running for his sixth term this year. The 70-year-old councilmember told the Daily Press the initiative restricts voters' choice to retain experienced, effective representatives. Instead, he said reform should focus on public campaign finance laws.

Marlow argues fresh faces may be more critical of both lobbyists and the staff reports that are presented at public meetings.

"If you have new people they're not so enamored with staff," Marlow said. "Especially if you've been on the outside and read some of the staff reports that, frankly, are lacking. So I think new people will question more (and) ask staff to do more complete work. They are sorely lacking in that. I think there will be more scrutiny with new people."

Santa Monica's other long serving councilmember, Pam O'Connor, who is also 70, has not yet announced whether she plans to run for reelection.

O'Connor, McKeown and 65-year-old Himmelrich are facing their first challenger, business owner Morena, who announced his campaign in the Daily Press Monday. The 40-year-old Morena owns The Albright restaurant on the Pier.

Planning Commissioner Jennifer Kennedy has filed preliminary paperwork to establish a fundraising committee but declined to comment on any plans to run for council.

Mountain snow likely during California cold snap

The coldest temperatures of the winter are likely from a low-pressure system predicted to bring snow to California mountains.

The National Weather Service has issued a winter weather advisory beginning Sunday evening for gusty winds and icy road conditions in mountain areas across the state.

Forecasters say snow could fall at elevations as low as 1,500 feet (450 meters) in greater Los Angeles and certain areas could see up to three inches. Some six inches could fall to the north in the Sierra Nevada.

The weather service says records could be set as temperatures dip below freezing in the San Francisco Bay Area before a warming trend begins Tuesday. Officials are warning that subfreezing temperatures could harm crops and vegetation. People are urged to bring animals inside.

Buffalo gores camper on Southern California island

Authorities say a buffalo has gored a man camping on Southern California's Catalina Island.

Los Angeles County sheriff's officials say the man was sitting on a log Saturday evening and the buffalo was grazing nearby.

Sgt. Ray Ward says that when the buffalo came closer, the man tried to move away and that's when the animal charged.

Ward says the buffalo gored the man's left arm. He didn't know the extent of the injuries.

The Orange County Register reports that the man was treated at the scene and then airlifted to a hospital on the mainland.

Buffalo are common and roam freely on the back side of Catalina Island, where there are campgrounds. Ward says it's very rare for them to attack humans.

Report: California pot growers struggling to obtain licenses

Nearly two months after marijuana became legal in California only about 1 percent of the state's known growers have been licensed, according to a report from a cannabis-business group.

The report, released Monday by the California Growers Association, cites costs and regulatory barriers it says independent growers face. It says only 0.78 percent have obtained licenses.

California's Bureau of Cannabis Control was closed Monday for the President's Day holiday and did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

A study published last year by the University of California Agricultural Issues Center estimates the newly created state market for recreational marijuana should produce $5 billion in taxable revenue this year.

Monday's report by the California Growers Association says that legal revenue could be diminished if more growers can't gain licenses.

LA gun-control protesters seek new laws after Fla. shooting

Hundreds of sign-carrying, chanting protesters have converged on a downtown Los Angeles park, demanding tougher background checks and other gun-safety measures following last week's deadly school shooting in Florida.

About 500 protesters gathered in LA's Pershing Square shortly before noon Monday.

Many chanted, "Ho, ho, hey, hey, our kids, not the NRA."

Others held signs proclaiming, "Our Children Are Counting On You."

Last week's shooting killed 17 people at Florida's Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School

One of Monday's protesters, Samantha Dorf, tells The Associated Press she supports the Second Amendment right to bear arms but believes stronger background checks for gun-buyers are needed.

The mother of two and member of Moms Demand Action also wants to see tougher laws aimed at keeping guns out of the hands of children.

“All the blood rushes into your core and your muscles shut down,” Lester said. “Then your organs shut down. A person in that degree of water with that wind chill is not going to last long swimming - maybe 10 to 15 minutes before they have complications from hypothermia.”

The helicopter located the body which was recovered by the boat near tower 22.

The Santa Monica Police Department is now investigating the circumstances that led up to the man jumping. Lt. Saul Rodriguez says it was likely a suicide.

“We train on a regular basis for this type of incident,” Lester said. “It was dark this morning and unfortunately we weren’t able to locate this person faster and have a better outcome.”

The weather is forecasted to improve Tuesday and Wednesday, according to the National Weather Service.

CRIME WATCH

BY DAILY PRESS STAFF

Crime Watch is culled from reports provided by the Santa Monica Police Department.
These are arrests only. All parties are innocent until proven guilty in a court of law.

ON FEBRUARY 6, AT ABOUT 11:36 A.M.

While patrolling the area of 1600 Ocean Avenue officers were flagged down regarding a possible fight or assault that just occurred. All three involved were detained for an investigation. Officers determined the victim, an employee at Sea Mist Bike Rentals - 1619 Ocean Front Walk - was working in the bike shop when the suspect entered. The suspect tried to take several tools to fix his skateboard. The victim told the suspect he could not take any tools. The suspect became irate and swung his skateboard at the victim's head several times. The victim was able to avoid being struck. An uninvolved subject intervened and separated the subjects. The suspect was taken into custody and transported to SMPD Jail for booking. Traveon Ray Dillard, 39, from Los Angeles was arrested for assault with a deadly weapon and a parole violation. He was denied bail.

Self Exam

■ Q: How many organs are there in the human body, and how many are considered “vital?”
■ A: It’s widely believed that there are 79 organs, though there is some debate about what constitutes an “organ.” Definitions vary. Five are considered vital and essential to survival: brain, heart, kidneys, liver and lungs.

Medical Myths

■ There is no persuasive empirical evidence that babies get fevers when they teethe, which is almost invariably the immune response to an infection. If a baby is feverish and unresponsive to standard treatment, see a pediatrician immediately.

Sexual misconduct scandal envelops California Legislature

KATHLEEN RONAYNE
Associated Press

Sexual misconduct in the California Legislature was bound to be a prominent issue when lawmakers got to Sacramento last month, but for seven weeks it has felt like the only one, with the burgeoning scandal taking one surprising twist after another and diverting attention from government spending, climate change and housing.

It again will be the focus when lawmakers return Tuesday and learn whether an investigation cleared state Sen. Tony Mendoza of misconduct allegations or set him up for possible expulsion. In another headline-grabbing development, the Los Angeles-area Democrat sued the Senate last week, claiming he was unfairly suspended and that racism might have been a factor.

That came a week after a female lawmaker, Assemblywoman Cristina Garcia, took leave following accusations of groping a male legislative staffer. A different former staffer filed a complaint Saturday with the California Fair Employment and Housing Department alleging Garcia encouraged staff to participate in a drinking game after a 2014 fundraiser and that he was fired for complaining about it.

While lawmakers seek to downplay the impact on day-to-day activities — Democratic Sen. Jim Beall of San Jose said it's simply piling more on an already hefty workload — all the attention on sexual misconduct is clearly taking time away from other issues for some members.

Leadership and staff spent weeks parsing through documents related to sexual harassment allegations, deciding what to release to the public, while a newly formed legislative panel is tackling the mammoth task of rewriting the Legislature's harassment policies.

Some lawmakers have become more cautious about with whom they partner on legislation, fearful the wrong choice could have them tethered to the next person caught in the scandal.

"It's hard to imagine a more hostile-feeling work environment than one in which everyone is suspicious of each other," said Kim Nalder, director of the Project for an Informed Electorate at California State University, Sacramento. "Under these circumstances, (opposition) is heightened and personalized in a way that just has to make it difficult to work toward compromise and be collegial."

More accusations could become public and generate additional negative publicity: The Assembly is investigating at least 10 claims of sexual misconduct, and the Senate, at least six.

Meanwhile, four Assembly seats are vacant — two from the resignations of Raul Bocanegra and Matt Dababneh amid harassment claims, a third from Sebastian Ridley-Thomas' retirement due to health problems and Garcia's. All are Democrats.

In the Senate, Mendoza's seat is open while the investigation plays out.

"It's a drip, drip, drip factor, you have enough drips and soon you have a flood," said Jack Pitney, a political science professor at Claremont McKenna College.

Culturally, too, a noticeable shift is underway. Democratic Assemblywoman Laura Friedman, who chairs the committee rewriting the harassment policy, said in a hearing last week that people in the Capitol are increasingly nervous that routine behavior could be labeled misconduct.

"We're getting to a place here in the Capitol, quite honestly, where people are afraid. They're afraid of whether their behavior crosses a line," she said. "How do we start to understand what's considered acceptable and what's not? Because that seems to be a moving target right now."

Indeed, the spectrum of behaviors that has brought misconduct ranges from hugs and suggestive text messages to groping and in one case involving Dababneh, forcing a female lobbyist into a bathroom and masturbating in front of her. He denies the claim.

The lawsuit and other recent developments have added to the spectacle-like nature of it all.

Senate President Pro Tem Kevin de Leon, who is running for U.S. Senate against longtime incumbent and fellow Democrat Dianne Feinstein, has found himself tangled in the story. He used to share a Sacramento home with Mendoza, who is accused of inviting a young female employee to the house.

De Leon moved out of the house when the allegations against Mendoza broke last fall and has declined to comment on the lawsuit. Mendoza claims de Leon is distancing himself because he doesn't want to harm his chances against Feinstein.

Democratic Assemblyman Mark Stone, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said public perception of the Legislature has been harmed by the scandal and its fallout, "as it should." But there's good from it, too.

"It's also a wakeup call for some changes that should have happened and needed to happen for a long time," he said.

Associated Press writer Jonathan J. Cooper contributed reporting.
