INKED UP: A woman signs a petition during the citywide referendum signing party outside of Surf Liquor on Saturday. Activists are seeking to nix a City Council approval of a major development on Olympic Boulevard. Some in the community say the development is out of scale for the area.

Local activists gather referendum signatures

BY DAVID MARK SIMPSON
Daily Press Staff Writer

CITYWIDE How many signatures have been gathered on the petition to fight off Hines' Bergamot Transit Village project?

We don't know. Perhaps no one does. Repeated calls to the founder of Residocracy, the website leading the referendum charge, went unreturned.

The Hines development project at Olympic Boulevard and 26th Street, with its 427 apartments, 374,434 square feet of office, 15,500 square feet of restaurant, and 13,891 square feet of retail across five buildings, was approved by City Council in a 4 to 3 vote earlier this month.

Those opposed to the project believe it should be smaller with less office space and more residential, fearing that it will create more traffic in an already-congested area. Those in favor of the project point to Santa Monica's creative office space shortage and the $32 million Hines will spend in community benefits.

Anti-Hines groups are shooting for a referendum vote — a special election that would allow the residents to decide whether or not to green light the development. In order to pull it off, they have 30 days from the second reading of the ordinance (which occurred on Feb. 11) to gather about 6,200 signatures from registered Santa Monica voters or 10 percent of local voters.

But signature gatherers have their work cut out for them. It's not as simple as getting 6,200 John Hancocks on some scrap paper. The City Clerk's Office oversees the petition and the Los Angeles County Register-Recorder and County Clerk verifies the signatures.

Of course signatures can't be from any old resident; they have to also be register

Risky deals costing University of California millions

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

SANTA ANA, Calif. The financially strapped University of California system is losing about $6 million each year due to risky bets on interest rates under deals pushed by Wall Street banks.

The Orange County Register reported that the UC system already has lost tens of millions of dollars on complex contracts known as interest-rate swaps.

Bankers sold university officials on the swaps starting around a decade ago, pitching them as a way to temper the cost of borrowing when interest rates rise.

Under the contracts, a university in the 10-campus system pays a fixed interest rate on money it borrows. If the current interest rate exceeds the fixed rate, the universities save money because they pay less than they would have. But with interest rates at historically low levels, the universities are paying more than they otherwise would have — and the banks are profiting.

The newspaper reported that schools in the system could lose as much as $136 million over the next 34 years. Future losses would be reduced only if interest rates rise.

The losses come as UC administrators have sharply increased tuition and fees in recent years, angering many students who say they are being priced out of a public education.

The university system's chief financial

'Lego Movie' lead builds, No. 1 for third weekend

JESSICA HERNDON
AP Film Writer

LOS ANGELES Action-packed new releases couldn't stack up to 3D hit "The Lego Movie," which took the No. 1 slot in its third weekend at the box office.

The Warner Bros. animated film bested Relativity Media's "3 Days to Kill" and Sony's "Pompeii" on their opening weekends.

"The Lego Movie," featuring the voices of Chris Pratt, Elizabeth Banks and Morgan Freeman, earned $31.5 million, according to studio estimates Sunday. The domestic total has passed $183 million.

Heading into full-fledged franchise territory with a sequel set to release in May 2017, "The Lego Movie" is the highest grossing film of 2014.

"It's been really tough for any of the newcomers to displace 'Lego,' " said Paul Dergarabedian, senior media analyst for box-office tracker Rentrak. "They had such a great release date that put them in this perfect position to dominate the marketplace for several weeks. For 'Lego' to earn $31 mil-

Not another tax

Editor:

Please do not waste $27,800 to study whether homeowners want to pay more tax ("City Hall considers tax hike for low-income housing," Feb. 21, page 1). I am sure that 99.99 percent of us do not want to. A study and more consultant fees are not necessary. We continue to talk about affordability, but for some reason the city increasingly seems to want to make this an unaffordable place to live.

I'm sure city tax revenues are at an all-time high and yet you want more and more from us. Start living within your means. Why did you spend $45 million on a new park where nobody lives if now you are concerned about housing? There seems to be no prioritization in City Hall or the concept of saving for something. Do you want a park, fire station or housing? You picked park. Do not pick my pocket now as a result of your remorse for your decision.

Personally, I also do not want any more affordable housing. We have enough housing of any kind. This housing does not even go to people from Santa Monica but from out of the area. Why do we want to grow our population base? I assume the unions want to so the city can justify hiring more employees. We have a water crisis, a city of people who don't want our city to grow and realistically no land to build affordable housing. I can only imagine that at some point any money raised would just go for pensions. How about police and fire staff taking at 10 percent pay cut and contributing 100 percent to their pensions.

Also if we truly care about providing affordable housing, Santa Monica is an inappropriate place to do so. We have some of the highest land values in the U.S. (partially as a result of city policy on development and rent control which reduce market rate housing). So for the cost of housing 100 people in Santa Monica, housing could be built somewhere else in the region where land is a fraction of the cost and you could provide housing for say 200 people. We are a small city and have already done way more than our fair share on affordable housing.

Please work to make this an affordable city for people who have invested their life savings to buy a home. We are some of the largest contributors already. For many of us, our homes are our retirements so I am against you taking more of my assets when I choose to sell. The city refuses to use eminent domain. I see this as a form of eminent domain, but you aren't even paying me for it – you are just taking part of home value and my home value will decline as a result of increased transfer or property taxes.

Have you also even considered the impact on the housing market? You might actually earn less revenue (just look at our brilliant school board's latest fiasco) as I would imagine housing sales would decline. More people would choose to rent their homes which have several negative impacts; (i) less homes would be valued upwards due to Prop. 13 and the city would collect less property tax revenue, (ii) you would have a more transient population of 6-18 month renters who are not tied to our community, and (iii) you would harm the overall real estate market and make this even a less business and resident friendly city.

I thought Santa Monica was a creative place. However the city manager's only ideas seem to be based on raising taxes. This is not creative or sustainable. We've got a city which is a world class destination. Can't we find a way to harness our resources and make a profit on them and perhaps make it affordable for us who live here and maybe even lowering the cost of living?

Referendum goes beyond Bergamot Transit Village

A NUMBER OF RESIDENTS ARE CIRCU-lating a referendum petition to recall City Council's approval of a development agreement for the Bergamot Transit Village. Opposition to the massive 766,000-square-foot project proposed for 26th Street and Olympic Boulevard is being led by grassroots organization Residocracy.org.

Literally hours after council gave its final approval of the development agreement in February, between 200-300 Santa Monicans took Residocracy's referendum petitions and hit the streets.

6,500 valid signatures are needed to force a public vote on the development agreement. Gatherers have only 30 days (March 14) to collect signatures. When the Residocracy folks and their supporters get the necessary signatures, City Council will be required by law to reconsider and repeal the Bergamot project or to place it on the ballot for the November election thus letting Santa Monica voters decide the fate of the development.

Everyone needs to sign the petition to take City Hall back from special interests and send a message to the politicians and staff who continually ignore us.

The much-hated Bergamot project and development in general will be the big issue in the upcoming election. Aside from stopping a very unpopular project, voters will be able to change the balance between slow-growth and pro-development members on council.

Two pro-development councilpersons are on the hot seat. If they fail to be re-elected and two slow-growth candidates replace them, the council balance shifts to five to two who favor slow growth. Then, the 2016 election should usher in two more anti-development council persons for a "full house."

Overly large and unpopular development proposals traditionally pushed by city planning staff will no longer fly. The way that development and traffic issues are handled will change, big time, after the power balance flips. The new order of doing business will apply to City Hall managers and department heads, too.

The last time that Santa Monicans got this fired up about a development was in February of 1973 when an out-of-touch City Council voted to demolish the Santa Monica Pier and adjacent Newcomb Pier to build a causeway and a 50-acre, man-made island offshore (where the breakwater is now) that would feature a luxury, high rise hotel and convention center.

Within days, thousands of enraged Santa Monicans formed a number of citizen groups to kill the island proposal and "Save the Piers." Under pressure, council then voted to forgo the island but held fast on tearing down the so-called "crime-ridden" piers by refusing to rescind its demolition order.

In those times, municipal elections were held in May and as fate would have it, the three councilmen who voted multiple times to tear down the piers were up for re-election that spring.

I was one of many Santa Monicans who fought to save the piers and I — along with others — worked like a banshee to retire the three anti-piers councilpersons.

Election day came. Rumor is that Bob Gabriel, Arthur Rinck and James Reidy were sitting around their headquarters election night, watching their dismal returns and ruminating about how they didn't realize how much the public loved the piers.

They were replaced by three new persons who immediately rescinded the demolition order and pledged to save and preserve what has become the city's most beloved landmark.

History does repeat itself. Today, four members of the current council are as out of out of touch with public opinion as the council of 1973 was. Some members are in denial. Despite what one member of the dais told her colleagues during a recent council meeting recess, we will remember.

If you want to circulate or sign a petition, go online at Residocracy.org. You'll be joining with all seven of the neighborhood associations, Santa Monica Coalition for a Livable City (SMCLC), Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights (SMRR), UNITE HERE, Local 11 and other groups and community leaders who support this effort.

Thanks and many props for those who got this going and who are responsible for the referendum: Armen Melkonians who created Residocracy, Diana Gordon (SMCLC), realtor Kate Bransfield and board members of the seven neighborhood groups.

MAIL IN MY BOX

I received loads of e-mails in my Gmail box about last week's column on traffic and City Hall's transportation (mis)management's determination to jam things up instead of getting things moving.

Phil Brock who is chair of the Recreation and Parks Commission and an announced City Council candidate told me that bicyclists have complained about getting squeezed at intersections where sidewalk curb extensions extend into intersections and force vehicles against them in the narrow traffic lanes. He adds that planning and traffic engineering staff are aware of the condition but are doing nothing about it. Except maybe putting in more curb extensions?

Another reader e-mailed: "Santa Monica residents are becoming increasingly road-raged and we are rejecting our former polite behavior. If we could only elect new council members who would intelligently address our current massive traffic jams, poor signal-timing, construction, etc., things would be pretty nice. But I think that's called 'when we get pie in the sky, in the great bye-and-bye!'"

And, another e-mail: "Don't get me started on the cock-a-mamie plans to 'mediate' traffic problems on Michigan and Pico to help poor confused Santa Monica High School students. Surely they are old enough to learn how and where to cross streets."

Another reader writes: "Your columns give me hope that it might still be possible to save SM from the crazies."

Amen.

Federal wood burning rule prompts rural backlash

DAVID A. LIEB
Associated Press

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. A federal proposal to clean up the smoke wafting from wood-burning stoves has sparked a backlash from some rural residents, lawmakers and manufacturers who fear it could close the damper on one of the oldest ways of warming homes on cold winter days.

Proposed regulations from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency would significantly reduce the amount of particle pollution allowed from the smokestacks of new residential wood-powered heaters.

Wood-burning stoves are a staple in rural homes in many states, a cheap heating source for low-income residents and others wanting to lessen their reliance on gas or electric furnaces. Outdoor models often cost several thousand dollars, but indoor stoves can cost as little as a few hundred dollars and sometimes double as fashionable centerpieces in homes.

Some manufacturers contend the EPA's proposed standards are so stringent that the higher production costs would either force them out of business or raise prices so high that many consumers could no longer afford their products.

"There's not a stove in the United States that can pass the test right now — this is the death knoll of any wood burning," Reg Kelly, the founder of Earth Outdoor Furnaces in Mountain Grove, told Missouri lawmakers during a recent hearing.

More than three dozen Missouri lawmakers have co-sponsored a bill that would symbolically fight back against the EPA by declaring that "All Missourians have a right to heat their homes and businesses using wood-burning furnaces, stoves, fireplaces and heaters."

This past week, a Missouri House committee endorsed a revised measure that proposes to ban state environmental officials from regulating residential wood heaters unless authorized by the Legislature.

Missouri appears to be one the first states to introduce legislation in response to the proposed EPA regulations. But concerns over wood-stove pollution and regulations also have been simmering in other states, including Utah and Alaska.

States such as Washington and New York already have adopted stricter emission rules. And last fall, New York's attorney general led a coalition of seven states in a federal lawsuit seeking to compel to the EPA to adopt new emission limits on wood-fired boilers, which heat water that is piped into a home's radiator system.

The EPA's existing regulations date to 1988 and don't apply to all of the different kinds of wood-burning devices now in use. Under a proposed rule change released last month, the EPA would give manufacturers five years to meet standards that would reduce emissions by an estimated 80 percent.

The EPA has scheduled a public hearing next Wednesday in Boston, and the sponsor of the Missouri legislation plans to travel there to make his case.

"What they're doing is unnecessary, and it comes against our American values and our traditions," said Rep. Tim Remole, a Republican who has a wood stove at his rural Missouri home.

There are about 12 million wood stoves in U.S. homes, including about 9 million that are less than half as efficient as the newer stoves, according to the EPA. The agency's proposed rules would not affect stoves already in homes.

Most people who own wood stoves have other means of heat, such as electric or gas furnaces. But about 2 percent U.S. homes rely on wood as their primary heating source — a figure that has been rising over the past decade.

Darwin Woods, who owns a farm near the small central Missouri town of Clark, said his 12-year-old outdoor wood stove heats both his home and water. Though he wouldn't be forced to upgrade the stove, Woods views the proposed EPA rule as an intrusion.

"It's just another way for them to control my life and lifestyle and basically force me to pay more for just survival," Woods said.

Others point to the negative health effects from burning wood. The fine particles can worsen asthma and cardiovascular problems, ultimately leading to earlier deaths, according to the American Lung Association.

In Utah, Republican Gov. Gary Herbert has called for a winter ban on wood-burning in an attempt to improve air quality. The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation has also proposed its own emission requirements.

But some homeowners "want to keep their fireplaces to have a way to heat homes and cook food in the event an earthquake cuts gas lines and power," said Erin Mendenhall, a Salt Lake City council member and executive director of Breathe Utah, which is offering to replace wood stoves with gas units.

The National Firewood Association, based in Duluth, Minn., says some of the pollution from wood-burning stoves could be reduced if people would burn only aged wood rather than wood with too much wet sap.

"A properly burning wood fire — there's virtually no smoke or smell," said Executive Director Scott Salveson.

NO WAY! Environmentalists gathered in Palisades Park recently to protest the Keystone XL Pipeline, which would deliver oil from Canada to the United States. The Natural Resources Defense Council and the Sierra Club were just two of the groups organizing the protest.

Dirty truth behind fuels

Dear EarthTalk:

What are "dirty fuels" and why are they so called?

Bill Green
Seattle, Wash

THE TERM "DIRTY FUELS" REFERS TO fuels derived from tar sands, oil shale or liquid coal. Just like their more conventional fossil fuel counterparts such as petroleum and coal, they can be turned into gasoline, diesel and other energy sources that can generate extreme amounts of particulate pollution, carbon emissions and ecosystem destruction during their lifecycles from production to consumption.

"Because tar sands [have] more sulfur, nitrogen, and metals in [them] than conventional oil, upgrading and refining [them] causes a lot more air and water pollution and greenhouse gas emissions," reports the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC), a leading environmental nonprofit. "On a lifecycle basis-that is, extraction all the way through combustion-tar sands cause about 20 percent more global warming pollution than conventional oil," adds NRDC. "Oil shale and liquid coal are even worse, causing nearly 50 percent more global warming pollution and over double the lifecycle emissions of conventional oil …"

In North America, the majority of such fuels come from Canada's vast boreal forest, to where tens of millions of birds flock each spring to nest. "Tar sands oil development creates open pit mines, habitat fragmentation, toxic waste holding ponds, air and water pollution, upgraders and refineries, and pipelines spreading far beyond the Boreal forest," reports NRDC. "This development is destroying habitat for waterfowl and songbirds that come from all over the Americas to nest in the Boreal."

Beyond impacts at the extraction sites, dirty fuels cause pollution problems all down the line. For this reason, environmental leaders are opposed to the proposed Keystone XL pipeline which, if approved and built, would transport tar sands fuels through the Midwestern U.S. to refineries in the Gulf of Mexico.

"Refinery communities like Port Arthur, Texas...are already unable to comply with their air pollution regulations, so dirtier fuel is the last thing they need in their refineries," adds NRDC.

And while dirty fuels may reduce our reliance on foreign oil, they won't help reduce gas prices as they are so expensive to produce that gas prices would have to be higher than they already are in order for them to be profitable. "They also can't help with stabilizing gas prices in the case of a disruption to oil shipments because each new tar sands project requires huge infrastructure and capital investments, so it takes years for new tar sands projects to come online-it's not as though there is loads of spare tar sands oil just waiting to be put through the pipelines," says NRDC's Elizabeth Shope.

"The fact is, we don't need these fuels," she adds. "We can reduce oil consumption by increasing fuel efficiency standards, and greater use of hybrid cars, renewable energy and environmentally sustainable biofuels. What's called 'smart growth'-how we design our communities-is also a very important element in meeting our transportation needs.

"North America stands at an energy crossroads [and] we now face a choice: to set a course for a more sustainable energy future of clean, renewable fuels, or to develop ever-dirtier sources of transportation fuel derived from fossil fuels-at an even greater cost to our health and environment."

High court climate case takes look at EPA's power

MARK SHERMAN
Associated Press

WASHINGTON Industry groups and Republican-led states are heading an attack at the Supreme Court against the Obama administration's sole means of trying to limit power-plant and factory emissions of gases blamed for global warming.

As President Barack Obama pledges to act on environmental and other matters when Congress doesn't, or won't, opponents of regulating carbon dioxide and other heat-trapping gases cast the rule as a power grab of historic proportions.

The court is hearing arguments Monday about a small but important piece of the Environmental Protection Agency's plans to cut the emissions — a requirement that companies expanding industrial facilities or building new ones that would increase overall pollution must also evaluate ways to reduce the carbon they release.

Environmental groups and even some of their opponents say that whatever the court decides, EPA still will be able to move forward with broader plans to set emission standards for greenhouse gases for new and existing power plants.

But a court ruling against EPA almost undoubtedly would be used to challenge every step of the agency's effort to deal with climate change, said Jacob Hollinger, a partner with the McDermott Will and Emery law firm in New York and a former EPA lawyer.

"Will they be successful? We don't know yet," Hollinger said. "But it would be an important victory in a political sense and, potentially, a practical sense."

Republicans have objected strenuously to the administration's decision to push ahead with the regulations after Congress failed to pass climate legislation, and after the administration of President George W. Bush resisted such steps. Both sides agree that it would have been better to deal with climate change through legislation than regulation.

In 2012, a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit concluded that the EPA was "unambiguously correct" in using existing federal law to address global warming.

Monday's case, for which the court has expanded argument time to 90 minutes from the usual 60, stems from the high court's 2007 ruling in Massachusetts v. EPA, which said the agency has the authority under the Clean Air Act to limit emissions of greenhouse gases from vehicles.

Two years later, with Obama in office, the EPA concluded that the release of carbon dioxide and other heat-trapping gases endangered human health and welfare. The administration used that finding to extend its regulatory reach beyond automobiles and develop national standards for large stationary sources. Of those, electric plants are the largest source of emissions.

The administration has proposed first-time national standards for new power plants and expects to propose regulations for existing plants this summer. It will then move on to other large stationary sources such as factories.

In the meantime, the only way EPA can compel companies to address global warming pollution is through a permitting program that requires them to analyze the best available technologies to reduce carbon dioxide, the chief greenhouse gas.

The utility industry, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce and 13 states led by Texas are asking the court to rule that the EPA overstepped its authority by trying to regulate greenhouse gas emissions through the permitting program.

The EPA's actions "represent one of the boldest seizures of legislative authority by an executive agency in history," Peter Keisler, representing the American Chemistry Council among two dozen manufacturing and industry groups that want the court to throw out the rule, said in court papers.

When the Supreme Court considered the appeals in October, the justices declined requests to consider overruling the court's 2007 decision, review the EPA's conclusion about the health effects of greenhouse gas emissions or question limits on vehicle emissions.

Instead, the court focused on the permitting program, which EPA has said it would apply for the time being only to the largest emitters of greenhouse gases.

The relatively narrow question framed by the court has led environmental advocates to minimize the case's significance.

"Twice, the Supreme Court has affirmed the EPA's authority to regulate climate pollution," said Vickie Patton, general counsel for the Environmental Defense Fund. Patton was referring to the 2007 decision and the court's 2011 decision that said only EPA, not states and conservation groups, could seek cuts in power plant emissions.

In addition to environmental groups, New York, California, Illinois and a dozen other states are supporting the administration, along with the American Thoracic Society, which filed a brief detailing the health costs of climate change.

Also in support of the regulation is Calpine Corp., which operates natural gas and geothermal power plants around the nation. Calpine said it has gone through the permitting program six times and found it "neither overly burdensome nor unworkable."

Looking at the same program, the Chamber of Commerce said it "may be the costliest, most intrusive regulatory program the nation has yet seen."

Like most environmental disputes, the current case is certainly complicated, if not bewildering.

Confusion figured in one of the court's most significant decisions, written by Justice John Paul Stevens in 1984, giving EPA and other federal agencies wide latitude to come up with rules that put meat on the bones of congressional enactments.

"When I am so confused, I go with the agency," Stevens told his colleagues, according to notes taken by Justice Harry Blackmun and contained in the papers that were made public a few years after Blackmun's death.

advance of Friday's deadline.

The legislation reflects a sense of urgency among lawmakers after three dry winters have forced farmers to fallow fields and some communities to declare mandatory water reductions. At least 17 communities have dangerously low drinking water supplies.

The most ambitious drought bill is being pushed by Gov. Jerry Brown and the Democratic leaders of the Assembly and Senate. It proposes $687 million to provide immediate help to launch local water recycling and conservation projects while providing housing and food assistance for the driest communities.

Other bills are more narrowly focused, with some trying to spare homeowners from fees or punishment for unwatered lawns.

AB2104 by Lorena Gonzalez, D-San Diego, and SB992 by Jim Nielsen, R-Gerber, prevent homeowner associations from penalizing homeowners for having brown lawns. AB1636 by Cheryl Brown, D-San Bernardino, prevents cities and counties from doing the same.

To address California's long-term water needs with major infrastructure projects, lawmakers from both parties also agree they need to revamp an $11.1 billion water bond measure that already is on the November ballot.

That is likely to be the water-related issue that generates the most debate this year in the Legislature, given the amount of money at stake.

There appears to be general agreement among lawmakers of both parties that the size of the bond needs to be reduced and the special interest projects it included so it would win passage in the Legislature in 2009 should be stripped. Republicans and Democrats in both houses have proposed five different options, ranging from $5.8 billion to $9.2 billion.

Republicans emphasize eliminating the earmarks and prioritizing money for reservoirs and dams.

"If we don't store it, we don't have any," said Assembly Minority Leader Connie Conway, R-Tulare, after a news conference announcing a bill that would authorize the sale of nearly $8 billion in bonds. "I don't fear the competition from other water bonds as long as eventually we focus on one, the one that makes the most sense, the one that has language that everyone can live with."

Democrats focus on partnering with outside groups to restore watersheds and ecosystems, as well as making more use of the water already available.

"The era of the very, very large dams is fading quickly," said Sen. Lois Wolk, D-Davis, architect of a $6.9 billion bond proposal.

She says her focus is on a more realistic proposal that is "effective and affordable, that people are willing to pay for because ultimately these bonds are not free." Legislative leaders expect a negotiated bill to come together by early summer.

In addition to water issues, the Capitol has been awash in political controversies in recent months that have prompted several reform bills.

Record-setting fines for violations of lobbying and campaign finance rules have led to calls for updating California's 40-year-old Political Reform Act.

Bills strengthening the state's campaign watchdog agency and requiring political nonprofits to reveal their donors are expected to sail through the Legislature and be signed by the governor in time for the November election cycle.

Both bills respond to $15 million in anonymous donations funneled through conservative groups into two 2012 initiative campaigns. That prompted a $1 million campaign reporting fine, the largest in state history.

Lobbyist Kevin Sloat, meanwhile, was slapped with a $133,000 fine in part because he threw expensive fundraising parties for the state's top elected officials at his home. As part of a package of ethics bills, AB1673 by Assemblywoman Cristina Garcia, D-Bell Gardens, would not allow lobbyists to host such parties, even under the current $500 limit.

This legislation plays into the backdrop of the 2014 race to succeed Debra Bowen as California's secretary of state, the state elections chief.

Candidate Sen. Alex Padilla, D-Los Angeles, proposed bills prohibiting campaign contributions during key periods of the legislative session, requiring immediate disclosure of contributions in election season and limiting candidates to seeking one office at a time. The bills are SB1101 through SB1104.

Among the other bills introduced by Friday's deadline:

— SB1005 by Sen. Ricardo Lara, D-Long Beach, would extend health care coverage to immigrants in the country illegally. Federal health care reforms prohibit them from receiving subsidies for health insurance or qualifying for expanded Medicaid coverage, but California would provide those benefits under Lara's bill.

— California lawmakers proposed a package of bills overhauling regulations of residential care facilities for the elderly in the wake of investigative reports highlighting neglect and abuse. Among them are SB895, which would require annual inspections instead of inspections once every five years, AB1571, which makes complaints and other license information available online, and SB894, which would expedite closing poor facilities.

— AB1456 by Assemblyman Reggie Jones-Sawyer, D-Los Angeles, would require the state's higher education authorities to study making colleges tuition free and instead have students pay a fixed percentage of their income after they graduate. Other states have authorized similar studies, and Washington state lawmakers are expected to vote this year about whether to start such a program.

— SB1177 by Sen. Darrell Steinberg, D-Sacramento, would say that private companies doing business with California public schools would not be allowed to use student data and information for marketing or non-educational purposes. It also would require companies to protect student data and delete records when they are no longer needed.

— SB1135 by Sen. Hannah-Beth Jackson, D-Santa Barbara, would prohibit forced or coerced sterilizations of prison inmates for the purpose of birth control. The bill comes after media reports of sterilizations at the Central California Women's Facility and Valley State Prison for Women as late as 2010.

— AB1577 by Assemblywoman Toni Akins D- San Diego, would ensure transgender Californians have the gender they lived as reflected on their death certificates. This follows a similar bill signed into law in 2013 to make it easier for transgender people to update their names and legal documents to reflect their gender identities.

— AB1951 by Jimmy Gomez, D-Los Angeles, would update birth certificates to recognize same-sex couples. The proposal would allow birth certificates to reflect two mothers and two fathers, as well as a gender-neutral "parent" option.

Heal the Bay is a nonprofit environmental organization making Southern California coastal waters and watersheds, including Santa Monica Bay, safe, healthy and clean. We use science, education, community action and advocacy to pursue our mission.

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card™ is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A-F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

The Beach Report Card is an indication of past water quality and is not a warranty of the current safety of those areas surveyed. Our lawyers are happy.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Beijing Genomics Institute scientists are closing in on a technology to allow parents to choose, from several embryos, the one most likely to yield the smartest offspring. London's Daily Mail (in January, referencing recent work in Wired, The Wall Street Journal and The New Yorker) explained that BGI will have identified high-potential mathematics genes (by mapping the cells of geniuses) so that researchers can search for those among a couple's array of embryos. (Most embryos will yield gene arrays resembling their parents', but one embryo is likely "better" -- and maybe much better.) One Chinese researcher acknowledged the "controversial" nature of the work, "especially in the West," but added, "That's not the case in China." The parental price tag on finding the smartest kid? Expensive, said a supporter, but less than upgrading an average kid via Harvard, or even a private prep school.

■ "This (was) my life," said musician Boujemaa Razgui in December, referring to the 13 handmade flutes that he played professionally, "and now they're gone." Arriving in New York City from Madrid with the 13 woodwinds in his checked luggage, he was shocked to discover that U.S. Customs had destroyed them without notice because "wood" is a restricted "agricultural" import. (Unsophisticated agents had apparently regarded them as mere bamboo.) Razgui plays all over the world including, since 2002, with the Boston Camerata ensemble staged by the city's Museum of Fine Arts.

voters. About a third of Santa Monica's residents are not registered voters.

"We would check to make sure the voters are registered and if the addresses and signatures are correct," said Regina Ip, a spokesperson for the county.

In the city by the sea, where seven out of 10 people rent according to a report from the Los Angeles Times, people move around. If you registered to vote when you were living Downtown but signed a petition with your current address in the Pico Neighborhood, your signature is going to get tossed.

And then there's the sheer weight of the document. The signature pages must be attached to the agreement itself in order to give voters who want to sign an opportunity to read the specifics, said former Santa Monica Mayor Denny Zane.

"The packet is an inch thick," he said.

Zane is representing Santa Monicans for Renters' Rights (SMRR), the city's largest political party, in the push to bring the development to a vote. SMRR was an early opponent of the project and voted to back the referendum effort.

Zane has worked on initiatives before, he said, but this is his first referendum, which has its own "peculiar legal challenges."

"There's a whole lot of time spent in the beginning to make sure that it's properly formatted," he said.

They also have to be sure that volunteers don't violate rules when soliciting signatures, he said. Zane scored about 25 signatures in an hour and a half last week.

As for the total number gathered: "I have no idea," Zane said.

We may have to wait until the count is tallied in mid-March.

Anti-Hines groups threw a bunch of referendum signing parties this past weekend.

the CIF-Southern Section Division IAA boys' basketball playoffs on Friday at home.

After he made the shot, teammates and the student section rushed the court. It was his first points of his career and nobody was more excited than the exuberant Tapia, who has special needs.

"It was good, I made a good shot for my team and I wanted to win and go to the championship and state game and be league champs for my team. I made everyone share hugs," he said. "I loved it."

Tapia was born prematurely and suffers from a class 1 hemorrhage.

The fairy-tale story began when Vikings' football players started chanting: "We want Matthew."

So Hecht gave them what they wanted and put him in, and the spirited kid did not disappoint. He first hung around the three-point line but missed his first attempt, teammates told him to move in a little closer to the basket and that's when he made the most of his opportunity.

Mancini, who was on the sharing end of the tear-jerking moment said after the game, "It was honestly everything worth this year."

"When he hit that we all celebrated and were speechless. It was like one of those ESPN moments, I loved it."

Mancini finished the game with 9 points and 6 rebounds.

The Vikings got out to a fast start with Jonah Mathews scoring the first nine points of the game and took a 20-5 first quarter lead. They doubled it and led 35-16 at halftime.

Along with Mathews, who finished with 12 points, three other players scored in double figures.

Santa Monica's aggressive play and active hands were enough to rattle the Oilers early and force them into multiple turnovers.

Morgan Genser editor@smdp.com

WE SEE YOU: Samohi's Jonah Mathews goes up for a shot against Montebello on Friday.

Michael Mendoza led Montebello with 17 points and Andy Munoz added 13.

Hecht loved the effort from his team after going through a roller-coaster regular season.

"I really felt we had an outstanding week of preparation leading up to this game, we just had [some] great practices, focused, energized, they paid attention to detail they paid attention to little things and we felt like if we could take that and now the payoff would be tonight's game," he said. "So we're happy for our guys I think they saw the fruits of their hard work on this. So it's good to get a win and it's good to move on to the second round."

Santa Monica will host Rancho Cucamonga in the second round of the playoffs on Tuesday at 7 p.m.

officer, Peter Taylor, told the newspaper he is confident interest rates will increase, reversing the losses. "We have a long-term view," he said.

Taylor was a top banker at Lehman Brothers Holding Inc. when in 2007 the now-defunct bank sold interest-rate swaps to the University of California, Los Angeles. Since the university system hired Taylor in 2009, he has signed other contracts when he judges they will save money over the cost of traditional debt, the newspaper reported. The system has new guidelines that require a cost-risk analysis before the signing of a swap deal.

Schools that want to get out of the deals must pay often-hefty termination fees.

Timothy Schaefer, a municipal-finance adviser in Newport Beach, said he warns clients that the contracts can be too risky. "I don't think they are suitable for most public agencies," Schaefer said.

lion in its third weekend, that would be impressive in its first weekend for any film in the first quarter."

Relativity Media's crime drama "3 Days to Kill," starring Kevin Costner and Amber Heard, came in second with $12.3 million in its first weekend at the multiplex.

"Pompeii," Sony's boiling gladiator drama starring "Game of Thrones" star Kit Harington, took the third-place slot with $10 million. There was a fairly even gender split for the Constantin-financed film, with the audience breaking down as 52 percent male and 48 percent female. The film's slot in the top five was steered mostly by viewers under 30.

"Pompeii got savaged by critics," Dergarabedian said. " '3 Days to Kill' wasn't loved by critics either, so you had two films that didn't have a shot at taking 'Lego' out. But these movies did about what we would expect."

In its second weekend, the Sony and MGM reboot "RoboCop" dropped from third to fourth with $9.4 million. Starring Joel Kinnaman, Gary Oldman and Michael Keaton, the modernized sci-fi film (the 1987 original starred Peter Weller as a cop who gains a new robotic body) is down 57 percent from last weekend's domestic opener.

"The time of year that we're in, the movies just aren't the critics' darlings," Dergarabedian said. "These films give people options. But they won't necessarily set the world on fire at the box office."

Sony's George Clooney-directed "The Monuments Men" was pushed down to fifth place from last week's fourth-place spot with $8.1 million.

Still, Sony dominated the multiplex with four films in the top 10. "About Last Night," starring Kevin Hart, Michael Ealy, Joy Bryant and Regina Hall, gained $7.4 million in its second weekend after a strong Valentine's Day opening. It is down a hefty 71 percent from its opening with a $38.15 million domestic total.

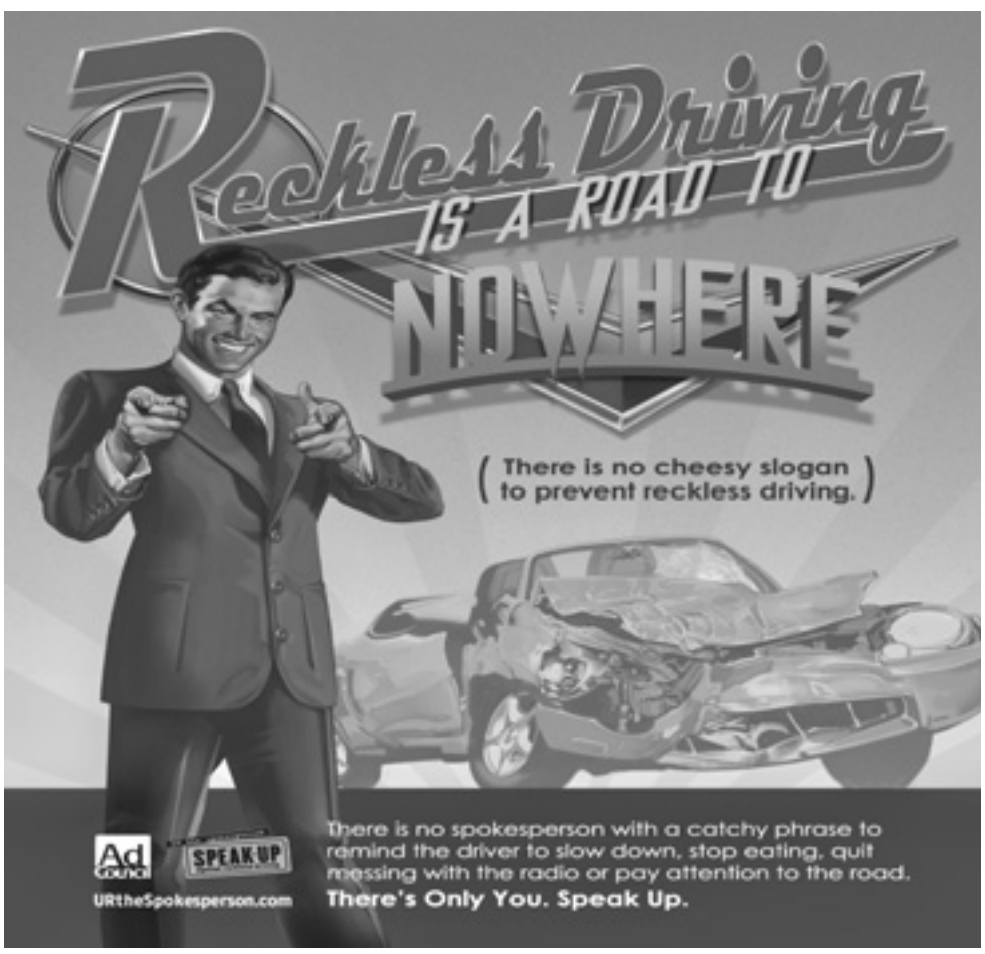

Kevin Hart's "Ride Along," also starring Ice Cube, marks another hit for the comedian as it remains in the top 10 for the sixth weekend in a row. The Universal Pictures buddy comedy earned $4.7 million. It has gained over $123 million domestically since it opened on the Martin Luther King Jr. holiday weekend.

Because of its vast success, the studio has secured "Ride Along 2." Tim Story will be back to direct, while Phil Hay and Matt Manfredi will return to pen the sequel.

Disney's "Frozen," locked in at No. 8, refuses to thaw with $4.4 million over the weekend and $980 million worldwide. The animated musical is the third-highest grossing domestic animated release of all-time. It surpassed "Despicable Me 2," becoming the second-highest grossing animated release ever. It is the highest grossing original animated release of all-time.

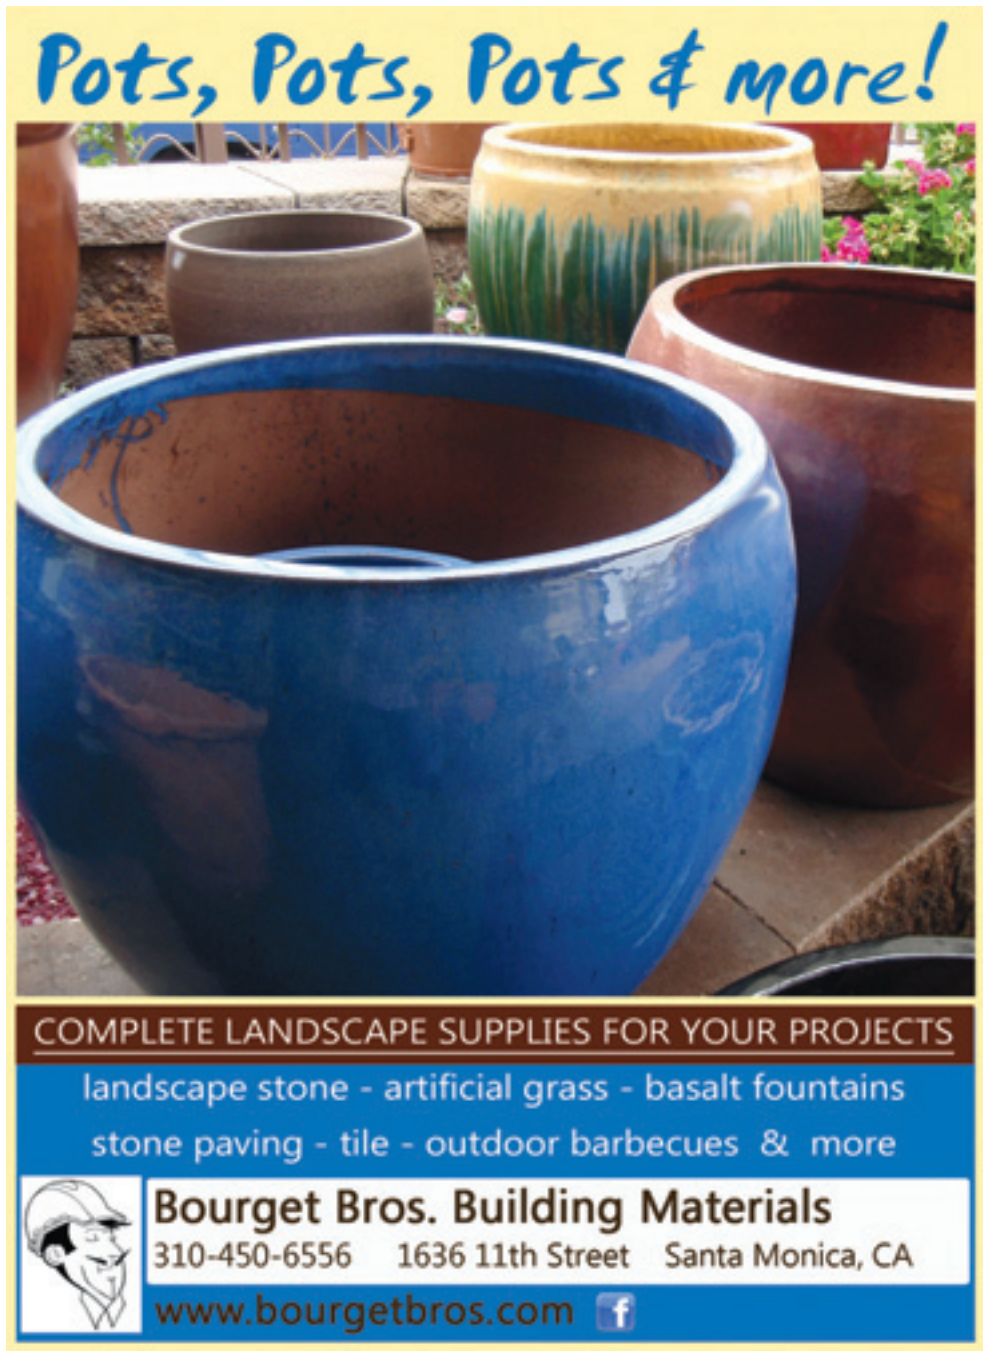

Rounding out the top 10, Universal's "Endless Love," starring Alex Pettyfer as the romantic lead opposite Gabriella Wilde, brought in $4.3 million, while the Colin Farrell-starring drama "Winter's Tale" gained $2.1 million.

Next weekend, the action releases continue as Liam Neeson's "Non-Stop" hits theaters. Lupita Nyong'o, nominated for a best supporting Oscar for her role in "12 Years a Slave," also appears in the film.

WEEKLY JOKE
Late fall, the Indians on a remote reservation in North Dakota asked their new chief if the coming winter was going to be cold or mild.

Since he was a chief in a modern society, he had never been taught the old secrets. When he looked at the sky, he couldn't tell what the winter was going to be like.
Nevertheless, to be on the safe side, he told his tribe that the winter was indeed going to be cold and that the members of the village should collect firewood to be prepared.
But, being a practical leader, after several days, he got an idea. He went to the phone booth, called the Local Weather Service and asked, 'Is the coming winter going to be cold?'
'It looks like this winter is going to be quite cold,' the meteorologist at the weather service responded.
So the chief went back to his people and told them to collect even more firewood in order to be prepared.
A week later, he called the Local Weather Service again. 'Does it still look like it is going to be a very cold winter?'
Yes,' the man at the Weather Service again replied, 'it's going to be a very cold winter.'
The chief again went back to his people and ordered them to collect every scrap of firewood they could find.
Two weeks later, the chief called the Weather Service again. 'Are you absolutely sure that the winter is going to be very cold?'
'Absolutely,' the man replied. 'It's looking more and more like it is going to be one of the coldest winters we've ever seen.'
'How can you be so sure?' the chief asked.
The weatherman replied, 'The Indians are collecting an unbelievable amount of firewood'!!!!

WEEKLY QUOTE
"If you're climbing the ladder of life, you go rung by rung, one step at a time. Don't look too far up, set your goals high but take one step at a time. Sometimes you don't think you're progressing until you step back and see how high you've really gone." ~ Donny Osmond
