Local showrunner takes a bite out of politics in MSNBC series

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

A local filmmaker is tackling the nation's most pressing political issues through the lens of food in a five-part television series.

Brian Falk, a Santa Monica-based producer, writer and director, worked with James Beard Award-winning TV personality and chef Andrew Zimmern on "What's Eating America," a series airing each Sunday at 6 p.m. Pacific time on MSNBC through March 15. Zimmern calls the series a "return to kitchen table civics" at a time when Americans are deeply polarized over how to address the nazztion's problems.

Falk started producing and directing food series for Zimmern three years ago and has worked on feature and documentary films about a range of political issues, including the war in Rwanda, children's health in Nepal and the plight of Sudanese refugees.

For Falk, who calls himself a "storyteller" who "gets bored easily," "What's Eating America" presented an opportunity to dive into new territory by blending food and politics for the first time.

In the series' first two episodes, which aired Feb. 16 and Feb. 23, Zimmern investigates how America's food system depends on the labor of immigrants and how climate

Tyra Banks' ModelLand will open at Santa Monica Place this May

MADELEINE PAUKER
SMDP Staff Writer

Tyra Banks' modeling theme park will open May 1, the supermodel announced Wednesday.

Banks said she aims to "bring modeling to the masses" with ModelLand, a 21,000-square-foot theme park in Santa Monica Place that will offer interactive beauty experiences such as photoshoots and style consultations.

On ModelLand's website, Banks described the theme park as a "first-of-its-kind experiential attraction that will emulate a fantasy version of the modeling world with state-of-the-art interactive entertainment where beauty, fashion, tech, theater, retail and an eating extravaganza collide."

Banks said she wants to "redefine what a model and modeling means" and help visitors feel more confident in their inner and outer beauty.

"At ModelLand, yes, you'll learn how to take amazing photos … but we will go deeper than that," she said on the theme park's website. "It is my hope that ModelLand will elevate your 'selfie-esteem.' Not just how you look in the mirror but how you FEEL about yourself when you look in that mirror."

Fundraiser offers bowling for brain cancer research

TEDDY ROSENBLUTH

A fundraiser, organized by the Uncle Kory foundation, for brain cancer research will be held in a local bowling alley in March.

The money from this event will go towards funding the John Wayne Cancer Institute, an affiliate of Saint John's Health Center based in Santa Monica.

Research on brain cancer is one of the most common cancers among adolescents and children but receives significantly less funding than other common cancers like breast and prostate cancer, according to the American Cancer Society,

Michele Hunter, who began a series of awareness and fundraising

High-stakes Los Angeles DA's race: Status quo vs. reform

BRIAN MELLEY
Associated Press

Jackie Lacey, the first black woman to lead the nation's largest local prosecutor's office, is fighting for a third term as Los Angeles County district attorney against a former police chief who says Lacey is too protective of law enforcement and puts too many people of color behind bars.

Her chief opponent, George Gascon, and a third candidate, former public defender Rachel Rossi, accuse Lacey of having an outdated vision of justice and locking up large numbers of mentally ill people and minorities, often for low-level crimes. They criticized her for continuing to seek the death penalty despite a statewide moratorium, and challenged her record of not prosecuting officers for shootings.

"She's just incapable of holding police accountable when they do something wrong," said Gascon, who led San Francisco's police department before becoming that city's district attorney. "She's so tightly allied with police unions that she's incapable of doing the work."

Lacey claims Gascon coddles criminals and did the very things for which he's criticizing her, such as failing to prosecute police shootings. She said his authoring of California's Proposition 47, which reduced some felonies to misdemeanors, led to the nation's highest property crime rate per capita in San Francisco.

Lacey says she's done more in the name of reform than Gascon.

"He now moves down to LA and says, 'I'm here to fix things, and I'm here to save you, and I'm the true progressive,'" Lacey said. "But a lot of things he's saying he didn't fix in San Francisco."

The district attorney race is nonpartisan and will be decided if one of the candidates receives more than half the primary votes on Tuesday. If no one achieves a majority, the top two will face off in November.

Lacey's challengers are trying to ride a wave of criminal justice reform that has put a new generation of progressive prosecutors in district attorney offices in Philadelphia, Boston, St. Louis County, Missouri, Denver and Houston.

Those district attorneys have won by advocating for racial justice, increasing focus on serious and dangerous crime, challenging the wisdom of cash bail, and ending a lock-em-up mentality by using programs that divert lower-level criminals from jail.

Miriam Krinsky, a former federal prosecutor in Los Angeles and now executive director of Fair and Just Prosecution, a group pushing for criminal justice reforms, sees the race as a test of how far those changes will go.

"I absolutely think that voters in Los Angeles and throughout the country are tired of a starting point that has presumed we can and should incarcerate our way out of poverty, out of substance abuse disorder, out of ... mental illness," said Krinsky, who has worked with Gascon but is not taking sides in the campaign.

The Los Angeles district attorney oversees the largest prosecutor's office in the U.S., with nearly 1,000 lawyers, and a territory that covers the nation's second-largest city and 10 million residents spread over 4,700 square miles (12,150 square kilometers).

The stakes are high. Money is flowing into both campaigns, and some of California's top Democrats find themselves on opposite sides.

Lacey has strong support from law enforcement groups, including $1 million spent by the Los Angeles police union through political action committees. Lacey has the endorsements of California Sen. Dianne Feinstein, LA Mayor Eric Garcetti and, in a snub to Gascon, San Francisco Mayor London Breed, that city's first black female leader.

Gascon is endorsed by California's other senator, Kamala Harris, whom he replaced as San Francisco DA. U.S. Rep. Maxine Waters, whose heavily minority district includes South Los Angeles, and the editorial boards of the Los Angeles Daily News and Los Angeles Times also back Gascon. An independent expenditure committee for Gascon received $1 million from Patty Quillin, the wife of Netflix CEO Reed Hastings, who lives in Northern California.

Lacey, who grew up in a rough Los Angeles neighborhood, has spent her professional career in the office. She was an upset winner in 2012 and ran unopposed four years ago.

Lacey is not a highly visible DA but recently has ramped up public appearances. She held news conferences to announce an $18.8 million settlement with Time Warner for misleading customers over internet speeds, the dismissal of 66,000 old marijuana convictions, and criminal sex abuse charges against film mogul Harvey Weinstein, who was convicted this week in New York on similar charges.

But she's ducked other events after routinely being heckled by members of Black Lives Matter and people who have challenged her record prosecuting cops and the well-connected like Ed Buck, a Democratic operative and donor who gave to her campaign and now faces federal charges for allegedly injecting methamphetamine into two men who fatally overdosed in his apartment.

Gascon spent his adolescence in LA after fleeing Cuba with his family. He became a police officer, got a law degree and rose through the ranks to assistant chief of the Los Angeles Police Department before being appointed top cop in Mesa, Arizona, and then San Francisco.

Then-Mayor and now Gov. Gavin Newsom tapped Gascon to be San Francisco district attorney in 2011, and he then was elected to two terms.

Gascon has touted his work in San Francisco to close juvenile hall and divert cases involving the mentally ill from jails to treatment. During a boisterous debate last month, he criticized Lacey's diversion program, saying it's understaffed and run by someone with no expertise. He also alleged prosecutors are told to not divert defendants from the court system.

Rossi added that about two-thirds of inmates in Los Angeles jails have mental health problems, and public defenders say they are consistently turned away from events after her son, Sean Hunter, died at 20 from an inoperable brain tumor, said she was frustrated when she realized the lack of funding for brain cancer research.

"Why are children not the number one priority?" she asked.

The organization has raised more than $450,000 for brain cancer research and clinical trials since 2017.

Small hospitals like Saint John's often don't receive large grants to fund their research, Hunter said. The money from these fundraising events will help fund Kersari's clinical trials.

While her son was sick, Hunter sent his brain scans to some of the top oncologists in the country who prescribed radiation and chemotherapy treatment, she said. But when those treatments were exhausted, they sent him home with hospice care and a 7 month life expectancy.

Desperate to help her son, who was left with severe headaches, no ability to speak and partial paralyzation, she contacted Santosh Kesari, the chair of the Translational Neuro-oncology and Neurotherapeutics department at the John Wayne Cancer Institute.

She said the 'out of the box' treatments Kesari prescribed allowed her son to live five months longer than expected and with a higher quality of life— he was able to walk, drive his car and even go to the gym.

"I support (Kesari) because he uses everything he can," she said. "He will try anything before he will go down that route of radiation and chemo."

Hunter said she hopes to help some of Kersari's patients pay for treatments, which can cost more than a million dollars.

Although her son's tumor came back eventually, she said she thinks the treatments could be effective in patients who have access to these treatments earlier in their prognosis.

"Even if I can just help one person, I'll be happy," she said.

The fundraisers were initially held in the Pacific Palisades at her son's highschool and parish but she said she moved the event to Santa Monica to reach a broader audience.

Those who attend the event will be able to bowl, play arcade games, take pictures in a photobooth and enter raffles. One of Kersari's current patients will also be speaking at the event.

The event will be held on Sunday, March 1, from 4-7 p.m. at Bowlmor Santa Monica (234 Pico Blvd.)

Tickets to the event start at $50 and can be found online at https://support.unclekory.org/event/sean-hunter-research-in-action-bowl/e260124.

Santa Monica monitoring Coronavirus information

The City of Santa Monica is working closely with the L.A. County Department of Public Health to monitor the novel coronavirus. Novel coronavirus (2019 nCoV) is a new, viral disease that produces symptoms similar to the flu or pneumonia. In the United States, immediate health risk to the general public remains low at this time. There have been no novel coronavirus cases reported in Santa Monica. The lead local agency and our partner in monitoring the coronavirus is the L.A. County Department of Public Health.

"Santa Monica is monitoring the situation very closely, and we're working hand in hand with the L.A. County Department of Public Health to communicate accurate information and be prepared to support community needs," said Mayor Kevin McKeown.

The L.A. County Department of Public Health is encouraging the public to:

- Stay at home when sick
- Wash hands frequently
- Cover sneezes/coughs, appropriately dispose of soiled tissues, and wash hands afterward
- Avoid close contact with those who are ill
- Get a flu shot to prevent influenza if you have not done so this flu season

The City always encourages residents to prepare for any emergency, including a potential coronavirus emergency in the United States, by ensure their families have a disaster kit at home with seven days of household essentials including food, water, sanitation supplies, and basic medications. Visit https://www.smgov.net/Departments/OEM for more information.

If members of the public have inquiries regarding coronavirus, please refer to Los Angeles County Department of Public Health's website below or call 2-1-1 for information and referrals for all health services in L.A. County.

Black History Gets Bonus Day and New Book

During Black History Month twelve days into Donald Trump's presidency, he inexplicably referred to Frederick Douglass as, "Someone who has done an amazing job that is being recognized by more and more people." (Say what?) Obviously Trump thought Douglass was still alive which prompted famed New Yorker satirist Andy Borowitz to write a spoof wherein Trump blamed Betsy Devoss, his controversial Secretary of Treasury. "'She's the one who prepped me,'" he whined.

Joking aside, it's always seemed like adding insult to injury that Black History was given February, the shortest month on the calendar. In reality, February was chosen because it covered the birthdays of Lincoln (12th) and Douglass (14th.) And it didn't start out as a month.

It began as "Negro History Week," founded by historian Carter G. Woodson in 1926. Republican President Gerald Ford, in 1976, expanded the celebration into Black History Month to. "Honor the neglected accomplishments of black Americans in every area of our history."

Because this is a "leap year," Black History gets an extra day. And because of acclaimed historian Alison Rose Jefferson, PhD, this year Black History also benefits from her new book which was a decade-long in the research and writing. Her tome is likely of special interest to our city given a chapter entitled, "Race, Real Estate, and Remembrance in Santa Monica's Ocean Park Neighborhood."

The time period Jefferson focuses on was from 1900-1960, also known as the Jim Crow era. As Southern California was positioning itself at the center of the American Dream, African-Americans worked hard to be a part of that dream and make it an inclusive reality. By occupying recreational sites such as beaches and public parks for example, African-Americans challenged racial hierarchies and marked a space of black identity on the regional landscape and social space.

In "Living the California Dream", Jefferson examines how African- Americans pioneered our "frontier of leisure" by creating communities and business projects in conjunction with their growing population. By presenting stories of African-American oceanfront and inland leisure destinations that flourished from 1910 to the 1960s, Jefferson illustrates how these places helped create leisure production, purposes, and societal encounters. But, contrary to California's advertised reputation of racial harmony, these pursuits by African-Americans were met with considerable conflict.

In the early 1900's, Bruce's Beach in Manhattan Beach was owned by and operated for African-Americans. It gave that community opportunities unavailable at other beach areas because of discrimination. So it was, in 1912, Willa and Charles Bruce bought a property in the strand area for $1,225.

The couple established a resort that included a bathhouse and dining house for blacks and named it for Mrs. Bruce. That a black-only beach resort would open up there was all the more notable because Manhattan Beach was an otherwise "lily-white community."

But in the 1920's the resort was attacked by the KKK. Soon racist white neighbors pressured the city until the property was seized using eminent domain to build a park. African-Americans were run off the property and their presence was virtually wiped clean from history for more than 80 years.

Finally, in 2007, the historical wrong was recognized when Manhattan Beach formally commemorated the property with a park name and plaque as "Bruce's Beach." (And here all along I had thought "Bruce" was a surfer dude.)

Santa Monica had its own share of racial "sins," perhaps the most prominent taking place where Shutters is today. It was called "Ink Well," a pejorative reference to the skin color of the beach goers. From 1905 until 1964, Ink Well was one of the few areas in California where African-Americans were allowed to enjoy beach access in a largely segregated society. In 2008, the city of Santa Monica erected a monument labeling Ink Well "A Place of Celebration and Pain."

Thankfully, Santa Monica also had many who followed their better angels. In 1952, the Boys and Girls Club held their annual dance at Samohi featuring the year's "King and Queen." By tradition the pair were to kick off the festivities with the first dance. But the much-beloved football coach who seemed admirable in many respects, objected because the "King" (football star R.C. Owens, a future All-Pro with the 49ers) was black and the Queen was white.

Sensing this was flat wrong, Nathaniel Trives, a courageous African-American Student Body President, met with Samohi's principal who quickly overruled the coach. Trives' life would be filled with many "firsts including, in 1975, becoming the first African-American Mayor of Santa Monica.

Published by University of Nebraska Press, "Living the California Dream," is available at Amazon and wherever books are sold. To find out more, visit Alison's website at www.alisonrosejefferson.com.

General access tickets, which cost $39 for children and $59 for adults, include a personalized digital lookbook, an immersive theater show, clothes shopping and photography "moments" with custom lighting and posing tips.

For $549, visitors can purchase the "Fantascene Photoshoot," a photoshoot with makeup, hair and wardrobe styling, food and drinks and access to limited edition products.

Visitors can also opt for the $1,495 "Fantascene Dream," which offers an upgraded photoshoot, food and drinks, a consultation with a fashion and beauty expert and luxury swag.

Banks, who previously hosted the reality show America's Next Top Model, said was inspired by Disneyland and has been working on the ModelLand concept for a decade.

"I'm inspired by Walt Disney," she said. "He created a legacy brand and destination that exists beyond his time on earth and continues to delight people of all ages through fantasy and story."

The two-story space at Santa Monica Place that ModelLand will occupy was vacated by pop-up museum Candytopia in early 2018 and has been under construction for the past year. When the theme park was first announced last February, Banks said she intended it to be the first location of a global enterprise.

A sign posted on the building indicates that ModelLand is applying to sell alcoholic drinks.

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (FEBRUARY 28)

The spontaneous good fortune you experience in the next four weeks will let you know that you are on the right path. Stay open to solutions. Preconceived notions will be the enemy through March and April. What ultimately happens will defy expectations and delight you. Libra and Cancer adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 8, 20, 22, 21 and 46.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). No one is better or cooler than anyone else. However, those who have taken more risks in a shorter amount of time will certainly come off as heroes. Worship cautiously.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You'll be like a tree rooted in the earth that is the element of your sign. You'll stay grounded and grow incrementally, defying timelines. And you'll let go of and regrow your "leaf" equivalents in due time.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). To run your whole life on adrenaline is not a sustainable model. It won't work in the long term. Though, certainly, the adrenaline challenges you set up in the short run will be a burst to get you to the goal.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). People do well-intended and super embarrassing things in the name of peer-pressure, connection and fitting in. You'll be an observer in this today, resisting participation, as you should in this case.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). The energy that goes into making an impression will be well spent. It's not because you'll make the intended impression; rather, it's that you'll learn something about yourself, what matters to you and how much.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). Diversity makes groups strong. This is true for your friend group as well. A mix of people with different strengths will add to your life, whereas a group that is too much of one thing won't have the spark.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You're an original. Saying the lines that others have said, sticking to the script, using the cliches, well, that gets old fast. It's invigorating to express your uniqueness.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Your best is good enough. Your pie wins the contest, and your special sauce garners worldwide intrigue. This is the stuff of fantasies and diary entries, so make sure you put the events and potential events of the day into both.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). The sparkling parts of life are the in-between moments when you have nothing to gain, nothing to lose and nothing to tally in general. What's most valuable is unquantifiable.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). The correct next move is often not to the right or left or even straight ahead. The best move might be no move at all. To stand there until the world shifts is a real test of patience that will pay off.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). The self-help gurus insist it: In every moment, we have a choice. But many moments go the way of programming. If there are choices, we are unaware. There's no shame in this; it's human. Waking up is step one.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Arthritis sufferers know that, though it sounds counterintuitive, moving the parts that don't want to move will keep you pain-free. Use this as a metaphor for another part of your life.

alternatives to incarceration.

"I think we need to see more action and not just words," Rossi said. "I think we need to put more resources to actually expanding access to the program."

Lacey has labeled Rossi a lightweight with no prosecutorial experience. And she said Gascon didn't know what he was talking about regarding the diversion program. During a recent interview, Lacey said she would try to push for more treatment facilities for people with mental illness and drug abuse issues.

change is already affecting the country's seafood harvests.

The opening, two-hour episode on immigration, "Who's Feeding America," tracks the supply chain of food served at Trump Grill and on Capitol Hill to juxtapose the reality that the country's food system would collapse without immigrant and migrant workers against the federal government's hostile immigration policy.

A segment on the large population of Marshallese people who work for the Springdale, Arkansas-based poultry processor Tyson Foods underscores that dissonance. After conducting nuclear testing in the Marshall Islands in the late 1940s through the early 1960s, the U.S. government allowed Marshallese people to work in the country without a visa and many settled in Springdale to work for Tyson.

Falk said the episode dispels the fallacy that migrants, whether they're documented or undocumented, are stealing jobs from native-born Americans, who rarely take the type of labor-intensive farming, manufacturing or cooking jobs that keep the food system running.

In fact, he said, the rhetoric and policies coming out of the White House are making it difficult for food producers across the country to find workers.

"To the extent that we demean people and hunt them down with ICE raids, we affect our food system," Falk said. "We are literally making it more difficult for us to eat."

Last week, Zimmern visited communities that have been reliant on populations of fish and shellfish that are now disappearing. Florida's Apalachicola Bay used to produce 10% of the country's oysters, but rising ocean temperatures have decimated the bay's ecosystem.

"We spent five or six hours on the water there and managed to rake up one live oyster," Falk said.

The reason why the oysters vanished wasn't immediately clear to the people of Apalachicola, though.

"They had been told by the previous Florida government that didn't want the use of the term climate change in any of their documents that it was because of other reasons: the BP oil spill, or Atlanta holding back freshwater," Falk said. "It's a narrative created to boost the fossil fuel industry at the expense of the environment."

Over the next three weeks, the show will tackle the growing problem of addiction in the restaurant business, voter suppression and the relationship between processed food and health.

The addiction episode, "A Chef's Story," will air Sunday. The episode reflects Zimmern's personal connection with the topic — at the beginning of his career, he struggled with drug and alcohol addiction and was homeless for one year.

The episode features Ben's Friends, a support group for culinary professionals dealing with addiction, and Zero Proof, which brings together award-winning chefs to create a dinner party with alcohol-free drinks.

"One of the things we made sure we were doing is spending some time being solution-oriented, looking at the fixes that are being made, the attempts being made to right the ship on whatever the issue is," Falk said.
