For some people, age is just a number. For Raquel Paez, it's a pretty big one.

The 16-year resident of Santa Monica turns 100 this month, and remains a marvel of independence despite her advanced years.

Friday, amid well-wishing banners and a large plate of red velvet cake served at the Senior Luncheon at St. Monica's Catholic Church, Raquel sat peacefully, and reflected on her day.

"I'm very happy," she said in thickly-accented English. "I have a long life and good health. God is good to me."

That long life also has great breadth, spanning two continents, two languages and a lot of history.

Raquel Paez was born and raised in Quito, the agrarian capital of Ecuador, in March 1911, where she lived with her husband and six children until 1963.

It was a trying time for the small South American country. A series of military-backed populist leaders came and went, including five-time president Jose Maria Velasco Ibarra, who was eventually ousted from power in a 1961 coup.

Raquel worked in a government office in the capital while her husband, an engineer, completed projects across the country and was often away from home.

The shaky political climate was one of many reasons several of the Paezs made the difficult decision to leave Ecuador, acknowledged her son, Fabian Paez.

"Those times, we had a very unstable government," Fabian said. "Of course, in addition, we'd always heard that the United States is the best country in the world. Life is different, better."

Ximena Paez, one of three girls in the family, was the first of the Paezs' to be

New smoking restrictions going into effect in L.A.

CHRISTINA HOAG
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES Smokers are getting down to their last drags in the nation's second-largest city with a new ban on lighting up in outdoor dining areas.

The ban, which takes effect Tuesday, even includes areas near food trucks.

The prohibition makes Los Angeles the nation's biggest city with a smoke-free outdoor dining policy and is believed to be one of few that includes mobile food vendors.

City officials on Thursday launched a public education campaign about the new law that was adopted in January 2010 with a one-year grace period to give business owners time to prepare.

Food tastes better "with a side of fresh air," proclaim posters and radio announcements to be used in the campaign.

"We will be putting out cigarettes all over Los Angeles, and that's a beautiful thing," said Kathy Magliato, president of the American Heart Association.

Tobacco-toking is already prohibited at city beaches, farmers markets and parks, as well as within 25 feet of playgrounds, bleachers, sports fields and picnic areas.

Now it also will be off-limits within 10 feet of outdoor dining areas or within 40 feet of a food truck. Bars, clubs and private events at restaurants will be exempt.

The ordinance will be largely self-regulatory, said Councilman Tom LaBonge. Businesses will be required to post signs and request that patrons extinguish their cigarettes or face fines of up to $500 for the smoker and the business.

"We can clean up the city, as well," LaBonge said. "How many butts go down the drains and onto our beaches?"

The new restriction has many restaurateurs fuming, particularly those who installed sidewalk tables and patios to

‘Rango’ corrals $38M opening at box office

DERRIK J. LANG
AP Entertainment Writer

LOS ANGELES “Rango” has lassoed the top spot at the box office.

The animated Paramount film featuring Johnny Depp as the voice of a Wild West chameleon sheriff rode into town with a $38 million debut, according to studio estimates released Sunday.

“Rango,” which was directed by “Pirates of the Caribbean” film franchise maestro Gore Verbinski, is the first animated feature from Industrial Light and Magic, the special effects studio founded by George Lucas in 1975.

“The draw for audiences was certainly Johnny Depp and Gore Verbinski, but when you look at the reviews, it was 88 percent positive on Rotten Tomatoes, which is a level that Pixar operates at,” said Don Harris, Paramount’s executive vice president for distribution. “This is a film that has a shot at being nominated for Academy Awards this time next year.”

Universal’s mind-bending thriller “The Adjustment Bureau,” starring Matt Damon and Emily Blunt, debuted in the No. 2 spot with $20.9 million. CBS Films’ fantasy tale “Beastly” with Alex Pettyfer and Vanessa Hudgens opened at No. 3 with $10.1 million, rounding out the weekend’s top three films. It was another down weekend for Hollywood, with grosses coming in less than the corresponding weekend last year.

"Comparisons to a year ago are tough considering that’s when ‘Alice in Wonderland’ opened with $116.1 million,” said Hollywood.com analyst Paul Dergarabedian, referring to the Tim Burton film. “We’re not even in that realm this year, so this is our second down weekend in a row. We’ve only had one up weekend at the box office versus a year ago. There’s this malaise overtaking the marketplace.”

The raunchy Warner Bros. comedy “Hall Pass” stayed committed in its second weekend in the No. 4 position with $9 million. The 3-D animated Walt Disney romance “Gnomeo and Juliet” also kept that loving feeling going in its fourth weekend with $6.9 million in the No. 5 spot, despite an animated showdown against “Rango,” which was not released in 3-D.

“The King’s Speech,” the royal chronicle from the Weinstein Co. that ruled last week’s Academy Awards with 12 wins, maintained the No. 7 place this weekend with $6.5 million.

Pensions emerge as key issue in budget talks

DON THOMPSON
Associated Press

SACRAMENTO A partisan split over how to change California’s massively underfunded pension systems is playing an increasingly prominent role in the debate over Gov. Jerry Brown’s plan to fix the state’s woeful budget.

Democrats, who control both houses of the Legislature, have scheduled votes this week on the governor’s plan, which balances deep spending cuts with an extension of tax hikes enacted two years ago.

Brown wants lawmakers to call a special election in June to ask voters for a five-year extension of the higher personal income, sales and vehicle taxes passed in 2009, raising about $9.2 billion a year. Lawmakers also will vote on $12.5 billion in spending cuts, including reductions in welfare, social services and higher education, as the second leg of the Democratic governor’s plan to bridge the state’s nearly $27 billion budget deficit.

The governor also has proposed about $3 billion in other solutions, including changing part of the tax structure for businesses, repealing the tax benefits associated with local enterprise zones and shifting money between various state accounts.

Brown and Democratic leaders said they are willing to bargain on pension reforms to get the four Republican votes they need — two each in the Assembly and Senate — to reach the two-thirds vote threshold for placing a measure on the ballot.

Republicans so far have refused to support the tax extensions. They say the state must first make fundamental government reforms, led by restructuring a pension system filled with benefits that disappeared long ago for most the private sector.

“We have an unfunded pension liability of massive proportions, and we have got to get a handle on this pension crisis,” Sen. Mimi Walters, R-Lake Forest, said after a committee hearing on the state’s pension system last week. “We’re going to have to have major reforms. We have to look at the whole, entire pension system.”

Walters has introduced a series of bills seeking various changes.

The California Public Employees Retirement System has at least $75 billion in unfunded pension liabilities. The state also faces nearly $52 billion in unfunded retiree health care benefits.

Costs to the state general fund also are projected to rise, especially with the expected wave of baby boomer retirements. Neither the state Department of Finance nor the Legislative Analyst’s Office has projected how much of the state’s general fund might be consumed by pension payments in the years ahead if no changes are enacted.

Editor:

The California Public Records Act governs the documents produced by our public agencies. Generally, writings produced in the course of agency business are considered public records; exceptions are defined in California Government Code § 6254. Exceptions, such as personnel records and attorney-client communications, are construed narrowly by the courts. I would be interested in knowing under what exception the memo generated by Superintendent Tim Cuneo, which speculates on the personal and political motives of three members of a school district committee, qualifies as a confidential communication which may be withheld from public scrutiny. ("SMMUSD supe warns against 'sabotage,'" page 1, Feb. 23, 2011.)

Elected board members are among a small group likely to see writings which may be improperly classified as confidential. As our public watchdogs, they are our first line of defense in ensuring that public agency business is conducted in compliance with the intent of our freedom of information and open meeting laws: that government business be done openly.

Cuneo's paranoid rant

FOR AN ENTITY THAT MUST RELY ON the good will of the public, parents and students, it seems that the Santa Monica-Malibu Unified School District is always shooting itself in the foot.

The latest flap concerns a leaked, confidential memo to the school board from outgoing superintendent Tim Cuneo about three former members of the district's Special Education Program Task Force (SEPTF). Cuneo claimed the three were likely to cause trouble when the district negotiates with City Hall on divvying up Measure Y (sales tax increase) funds.

Cuneo named Tricia Crane, Claudia Landis and Lee Jones as disgruntled parents who resigned from the SEPTF because they were unhappy that its draft report on special education didn't address their specific concerns. They also felt that the report received no real support from Cuneo or district staff.

In a mean-spirited, verging on paranoid, three-page memo which included resignation e-mails from the three women, Cuneo predicted they would be "very vocal in not supporting the report." He would, based on past experience, "anticipate that at least one of the three may attempt to sabotage the district's efforts (to secure Y funds) if they do not get their way."

Cuneo's memo enumerated complaints about gag orders and unfair treatment Crane and other "special ed" parents took to City Council in May of 2007. City Council froze its annual "shared facilities" funding increase to the district and withheld $530,000 pending the promise of an independent investigation. That investigation, known as the Barber Report, recommended a number of policy changes including the formation of a task force to review and revamp special education policies.

"Parents continue to come to me because they are afraid to speak out on their own," Crane e-mailed "If they could they would tell the community that there is still no district-wide research-based reading program. There is still no special education math program. And there is still no district-wide program for children on the autistic spectrum. Those are the facts."

Crane added, "This memo was leaked to me is because someone inside the district feels that this sort of secret character assassination is wrong… It brings isolation and shame…"

Dr. Landis said that she found the content of the memo "chilling" and inappropriate as it referenced her own child's need of what she felt was a confidential education plan.

"It took me by surprise, I got sick to my stomach," Landis told the Daily Press. "It was the sharing of privileged information and the connection to my child that I found intimidating."

Cuneo also referenced Councilmember Bobby Shriver in his memo.

"In the past, Tricia Crane has gone to Bobby Shriver in an attempt to influence the City Council's relationship with the district."

Shriver took umbrage to Cuneo's comments in his letter to the editor ("Heroes, not saboteurs," March 2, 2011, Page 4.) "He is 100 percent wrong." Shriver penned. "She (Crane) and other parents described a culture of conflict, intimidation, and expensive legal battles between these families and the district. Convinced the district would not change its practices without outside intervention, these parents appealed to the council for help ... It took courage for these parents to speak up against the entrenched education bureaucracy."

Shriver wrote that Crane and her friends were trying to improve the lives of some of our most vulnerable citizens.

"Their motive was not, as the memo says, 'to sabotage the district's efforts' to receive city funding. The parents who came forward are not saboteurs. They are heroes."

In the face of strident criticism, Cuneo apologized for the memo at Thursday's school board meeting. While Cuneo apologized for offending, he still didn't apologize for what he did — a subtle but notable distinction. For Cuneo, the memo was a serious error in judgment and proof that a toxic atmosphere of fear and intimidation still infuses the SMMUSD.

Another question being raised is whether Cuneo broke the law with his memo. It speculates on the personal and political motives of members of a public school district committee, therefore does it qualify as a confidential communication which may be withheld from public scrutiny? Inquiring legal minds are looking into it.

There's more. In defending confidential memos to the board, Ben Allen lamented the leak which he described as "a breach of trust and one of the board's trust." I don't think Allen knows, after three years on the board, who it really serves.

Allen could learn from fellow board member Oscar de la Torre who nailed it when he referred to Cuneo's memo as a "black list."

"This behavior and culture of looking at parents as adversaries is endemic, and must change," he said. Right on, Oscar!

How about the rest of the school board? Or PTA heads? What? You expected leadership?

Who else is on Cuneo's hit list? Is "Bauer" under the Bs? You betcha.

Captive orangutans in Indonesia may be freed

ROBIN MCDOWELL
Associated Press

TANJUNG PUTING NATIONAL PARK, Indonesia — Their black eyes peer from the slats of wooden cages, hundreds of orangutans orphaned after their mothers were shot or hacked to death for straying out of Indonesia's rapidly disappearing forests in search of food.

No one wants to get them back into the wild as much as Birute Mary Galdikas, who has devoted a lifetime to studying the great red apes, now on the verge of extinction. And for the first time in years, there is a glimmer of hope on the horizon, thanks to a Hong Kong-based development company's plans to protect a 91,000-hectare (224,866-acre) peatland forest along Tanjung Puting National Park's eastern edge.

"The problem has been finding a safe place to release them," said the 64-year-old scientist. "Many are ready to go right now."

A half-century ago, more than three-quarters of Indonesia, a sprawling archipelagic nation spanning the width of the United States, was blanketed in plush tropical rainforest. But in the rush to supply the world with pulp, paper and, more recently palm oil — used in everything from lipstick and soap to "clean-burning" fuel — half those trees have been cleared.

It is here, in scattered, largely degraded forests, that almost all the world's 50,000 to 60,000 orangutans can be found. Another 1,500 live in a handful of crowded rehabilitation centers, many of them rescued after their mothers were killed.

Fadhil Hasan, the head of Indonesia's palm oil association, denied plantation workers were intentionally killing orangutans to protect their crops from raids, saying villagers involved in the illegal wildlife trade pose the greatest threat to the apes.

"Sure, maybe it happens occasionally," he said. "But the businessmen who run these plantations, and their workers, understand that these animals are protected."

Young orphaned apes can't be released directly into parks like Tanjung Puting — home to 6,000 orangutans — because of a 1995 decree that prohibits the release of ex-captives into forests with large wild populations, primarily over fears they'll introduce diseases like tuberculosis.

But the small patches of trees that remain are inadequate for their breeding needs and massive appetites. In the wild, the giant apes spend almost all of their day looking for fruit, consuming up to 20 percent of their body mass.

"We manage, just barely, to give them what they need for adequate lives," said Galdikas, as a dozen caretakers lift shaggy, young orangutans from their sleeping cages so they can spend much of the day frolicking in trees and the brush below. "The problem is that it's just barely."

Some come in traumatized. Others require long-term medical attention after themselves being beaten. And all need to be fed and cared for, taught how to forage for fruit and shown how to build treetop nests for sleeping.

That costs hundreds of thousands of dollars a year, money some critics say would better go toward protecting those left in the wild.

"Yes ... but really, what choice do we have?" asks Galdikas, who today spends much of her time, energy and limited funds on the 335 young apes at her own care center. Because of the species' intense maternal-infant bond, they need help until they are about 8. Around 50 of Galdikas' captives were ready to be released years ago, she said, and another 100 could go now.

"They are in this situation because of what we, humans, have done to them," she said, wiping her shoulder-length gray hair off her forehead. "We can't just abandon them ... stand by and watch as they go extinct."

There could be good news ahead for the orangutans, ironically because Indonesia's breakneck pace of deforestation has put it on the front lines of global efforts to fight climate change. Since carbon packed in trees pours into the atmosphere when cut or burned — doing more damage than planes, automobiles and factories combined — the focus has turned to finding ways to pay developing countries to keep trees standing.

It's still not clear who will fund the scheme or what the results will be. But a half-dozen rich countries, including Norway, have pledged $4.5 billion to get things moving. Private investors, too, are trying to convince governments they'd make much more from "carbon trading" than land conversion.

The goal is to limit pollution spit out by power plants and big factories by issuing "credits" for each ton of carbon they emit, which can then be bought or swapped to offset emissions.

One of the first testing grounds is the island of Borneo — shared between Indonesia, Malaysia and Brunei — one of the most biologically diverse places on earth. It is the main supplier worldwide of palm oil and home to 90 percent of the orangutans left on this planet.

Forestry Minister Zulkifli Hasan says he's ready to give the green light to PT Rimba Raya Conservation for what would be the first forestry project in his country to meet all requirements for international accreditation.

The Q Line

An early night

Downtown residents last week succeeded, at least temporarily, to block Santa Monica Place from extending the hours people could purchase alcohol on the mall's dining deck.

So, this week's Q-Line question asks:
Do you think it was a wise choice to deny the extra hours, or do you think the mall should be allowed to serve late-night drinks?

SAFE? Some 48 million Americans are afflicted with a form of food borne illness each year. The Food Safety Modernization Act, signed into law in January 2011, now gives the U.S. Food and Drug Administration wider latitude in protecting our food supply, including the ability to order recalls of tainted foods (previously, the agency could only negotiate with businesses to order voluntary recalls).

On the road to food safety

Dear EarthTalk:
What specific issues and protections are covered by the Food Safety Modernization Act recently signed into law?

P. Palmerino,
New York, NY

Existing laws and oversight from the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) have done a decent job of keeping the vast majority of Americans safe from food borne illnesses, but several recent cases of contamination have put the spotlight on what more we can do to protect ourselves from unwittingly consuming harmful bacteria, parasites, viruses and toxins that could be lurking on our dinner plates.

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control (CDC) reports that, of the 48 million Americans afflicted with some sort of food borne illness every year, 128,000 are hospitalized and about 3,000 die. In response to this growing problem, in January 2011 Congress passed and President Obama signed into law the landmark Food Safety Modernization Act (FSMA), a comprehensive $1.4 billion bill that aims to stop outbreaks of food borne illnesses before they begin.

"This law makes everyone responsible and accountable at each step in today's global food supply chain," reports FDA Commissioner Margaret Hamburg. "This law represents a sea change for food safety in America, bringing a new focus on prevention, and I expect that in the coming years it will have a dramatic and positive effect on the safety of the food supply."

FDA inspectors have monitored domestic producers of seafood, juice, meat, eggs and poultry for decades, but the new law expands their powers to evaluate hazards in all kinds of food and to impose stricter standards on imported foods. Processors are now required to proactively take measures to prevent contamination, and must have plans in place for corrective action when something does go wrong. Smaller producers are exempt from some of the more onerous and costly provisions of the new law, but are nevertheless still responsible for maintaining the strict health safety standards set forth in its provisions. The new law also increases the number and frequency of inspections at both high-risk and non-high risk facilities. And the FDA can now order recalls of tainted foods; before FSMA's enactment, the agency could only negotiate with businesses to order voluntary recalls.

Given that some 15 percent of our food supply — including 60 percent of fresh fruits and 80 percent of seafood — is imported, the new law also requires importers to verify the safety of food from their foreign suppliers and authorizes the FDA to block foods from facilities or countries that refuse inspections.

FSMA also provides funds for training, equipment and facilities at food safety agencies across federal, state, local, territorial, tribal and even foreign jurisdictions to ensure that all parties are up to snuff on the ways and means of preventing and containing food borne illnesses.

"Really this is a major victory for every American who will sit down at the dinner table and have more confidence that their food is going to be safe," says Erik Olson of the Pew Health Group, one the most vocal of hundreds of nonprofits in favor of strengthening our nation's food safety net.

SMOKING

accommodate smokers, said Daniel Conway, spokesman for the California Restaurant Association.

It seems, however, that the movement to snuff out smoking in al fresco dining areas is growing. A number of cities surrounding Los Angeles have similar bans, including Beverly Hills and Santa Monica. Starbucks last year barred lighting up in the patio areas of its California coffee shops.

The ESPN Zone restaurant in downtown Los Angeles has had an outdoor smoking ban since it opened two years ago, and customers appreciate it, marketing manager Tim Whiteman said.

Advocates for smokers' rights say outdoor bans particularly burn them up because there's little evidence about the effects of secondhand smoke in fresh air. They say the vast majority of studies were conducted in confined environments.

"Sitting outside in L.A., the cars and smog are going to kill you faster than secondhand smoke," noted Robert Best, western regional director of Citizens Freedom Alliance, a smokers' rights organization.

For anti-smokers, it's a matter of public health. Exposure to secondhand smoke increases incidence of heart disease and lung cancer by 30 percent, said Magliato, a heart surgeon.

"Smokers have a right to smoke, but nonsmokers have a right to fresh air," she said.

When smoking is restricted, studies show, the incidence of smoking-related disease in that area plunges anywhere from 6 to 47 percent, she said.

Smokers, who comprise 14.3 percent of Los Angeles County residents, say the anti-smoking lobby should simply butt out.

Longtime smoker Bonnetta Davis said the ban would affect her choice of restaurants.

"In a closed environment, I can understand. But come on, this is outdoors, in the air," she said. "It's discriminatory."

By William Shakespeare | Directed by Darko Tresnjak | APR 14-24, 2011

You might have seen Shakespeare's tragicomedy, The Merchant of Venice. But, trust us, you've never seen it like this. Not with Academy Award winner, F. Murray Abraham's nuanced unlocking of Shylock's humanity. Not with Director Darko Tresnjak's ingenious staging of a modern, digitized world. And certainly not the West Coast premiere of this highly acclaimed production in the enormously intimate 499-seat Broad Stage in Santa Monica. To see an astonishing Merchant of Venice, call or go online for tickets now.

drawn out of Ecuador for the promise of a new life in America.

While vacationing in Southern California in the early 1960s, Ximena met a young Hungarian man, who she then married in 1962.

Most of the family flew out to attend the wedding, including Fabian, who just graduated from college in Quito.

"I thought it sounded like a great idea to stay," Fabian said. "She gave me the papers to become legal, and I came here. Mother, my two sisters and brother also came in 1963."

It wasn't an easy transition for the 52-year-old Raquel. Her husband had just died while still in Ecuador, and she moved in with her adult children in Hollywood.

By age 62, Raquel became a fully naturalized citizen.

She took a job caring for the elderly for a number of years, all the while taking night classes in an attempt to learn English. The language was her biggest stumbling block, but Raquel is nothing if not tenacious, Fabian said.

She continued taking those classes, later through the Senior Center, until she was well into her 80s, and still attends some English-Spanish courses.

That stubbornness and desire to succeed embodies her never-say-die nature, which pushes her to try and complete English-language word puzzles as well as maintain a near-fully independent life style.

Raquel lives by herself in the same fifth floor apartment she has occupied for the past decade. She tends to a number of potted plants that she keeps on a balcony, and arranges to spend time with others at the Senior Center game nights or on group trips.

Family members stop by at least once a week to help her with grocery shopping, but she loves her freedom, Fabian said.

"Nothing is impossible for her," Fabian said. "She's a person who says, 'Oh don't worry about it,' even though I know she doesn't have the expertise or a good amount of the language. Nevertheless, if she would be younger she would do it. She has great will power."

The Senior Center party is the first of three this month to wish Raquel a very-happy 100 years. On March 19, just days before her actual birthday on the 22nd, nearly all of Raquel's children, 16 grand children and 15 great-grand children will come from various parts of California and Ecuador to see their matriarch on her special day.

It's a big deal for the family members, many of whom haven't seen Raquel since her last trip to Ecuador, said Raquel's granddaughter Catrina Paez, who attended the birthday lunch.

In all, 60 people are expected to attend.

"We're really excited to be able to see a lot of the family all together," Catrina said. "We have a lot coming down from Ecuador, and there are a couple of cousins we've never met."

The chance to involve Raquel in her great grandchildren's lives is monumental, said Jenny Paez, whose two children, Zach and Audrey, bopped and bumped around the lunch table.

"My children get to meet their great grandmother, and she gets to be a part of that," Jenny said.

Raquel's life and faith are an inspiration to all around her, said Msgr. Lloyd Torgerson, of St. Monica's Church.

"To be in a place like that in life, it's wonderful to see for people my age," Torgerson said. "To be healthy and in good cheer, and surrounded by family."

LEGEND

DRY -- each location is graded on an A – F scale based on bacterial pollution levels present in the surf zone
WET -- grades for days of recorded rainfall and the following 3 days
ns -- no sample taken

Heal the Bay's Beach Report Card® is based on weekly water quality monitoring data provided by the City of Los Angeles' Environmental Monitoring Division and the Los Angeles County Department of Health Services. Data is analyzed as soon as it is made available to us by the public agencies. Beaches are graded on an A–F scale based on the risk of ocean users becoming ill. Samples are analyzed for bacteria—enterococcus, total and fecal coliforms—that indicate biological pollution. A fact sheet detailing the exact methodology used in determining grades for each location is available from the office or on our web site. The report is not designed to measure the amount of trash or toxins found at local beaches.

Heal the Bay is a non-profit environmental organization dedicated to making Santa Monica Bay and Southern California coastal waters safe and healthy for people and marine life.

Say yes, Aries

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★★ Don't allow another person's negativity to color your mood. Clear your mind and do what you must. Empowered, you'll succeed at nearly anything you approach. Stay upbeat, knowing what is necessary to make a situation work. Your popularity grows as the day ages. Tonight: The only answer is "yes."

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ Know when to hit "cancel" for the day. Sometimes taking a day off is necessary in order to maximize your potential. Recharge, and you could become a human dynamo when you decide to finally appear. Tonight: Continue the theme.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ Take a hint from Aries. You can only juggle so much in your life. Meetings and friends provide a great deal of upbeat, positive thinking. If you are single, a new relationship could be demanding. A child also might be feeling sad. Stay tuned in here. Tonight: Go where the action is.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ Take a stand, knowing you could succeed. First, free yourself from another person's negativity and lack of perspective. Don't make the mistake of letting this person color the big picture. Tonight: Burning the midnight oil again.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Push comes to shove if dealing with touchy or difficult people. You wonder why you have made the choices you have up till now. Instead of lunging forward, stop. Take an overview of what is happening. Note the differences between yours and another person's needs. Tonight: Cut out and do something totally different.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★★ Deal with others directly, although you could find another person close to impossible to deal with. Tumble on the appropriate path, and this person will become easier to handle. A partnership might no longer be viable. Be honest about that matter. Tonight: Say "yes" to living.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ Deferring draws some upbeat options that hadn't been considered. Listen and weigh your options. Clearly, knowing when enough is enough could be more important than you realize. Observe another person's guidelines. Tonight: The only answer is "yes."

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ You could be goal-driven about a situation. You do need to handle a matter more clearly than in the past. Honor the differences of opinions. This attitude might be the result of a better answer in the long run but an immediate slow-down. Tonight: Exercise the day away.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Listen to news that is forthcoming. You might feel that someone is pushing you, though the appropriate response could be so far out of the ballpark that you cannot believe it. Your creativity and ability surge. Use care with a financial gamble. Tonight: So what if it is Monday?

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★ Though you might judge that you start your morning on the wrong side of the bed, a lot changes quickly. If possible, maintain a low profile in what you take on. You know what is happening within your immediate circle. Tonight: Close to home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Keep communication flowing. You might not like everything that you have to do. The ramifications of one key talk could prove to be problematic if it's not handled in an appropriate manner. Tonight: Hanging out.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ Stay tuned in to what could be a changing money situation. Honor what is happening, but since the situation is subject to constant change, you could be uncomfortable. You might not enjoy what you hear from an associate. Know that you don't need to make a decision immediately. Tonight: Gather your bills.

Happy birthday

This year, open up to new experiences, even if at times you might be fearful. You might often consider your values and the essence of life. For sure, if you don't risk, you will gain nothing. Listen to your inner voice more often. If you are single, let others come forward, because you will find that people are unusually reticent to be vulnerable. If you are attached, don't take a partner's coolness as anything else but him or her feeling fragile. ARIES drives a hard bargain.

GETTING STARTED

There are many strategies to solving Sudoku. One way to begin is to examine each 3x3 grid and figure out which numbers are missing. Then, based on the other numbers in the row and column of each blank cell, find which of the missing numbers will work. Eliminating numbers will eventually lead you to the answer.

ARITHMO™

CrossMath + × − ÷

• Fill the grid with the set of given numbers (1 to 12) to satisfy the Equa demands (7 to 24) in the shaded boxes. The Equa demands represent the sum of the digits that you will insert into the empty squares.

• Each horizontal row has one Equa demand to satisfy; each vertical column also has one demand to satisfy. Each empty square in the grid dictates the math operation (addition +, subtraction -, multiplication X, and division ÷) that must be performed to meet the demands.

• You must follow the given math operations for each square and you must make sure all the numbers satisfy the demands in the shaded boxes when connected in adjacent threes and calculated together from left to right, and top to bottom.

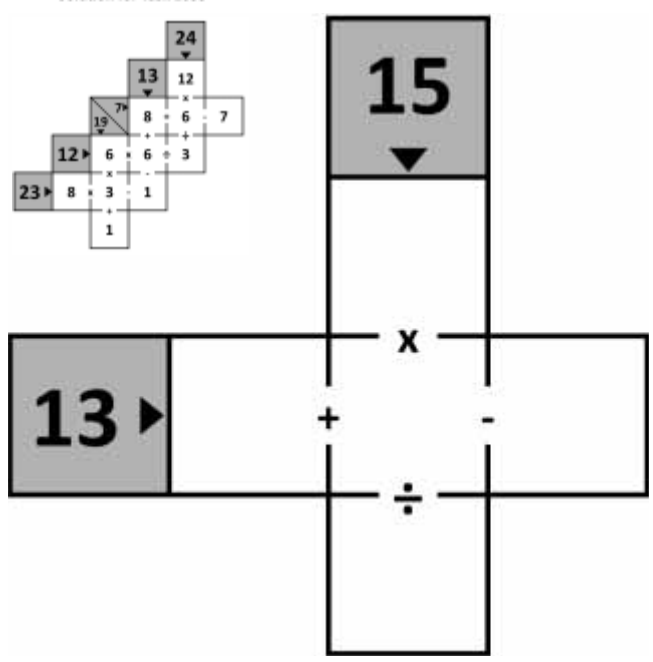

• The numbers you insert into the grid must satisfy the Equa demands both horizontally and vertically.

For more games, go to www.arithmo.com

Fill in the empty fields with the given numbers so when calculated together they satisfy all Equas in the gray boxes:

NEWS OF THE WEIRD
BY CHUCK SHEPARD

■ Tombstone, Ariz., which was the site of the legendary 1881 Gunfight at the O.K. Corral (made into a 1957 movie), is about 70 miles from the Tucson shopping center where a U.S. congresswoman, a federal judge and others were shot in January. A Los Angeles Times dispatch later that month noted that the "Wild West" of 1881 Tombstone had far stricter gun control than present-day Arizona. The historic gunfight occurred when the marshal (Virgil Earp, brother of Wyatt) tried to enforce the town's no-carry law against local thugs. Today, however, with few restrictions and no licenses required, virtually any Arizonan 18 or older can carry a handgun openly, and those 21 or older can carry one concealed.

■ The government of Romania, attempting both to make amends for historical persecution of fortune-telling "witches" and to collect more tax revenue, amended its labor law recently to legalize the profession. However, "queen witch" Bratara Buzea, apparently speaking for many in the soothsaying business, told the Associated Press in February that official recognition might make witches legally responsible for future events that are beyond their control. Already, witches are said to be fighting back against the government with curses -- hurling poisonous mandrake plants into the Danube River and casting a special spell involving cat dung and a dead dog.
