Saint Patrick's Day festivities return to Santa Monica

William O'Sullivan, owner of O'Briens Pub, spent last March 17 freezing 100 pounds of corned beef and mournfully informing loyal customers that Saint Patrick's Day was canceled. Fast forward a year and the City's festivities are back on, albeit in a very different format.

On the heels of indoor dining reopening, Irish pubs in Santa Monica are welcoming lads and lassies onsite for socially distanced celebrations. Green beer, corned beef and cabbage, shepherds pie and other Irish classics will be doled out in St Patty's Day specials at Jameson's, Sonny McLean's, and O'Brien's Irish pubs.

"It's almost fitting that a year after closing we're able to have people inside, so I'm pretty excited to have people come down and have a good time," said Jami Freyer, general manager at Jameson's Pub.

Disney Store adds to mall closures

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

Santa Monica's Disney Store, located in the Santa Monica Place Mall, will close as part of a 60-store contraction announced by the House of Mouse this month.

"While consumer behavior has shifted toward online shopping, the global pandemic has changed what consumers expect from a retailer," said Stephanie Young, president, Consumer Products Games and Publishing. "Over the past few years, we've been focused on meeting consumers where they are already spending their time, such as the expansion of Disney store shop-in-shops around the world. We now plan to create a more flexible, interconnected ecommerce experience that gives consumers easy access to unique, high-quality products across all our franchises."

Young said Disney will work on integrating it's online sales platform (Shopdisney.com) with the Disney Parks apps and social media platforms. The branded store closures do not impact sales through third party locations or the company's smaller "store-in-store" concepts that curate Disney products inside some Target locations.

The store will close on March 23.

Disney is the second high-profile tenant to shutter in the mall this year following the closure of Bloomingdale's. Sonoma Wine Garden and Starbucks also recently announced closures of their Santa Monica Place locations.

Supermodel Tyra Banks took over and rebranded the coffee shop on the Mall's ground floor to SMIZE Cream, an ice cream story featuring limited edition flavors with the supermodels' likeness on the branding. The store is her second venture in the Mall but the first to open. Banks has previously announced her ModelLand concept but the facility has yet to open.

Murder parolee arrested for assaulting wheelchair bound girlfriend

MATTHEW HALL
Daily Press Editor

A Santa Monica man with a previous murder conviction has been charged with domestic violence this week after accusations he assaulted his wheelchair-bound girlfriend.

According to the Santa Monica Police Department, Simco Warmsley Morris Jr., 52, has been charged with assault with a deadly weapon and felony domestic violence following his March 11 arrest.

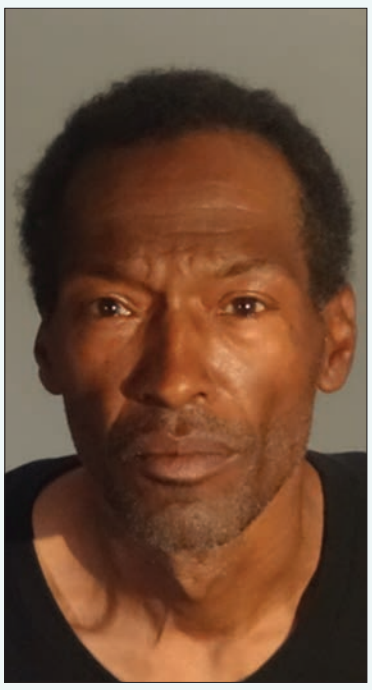

The incident began when officers received a call from a third party who said her friend had sent a text asking for help. The victim said her boyfriend had assaulted her, made threats to kill her and was not allowing her to use the telephone. The victim said she was in a wheelchair and could not leave on her own.

Officers responded to the apartment on the 1400 block of Lincoln at about 7:32 a.m. with the SMPD Crisis Negotiations and SWAT teams. After failing to contact anyone inside the apartment, officers learned Morris was already on parole for murder.

"Fearing that the victim was in danger, officers made entry into the unit and contacted him and the victim without incident. The victim verified what the original caller had related to police, and explained she was assaulted by the suspect throughout the night. The Santa Monica Fire Department treated the female victim then transported her to a local hospital," said a statement provided by Lt. Rudy Flores.

SMPD said they would like to remind residents that if you are in an emergency where you are unable to call 9-1-1 or communicate verbally, you can contact police, fire, and emergency medical dispatchers by sending a text directly to 911. This service is very useful to those who are deaf, hard of hearing or speech impaired and those who need help when an emergency is in progress and the caller is fearful of speaking or cannot speak.

Also, anyone who is experiencing domestic violence or knows someone who is, is encouraged to contact their local law enforcement agency or Santa Monica's Domestic Violence Shelter hotline at 310-264-6644.

Where There Is Difference, Let There Be Understanding

Years ago, a friend recommended I watch a movie called Temple Grandin. After reading the description, I wasn't interested. A story about a woman with autism, even with a Ph.D. and accomplishments that made her worth over $1 million, reminded me too much of what I was trying to hide from the world: I was also on the spectrum. While I didn't watch the movie, I did read Dr. Grandin's book Thinking in Pictures. It was then that I decided, I would never hide who I am again.

As Dr. Grandin puts it, in her book, Thinking in Pictures, those with autism are, "different, not less than." Our brains function differently because we have circuits that aren't as well connected as others. It's a neurological thing, not a psychological thing. Being autistic isn't the exact same thing as having Aspergers; which is what I have. "Aspies" tend to be high-functioning people who have a rough time making friends. We are often very independent thinkers who have no trouble learning how to manage the non-social side of life. We can understand maps, directions, and structures really well, but developing BFFs is not exactly our forte.

Our social relatability or, in my case, lack thereof, is tied to how we think, which is often in "black and white" terms, or a logical understanding of the world. For example, when I was a kid and my mom would feel sad over someone's death, I couldn't connect to why she was sad, I just knew the person was no longer with us. Whether or not they were with God, wasn't of interest to me then. (Says the person who's hoping to earn her Master's of Theological Studies from Harvard, but more on that later.) Of course now, my ability to empathize is more nuanced and I understand the emotional tides of grief. Basically, I went from The Big Bang Theory's Sheldon-Cooper-level-of-clueless to a bit less clueless.

How did I go from a strictly logical thinker, to understanding the nuances of emotions? Trust me, it wasn't easy, and I often got bullied. Despite that, I learned the social graces of our society. Like Grandin, I think "in pictures." My brain remembers things once I have formed a photorealistic image of what I'm seeing and hearing.

I learned my social skills through observation and I also underwent extensive educational programs. When I saw how other kids acted, I took mental-video notes of their social skills and placed it in a file in my brain so that I could later dissect it, understand it, and then apply it.

Speaking of skills, I was recently watching an interview with Grandin where she discusses the necessity of those with autism/aspergers to learn work skills. Such skills provide a work ethic and those who learn them begin to feel pride in what they do. They can see the value of their contributions to society. When I was 13, I began walking dogs (Occasionally, I still walk dogs for pay, and you can find my latest client Scooby on Instagram @scoobycherry.)

For those on the spectrum, Grandin also mentions that work connections made through word of mouth can be vital. In my experience, every single job I ever had, has been achieved this way.

Now after all these years, and hard work, ironically the toughest part of my diagnosis is living with something that no one believes is really me. I've passed for "normal" so long, I don't really know where I belong. Do I belong with the social butterflies? On occasion. Do I belong with the aspies? I want to say I do, but the real truth for all of us is, we belong, period.

I've written this column to show the nuance of the continuum that is autism, and my experiences with it. We are all different, and we all have differing experiences with life. This article is for anyone who knows they're different, and might feel less than. Despite my differences, nothing has stopped me from following my dreams and achieving my goals, one of which is to attend Harvard Divinity School so I can get my Masters of Theological Studies enhancing my B.A. at Loyola Marymount University, in Theological Studies and Peace Studies, which brings me to the title of this article. It was inspired by a line in the Prayer of Saint Francis. I chose the title to reflect not only the truths of my experiences with aspergers, but also my deep theological belief, that only through understanding can we be at peace with our differences. I firmly believe that letting go of what divides us, will be the path to what unites us.

Former GOP Rep. Doug Ose enters California recall election

MICHAEL R. BLOOD
AP Political Writer

Former Republican congressman Doug Ose announced Tuesday he's entering the recall election aimed at ousting California Gov. Gavin Newsom, a day after the Democratic governor began raising money to defend his seat in a likely election this year.

Ose becomes the third established Republican to enter the emerging contest, joining former San Diego Mayor Kevin Faulconer and businessman John Cox, who was defeated by Newsom in a landslide in 2018.

It's possible they could eventually be among dozens of candidates. There were 135 on the ballot in the state's 2003 recall election that removed former Democratic Gov. Gray Davis from office and replaced him with Republican Arnold Schwarzenegger.

The former congressman said he was ready to work across party lines to reopen schools and businesses in a state upended by the coronavirus, while taking on the long-running homelessness crisis.

"Californians are tired of having a governor whose operating themes are hypocrisy, self-interest, half truths and mediocrity," Ose said in a statement announcing his candidacy.

"Newsom sides with unions that close our schools while sending his own kids to private school. He dines in the state's fanciest restaurants while telling everyone else to stay at home. He lives in a gated mansion while allowing the state's homeless crisis to spin out of control. Enough is enough," added Ose, who served in Congress from 1999 to January 2005.

On Monday, Newsom launched his campaign with an attack on the senior recall organizers, depicting them as political extremists loyal to former Republican President Donald Trump. Recall organizers said Newsom was attempting to smear an effort that has gathered over 2 million petition signatures statewide to place the proposal on the ballot this year.

About 1.5 million signatures are needed for the recall to qualify for the ballot, though hundreds of thousands must still be validated by election officials. The deadline for submitting signatures is Wednesday.

In an interview last month, Ose said voters are clamoring for new leadership after Newsom's wobbly COVID-19 vaccine rollout and long-running coronavirus rules that have shuttered businesses and public schools.

Ose, a businessman from the Sacramento region, said he will run in the recall if it qualifies or, if it doesn't, challenge Newsom when he is expected to seek a second term in 2022.

In interviews Tuesday, the governor kept up his criticism of leaders of the recall drive, telling CNN "we are taking it very seriously." Newsom also defended his leadership during the pandemic, saying his decision to issue the nation's first statewide stay-at-home order saved "thousands and thousands" of lives.

He's also been forced to defend his decision to attend a party with friends and lobbyists at an opulent restaurant while telling residents to stay home.

In a Tuesday appearance on "The View" he said attending the dinner was a one-time mistake.

"Of course it was a mistake, and I didn't shy away from that and never made one prior in that respect and since," Newsom said.

Newsom also has lined up support from national Democrats to defeat the campaign against him, including Vermont Sen. Bernie Sanders, New Jersey Sen. Cory Booker and Massachusetts Sen. Elizabeth Warren.

It's probably too early to say how a widening Republican field will affect the likely election.

The recall is divided into two parts: First, voters are asked if Newsom should be removed, yes or no. The second question is a list of replacement candidates, should the governor be ousted.

So far, no prominent Democrat has entered the recall election.

Claremont McKenna College political scientist Jack Pitney said the emergence of several candidates running on pro-Trump agendas would be an advantage for the incumbent in a state where Democratic voters outnumber Republicans by nearly 2-to-1 and Republicans haven't won a statewide race since 2006.

Trump lost California in November by over 5 million votes.

"If it's Newsom versus Trump, then Newsom wins," Pitney said.

90% of California can dine indoors, go to movies, hit a gym

JANIE HAR AND JOCELYN GECKER
Associated Press

A year after the pandemic forced California to shut down, about 90% of the state's nearly 40 million residents can enjoy a restaurant meal indoors, watch a movie in a theater and sweat it out inside a gym after more counties were authorized to open up for business thanks to slowing coronavirus infection rates.

California has been on a reopening roll since a deadly winter surge that saw skyrocketing hospitalizations and soaring positivity rates. San Diego and Sacramento were among the counties moving out of the most restrictive purple tier, public health officials announced Tuesday.

San Mateo County also became the first county in the San Francisco Bay Area allowing businesses there to open even more, including indoor bowling alleys and outdoor bars that do not serve meals. Businesses can reopen Wednesday, one year to the day after San Francisco Bay Area health officers implemented a regional stay at home order, the first in the U.S.

Mike Leong, president of Bel Mateo Bowl, said he's beyond excited to welcome back children and their families, even at 25% capacity. The venue was last open for 17 days in November and he can't wait for the activity and camaraderie to return.

"There's a reason why they put people in solitary confinement, and we kind of found out what that reason is," he said, adding that people need to socialize. "We're not going to make a lot of money, but it's going to hopefully pay the rent."

Los Angeles and a dozen other counties were allowed to reopen Sunday, moving to the lower-risk red tier of a four-tier, color-coded system announced by Gov. Gavin Newsom in August. The system dictates which activities can open based on factors such as a county's case rates per population and test positivity.

In total, 42 counties of 58 are in the "substantial" red risk level. The 11 counties still in the most restricted tier are largely in the central valley, including Fresno and Kern.

Newsom, a Democrat likely to face a recall vote this year, has been under intense political pressure to get California's 6.2 million students back in classrooms. He told reporters Tuesday that 9,000 of the state's 11,000 public schools "have committed to reopening or have already opened," which he attributed to the state's $6.6 billion plan to urge more school districts to reopen classrooms.

He didn't say how many schools are actually open or how much instruction they are providing. Critics say that the state has failed to define what "open" means, giving schools the ability to bring back students for one day a week and still tap the state funding.

"This is dynamic it's moving very, very quickly," Newsom said at a school in Alameda County.

He said that 400,000 teachers and school staff had been vaccinated as of Tuesday, helping to fuel the reopening momentum across the state. Lack of vaccine remains a problem, though, with demand far outstripping supply.

In San Diego County, a vaccination super site at Petco Park will close after Saturday with in-person fans returning for Major League Baseball games starting April 1, UC San Diego Health said in a statement. The percentage of people allowed for sporting and other live events depends on each county's tier designation.

San Mateo County moving into the orange tier means it can open a raft of businesses with higher capacity than before. Churches, restaurants, museums and zoos can now operate at 50% capacity.

San Francisco Mayor London Breed, who received a shot of the Johnson & Johnson vaccine Tuesday, said she expects the city to move into the orange tier next week.

Associated Press journalist Terence Chea contributed to this report from San Francisco.

Google gets into sleep surveillance with new Nest Hub screen

MICHAEL LIEDTKE
AP Technology Writer

Google's next internet-connected home device will test whether consumers trust the company enough to let it snoop on their sleep.

New sleep-sensing technology will be a key feature on Google's latest version of its Nest Hub, a 7-inch smart screen unveiled Tuesday. Like the previous generation, the $100 Nest Hub can display pictures and video in addition to fielding questions and handling household tasks through Google's voice-activated assistant. It also doesn't feature a camera.

But the latest Nest Hub's new trick may help differentiate it from similar devices, such as Amazon's Echo Show, while also providing a springboard for Google to get more involved in helping people manage their health.

If you allow it, the device will also monitor your sleeping patterns from your bedside, negating the need to wear a fitness device or any other potentially bothersome gadget in bed. The feature, which Google intends to offer for free through at least this year, relies on a new chip Google calls Soli, which uses radar to detect motion, including the depth of a person's breathing.

The Nest Hub is supposed to generate weekly sleep reports with easy-to-understand breakdowns on the length and quality of sleep, how frequently the user gets up at night and snoring and coughing frequency, along with tips developed in consultation with the American Academy of Sleep Medicine.

Google says it honed the technology by studying 15,000 sleeping people over a combined 110,000 nights.

That kind of help may sound appealing to the millions of people who have trouble sleeping. But the feature may also raise privacy concerns — especially given Google's long history of online surveillance to collect personal details such as interests, habits and whereabouts to help sell the digital ads that generate most of its revenue.

It also underscores Google's obvious intent to extend its tentacles into new areas of people's lives in its relentless quest to make more money, said Jeff Chester, executive director of the Center for Digital Democracy, a consumer and privacy rights group.

"Google's goal is to monetize every cell of your body," Chester said.

The sleep sensing feature will remain free through the rest of this year, but Google could eventually sell it as a subscription service, acknowledged Ashton Udall, Google Nest's senior product manager.

The company may also eventually tweak the feature to work with its FitBit line of fitness devices, which Google took over in January. That $2.1 billion purchase has raised concerns that Google could use those gadgets to peer more deeply into people's personal health.

Google is emphasizing the privacy protections built into the sleep sensing feature. For starters, users will have to turn it on themselves. The Nest Hub will also have controls that Google says will make it clear when sleep tracking is on and to make it easy to delete data from the device.

All audio will be kept on the device, meaning it won't be sent to Google's data centers, although other sleep information will be provided to generate the analysis and reports. None of the information collected through the sleep sensing feature will be used to sell ads, Udall said.

But Chester is skeptical about that pledge. Knowing an individual's sleeping patterns, for instance, could help Google know when a person is feeling anxious or sick, Chester said, and those insights could influence which ads to show.

Newsom defends Feinstein, says he's not expecting retirement

KATHLEEN RONAYNE
Associated Press

California Gov. Gavin Newsom said Tuesday he expects and hopes Sen. Dianne Feinstein will serve her full term after suggesting the day before he's been thinking about her replacement.

"I have zero expectations the senator will be going anywhere," he said.

Newsom was asked Monday on MSNBC's "The ReidOut" if he would commit to replacing Feinstein with a Black woman if she leaves the Senate before her term ends in January 2025. When former California Sen. Kamala Harris became vice president, the chamber was left with no Black women; Newsom appointed Sen. Alex Padilla to fill the role, making him the state's first Latino U.S. senator.

"We have multiple names in mind and the answer is yes," he said.

His comments raised eyebrows in California political circles, as Feinstein has faced questions in recent months over her age and memory, as well as criticism from within her own party. At 87, she is the chamber's oldest member. She won reelection in 2018 against a fellow Democrat who ran as a more progressive challenger.

Feinstein said Tuesday she has no plans to resign.

"Please, we're very good friends. I don't think he meant it the way some people thought," she told reporters in the Capitol.

Newsom followed up Tuesday with extended and effusive praise for Feinstein, calling her a friend and mentor and praising her work in Washington. Feinstein and Newsom hail from San Francisco, a political power center where each served as mayor, though decades apart.

"I'm the last person to say anything except laudatory things about Senator Feinstein," he said during an event in Alameda.

He said there's been "too much punditry"

SAINT PATRICK'S

a meal and drink on their spacious outdoor patios. They are also open for indoor seating at 25 percent capacity.

Although there is much excitement swirling around the establishments there is also an air of trepidation as the pubs are responsible for making sure people celebrate in line with County Covid-19 protocols.

"I've talked to all the Irish pub owners and we're all very apprehensive," said O'Sullivan. "We might get 1000 people showing up for St. Patrick's day and we can only accommodate 78, so that's 932 people we are not pleasing."

While each establishment maintains social distancing, mandatory PPE, temperature checks, and contact tracing, they hope customers will not throw caution to the wind in the midst of their Irish revelry. Saint Patrick's Day traditionally attracts crowds that stand and intermingle, two actions that are explicitly forbidden this year.

"It's going to have its challenges to have opened up inside two days before Saint Patrick's Day, because people don't always understand the rules, but we're going to do our absolute best to keep our customers and staff safe," said Freyer.

O'Sullivan also fears customers are not aware of the current dining protocols and said he's had several people inquiring about reserving tables for groups as large as 12. Despite his worries O'Sullivan insisted that this is not his "first time at the rodeo" and said he and his staff will have no reservations enforcing the rules.

Per County protocols all dining is restricted to six people per table with each table spaced eight feet apart. Indoor dining is reserved to people from the same household, while outdoor dining can host people from up to three different households.

County regulations also prohibit the playing of TVs at restaurants, much to the ire and confusion of some business owners.

"It really makes no sense to us because they're saying people will stay longer because of TVs," said O'Sullivan. "But if you're turning more tables, then you're bringing in more people, which increases the odds of bringing in an infected person."

Despite the challenges and quirks of current regulations, local pubs will not be letting Covid-19 put a damper on this year's holiday.

"It's very exciting because we didn't get to be open last year for Patty's Day," said Rachel Silverman, bar manager at Sonny McLean's. "We've got t-shirts, green beer, and Irish music playing all day long. It's going to be a great atmosphere for Patty's Day."

While owners anticipate limited seating will fill up quickly, they encourage residents to order food and drinks to-go and enjoy St. Patrick's Day from the comfort of their homes.

Bills would take badges from bad officers

DON THOMPSON
Associated Press

California would start licensing law enforcement officers, create a way to end their careers for misbehavior including racial bias, and make it easier to sue them for monetary damages under an expanded version of legislation that died at the end of last year's legislative session, supporters said Tuesday.

California is one of just four states without a way to decertify police officers, alongside Hawaii, New Jersey and Rhode Island.

"These are officers who have abused their authority and violated the public trust, and we all agree they must be held accountable," said state Sen. Steven Bradford, who is carrying the most sweeping of several decertification proposals. "We (in California) claim to be a leader in all things — we shouldn't be an outlier when it comes to police reform."

The bill by Bradford, who heads the Senate Public Safety Committee, would require the state's Commission on Peace Officer Standards and Training to issue each officer a proof of eligibility or basic certificate. Currently, the state licenses more than 200 professions and trades including doctors, lawyers, and contractors, but not law enforcement officers.

Bradford's bill would give the commission the power to investigate officers and revoke their eligibility for wrongs including using excessive force, sexual assault, making a false arrest or report, or participating in a law enforcement gang. Some of those investigations could be retroactive under his revised proposal.

Police could also lose their badges for "acts demonstrating bias" based on race, religion, sexual orientation or mental disability, among other criteria.

Bradford said in his bill that three of every four unarmed persons killed by police were people of color.

"Decertifying police officers (who abuse their power) ... is key to building trust between the police and the communities and changing the culture of policing in this state," said Cephus Johnson, a criminal justice reform advocate widely known as Uncle Bobby X whose nephew, Oscar Grant, was killed by transit police in the San Francisco Bay Area in 2009.

Bradford's measure is co-authored by Sen. Toni Atkins, his fellow Democrat who heads the California Senate, signaling her support.

Assembly Speaker Anthony Rendon previously said he also backs the concept, but there are three competing bills awaiting action in his chamber.

Two bills, one by Assemblyman Jim Cooper, himself a former sheriff's captain, and the other by fellow Democratic Assemblyman Rudy Salas, both have a much stronger law enforcement representation on the statewide panel considering decertification than would Bradford's bill. Neither includes the licensing or lawsuit provisions in Bradford's bill.

The third bill, by Republican Assemblyman Jordan Cunningham, would require local law enforcement agencies to complete misconduct investigations even if the officer resigns. The practice of ending investigation after an officer resigns has allowed questionable officers to simply move to another department.

A related bill by Assemblyman Ash Kalra would require law enforcement agencies to disqualify officers who have been members of a hate group or participated in hate group activities or public expressions of hate, though critics said the bill's definition is overly broad.

The latest efforts come after Bradford's previous attempt died without a vote in August despite national outrage over the death of George Floyd in the custody of Minneapolis police and support from entertainers including Rihanna, Mariah Carey, Robert De Niro and Kim Kardashian West.

Law enforcement unions and associations said again Tuesday that they support having a way to permanently weed out bad officers. But they objected last year to Bradford's proposed makeup of a nine-member disciplinary board they said would have been biased against police.

Bradford's revised bill includes two current or former officers on the board, one fewer than last year, a change he said was needed because the panel "should be a reflection of the community."

California Police Chiefs Association president Eric Nunez and unions representing officers in Los Angeles, San Francisco and San Jose all said the debate comes down to whether officers deserve what Nunez called a "fair and judicious process."

"(U)nfortunately Senator Bradford is intent on making a political point instead of creating good policy," the unions said in a joint statement.

Brian Marvel, president of the rank-and-file Peace Officers Research Association of California, said Bradford's bill "would potentially penalize even the most respectful officers for placing themselves in harm's way to keep our families and communities safe."

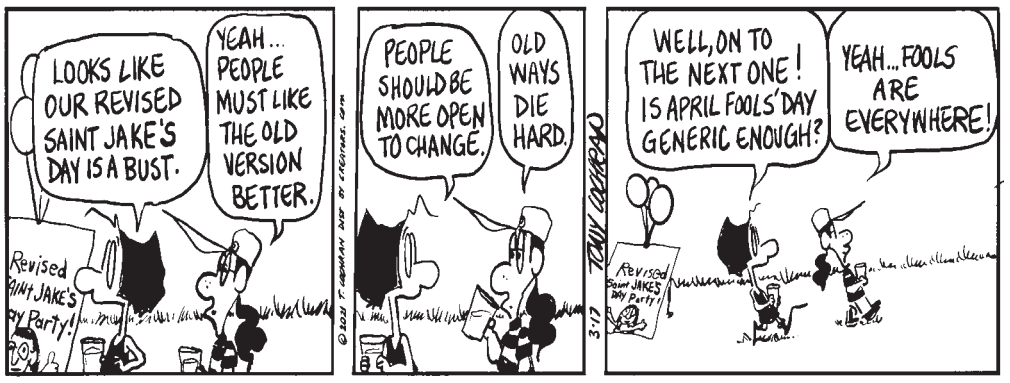

It would make it easier to sue police and their employers for depriving plaintiffs of their constitutional rights, but would strengthen the requirement that governments pay for civil penalties against their employees.

The bill says current limited immunity from lawsuits "too often lead to officers escaping accountability in civil courts, even when they have broken the law or violated the rights of members of the public ... especially (with) the use of excessive force."

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (MARCH 17)

You may not believe you have mystical power, but that won't stop unexplained and wondrous events from happening to you. A secret wish will be answered. You'll find a sort of treasure when you follow through on an uncanny feeling for where to "dig." And you'll be credited for making all the difference for someone. Libra and Taurus adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 30, 22, 14, 4 and 17.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). There's no ideal condition for bringing out the best in a human. What works for one person is useless for another. Whatever condition makes you want to be where you are -- that's the right one for you today.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). Whatever you do, get warmed up for it. When you're warm, you're supported internally. You can trust yourself. Just as cold muscles are prone to injury, cold states of being are prone to mistakes.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You're that risk-taker who is beloved because you're not afraid to be yourself. If they laugh, even better. You welcome levity whether you come by it accidentally or on purpose. All will be raised by you.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Maybe you're not sure what you have to say, but you can be sure that you have something to say. Think and write about it. Talk it over. Others will benefit from hearing your unique take.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). It makes you feel cool when you give recommendations that others turn out to love or spread awareness about a piece of culture that opens minds and brightens worlds. Guess what? You ARE cool. Share your good taste today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). You never know how loved ones are going to respond to your work. They might be jealous that the work got your attention and not them. Or they might be over the moon. Go forward, seeking neither permission nor blessing.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). Even the hard-boiled pragmatist you know will soften and bend to your whimsical charms because, bottom line, you're fun. Life is more interesting when you're giving that carefree part of yourself.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). It doesn't matter that some come by certain proficiencies easier than others. For the current task, what's required is a willingness to break down the learning to the right-sized chunk and then practice until you know it well.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). Fight your two biggest enemies: fear and distraction. You might also consider that distraction is fear in disguise. It's an excuse that fear uses to keep you from dedicating yourself to what you really want.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). When the environment is habit-forming, the person doesn't have to be. Take pressure off yourself by being in the location that will do the heavy lifting for you because it's structured and organized around a particular task.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). As humans, we have a limited understanding of our own motives. What you do know is that, at the very least, you're trying to create unity, not discord. With this as your lodestar and the willingness to check yourself, move forward.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). Solid organization helps you deal with the unexpected. And more importantly, it allows you to be confident and relaxed whether things are going to plan or not.

SMFD Donates equipment to Sister City

On March 15, the Santa Monica Fire Department officially donated two decommissioned fire engines, one command vehicle, and other equipment and gear that has reached its lifecycle based on National Fire Protection Association standards. SMFD Training Division Chief James Altman shares more about the donation and the equipment's voyage to Mazatlán, Mexico, a City of Santa Monica Sister City in this Q&A.

HOW DID THE DONATION COME ABOUT?

The City of Santa Monica and the City of Mazatlán, Mexico have been sister cities for quite some time, in fact the street that runs between City Hall and the Public Safety Facility was named after Mazatlán. Avenida Mazatlán runs North and South from Civic Center Dr. to Fujinomiya Douri, which is another of our Sister Cities.

DONATION: Some fire equipment will be donated.

Because of this, we have always thought about our Sister Cities when we have donations such as this. In 2019, our department placed into service, several new Fire Engines, placing those front-line engines into reserve status. This usually means that the older reserve apparatus gets moved to auction. Because of the age of the reserve apparatus that would be otherwise sent to auction, there was little monetary value. In addition, we knew Mazatlán was opening a new fire station in a neighborhood that needed fire protection services. These new engines would fit just perfect, so we started the conversation with the Mazatlán Fire leadership team. They made several trips out to Santa Monica, and we began the process to have our Council approve the donation and move forward with the details.

Unfortunately, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, plans were halted for over a year because of the many travel restrictions that were in place in both countries. We are proud, however, to know that our brothers and sisters in Mazatlán, Mexico, will now receive their much-needed fire engines as well as various firefighting tools and equipment along with several firefighting ensembles, so that they can serve their residents and visitors well.

TELL US ABOUT HOW MAZATLAN WILL USE THE EQUIPMENT.

Due to the timing and opening of a new fire station, they will place a fire engine into service in an area that never had a fire station. In addition to the new fire station receiving a fire engine, the other fire engine and command vehicle will be used to replace older aging fire apparatus.

IS IT COMMON FOR FIRE DEPARTMENTS TO DONATE DECOMMISSIONED EQUIPMENT?

It is common to donate used equipment and fire apparatus, but it has become much stricter due to firm regulations and guidelines. Most fire equipment, as well as fire apparatus have service lives. This regulation is in service to protect firefighter safety. Although other countries try and mimic our regulations here in the United States, sometimes it is tough for them to keep up financially, and these types of donations help them continue to serve their communities.

IF THE EQUIPMENT STILL RUNS, WHY NOT KEEP USING IT?

As stated, the National Fire Protection Association has certain guidelines to protect firefighters. In these guidelines, certain equipment, including fire apparatus have service lives. Because this equipment was well beyond its service life, we either send it to auction, where at times fire academies will buy used apparatus, fire apparatus collectors will make the purchase, as well, as the movie industry.

The bottom line is we place the apparatus out-of-service due to lack of reliability and more so to preserve community and firefighter safety.

around Feinstein's future then joked he should have followed the political rule of never answering a hypothetical question.

Newsom, a first-term Democrat, is likely to face a recall election and needs to maintain his political relationships as he stares down a campaign a year before his regularly scheduled election.

Some of Feinstein's allies and donors were not happy with his remarks, said Hope Warschaw, a longtime Feinstein ally and donor from Santa Monica. She was "pretty outraged" by the comment and the ongoing discussion about whether Feinstein will retire early.

Warschaw said she did not speak to Newsom but expects he heard from upset Feinstein supporters.

"That's just something you don't say," she said. "He made a mistake."
